The Leicester Association held a very successful annual meeting on Tuesday evening last week. Mr. T. H. Lloyd took the chair, while Archdeacon Sinclair, the principal speaker, said the Y.M.C.A. had his deep and hearty sympathy because of its endeavour to secure wisdom, strength, sobriety, honesty, and high character to all the young men of our rising generation.

Mr. G. H. Lord, of Buckhurst Hill, delivered three most interesting lectures at Kings Lynn, October 24, 25, and 26, on his recent tour through Egypt and the Holy Land, illustrated by twelve living characters in Eastern costumes. The lectures were delivered under the auspices of the King's Lynn Y.M.C.A. and Pleasant Sunday Afternoon Society.

Sunderland issues a very full prospectus for the winter, including classes on shipbuilding, steam, building construction, and art subjects. The Camera Club undertakes one of the Tuesday evening entertainments. The report presented at the annual meeting showed a year of unparalleled activity, a total increase of membership from 613 to 675, a balance in hand of £11, with £160 set aside as the nucleus of a building fund.

The united Associations of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island have been doing special work in the military and militia camps, and that with very cheering results. The following is an instance of the interest: at the close of one meeting, after many had taken part from colonel down to private, just as we were about to close, two lieutenants rose one after the other and electrified all present by their stirring testimonies, giving glory to God for salvation through Jesus Christ, bearing witness to the beauty and value of the Christian life, and appealing to their comrades to test this blessed religion for themselves.

An undertaking has for some months past claimed the attention of the committee of the Y.M.C.A. in Birmingham, namely, the large pleasant Sunday afternoon for men, which had recently been opened at the Midland Institute. For a long time past the committee had felt the need of making efforts to reach a larger number of men on Sunday afternooms than had hitherto been the case. They had keenly realised the fact that the percentage of men of all classes who attended places of worship was lamentably small, and they were of opinion that a society like the Young Men's Christian Association, which included members of all the Evangelical churches, was eminently fitted to undertake work of that kind. The meeting was started a fortnight ago, and 1,100 men were present. Last Sunday there were over 1000 there, and nearly 760 had filled up their enrolment forms, and had become members

Y.W.C.A.

Miss May McGranahan has entered upon her duties as secretary of the Y.W.C.A. in Rockford, Ill.

Miss Shelbourne has lately held good meetings at the Colchester Y.W.C.A., giving addresses on work in North Africa.

At the recent meeting of the Campbeltown Branch, Mrs. McKinnon presided, and it was shown that a good work is going on. The members interest themselves on behalf of the fishing crews in the harbour.

The Ipswich branch of the Y.W.C.A., which has between 300 and 400 members, is about to move its headquarters to more commodious premises, where there is more boarding accommodation and an extensive garden. The hall, which was opened in 1890, will still be used for large meetings.

The Cork Y.W.C.A. is doing a good work, and growing in favour. The annual public meeting was held in the assembly rooms on the 18th ult. After tea the chair was taken by Canon Daunt. The speakers were—Miss Marrable, of Dublin; Mrs. Lamb, of London; Rev. S. T. Boyd, B.A.; Rev. T. B. Robertson, M.A.; and Mr. Bailey.

Scottish Notes.

The Pleasant Sunday Afternoon movement has been introduced into Aberdeen with every indication of success.

Sunday meetings for the students attending Aberdeen University will be held during the present sessions.

A conference on Non-Church Going was held at the recent meeting of the F.C. Synod in Dundee. The speakers emphasised the need of more enthusiasm in the church, both in pulpit and in pew.

Mrs. Baeyertz has concluded a remarkable mission in Dundee, where the Lord has abundantly blessed his own work. A very earnest and unanimous invitation has been given to her to revisit that city. While in Edinburgh for a few days, on her way to London, Mrs. Baeyertz was invited to address meetings in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Free Assembly Hall, and in Carrubbers' Close Mission. There was a profound impression in all these meetings. The word was with power, and many souls were blessed. A very earnest wish has been expressed that Mrs. Baeyertz may be led to return to Scotland, and she purposes visiting Edinburgh in April next.

A Bible Reading Outline.

THE PERFECT CURE.

Matt. xiv. 35, 36.

1. The Physician. "Jesus, Son of God."
2. The Assistants. "Men who had knowledge of Him."
3. The Patients. "All that were diseased."
4. The Prescription. "Touch"—contact with the Healer.
5. The Cure, "Perfectly whole."

THE SCRIPTURES FOR UGANDA.—The translation of the New Testament in the Ganda or Luganda, the language of the Uganda Territory, has just been finished, and the complete book will soon be issued by the British and Foreign Bible Society. The Gospel of St. Matthew was printed in 1888. In 1891 an edition of St. John was published; the Acts, some of the Epistles and the Revelation were subsequently added. Now the remaining portions have left the hands of the translator. The completion of this important work is a matter for hearty congratulation.

Evangelistic Notes.

Pall Mall Mission Hall.—A nine days' special mission closed in this hall, Lisle-street, Leicester-square, last Monday evening. Some interest has been manifested, and real work done.

Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road.—Mr. Benson, the evangelist, conducted 150 open air meetings during the past summer attended by over 17,000 persons. Several were lead to decision for Christ, and many temperance pledges were taken.

Rev. L. W. Munhall held evangelistic meetings during eight days in the Methodist Church, Seymour, Conn. The various churches have since united in services under the charge of Rev. E. P. Hammond. The work is going on with increasing power and blessing.

Mr. William Nobbs has lately been evangelising in villages round Hereford; also at Stroud, Tetbury, and Brinscombe. He is now labouring at Pershore and Ashton-under-Hill, where there has been much preparatory prayer, and now sowers and reapers are rejoicing together.

An Important Mission has been conducted for three weeks past by Mr. Lazenby, of the Evangelization Society, in connection with the Cage-lane Mission, Plumstead. It has proved to be a time of much blessing to many in this locality, where the population is becoming very dense.

The Albany Institute.—Two fruitful weeks have just closed in this Camberwell mission. Mr. Mead conducted a series of special services, followed by a four days' mission to children, held by Mr. Collier. Both have been much blessed amongst young and old, and some clear testimonies have been borne to a saving change.

Emgwali, Dohne, Cape Colony.—We have been much cheered here lately at seeing so many coming boldly forward to profess their faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. About twenty in this district have professed conversion to God since September 1. Many of these are elderly people, for whom we have been praying for years. A. Welsh.

Basingstoke.—A three weeks' mission has just been held in the Town Hall by Mr. Rowland Sturt, of the Evangelisation Society, and God has given much blessing. The personal workers have found that the truth has touched many hearts, and the feeling of all is that "The Lord hath done great things, whereof we are glad."

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes, M.A., has just held an evangelistic mission in Doddridge Chapel, Northampton, in connection with the mission services of the Free Churches. The attendance was excellent, and the searching Gospel appeals were followed with blessed results, as many repaired after the services to the vestry for further instruction in the Christian life, and declared their faith in the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour.

Messrs. Peatt and Crozier, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, concluded a very successful six weeks' mission in the neighbourhood of the Lagan Village, Belfast, with great blessing. At the concluding meeting Mr. Peatt delivered a very earnest discourse to Christians. So touching were his appeals that many were moved to tears. It is hoped that the good work may be carried on by the Christian workers of the district.

Mr. Henry Thorne has concluded a nine days' mission at Common Close Church, Warminster. The meetings throughout were exceedingly well attended, and there is every reason to believe that a work has been done which will stand the test of time. Many young people have been led to come out "on the Lord's side," and good impressions have been made upon the minds of all. Mr. Thorne's afternoon Bible readings have been very helpful and inspiring.

Gospel Wagons are multiplying and seem to be doing useful work in various cities in the United States. There are no less than twenty in different parts of the country. One has halted with good effect in several New England cities the past season. In Lowell for four weeks it drew large crowds, and additions to the churches are traceable to its influence. The results in Manchester, N.H., were also gratifying. Almost uniformly the large crowds, in which non-church-goers greatly predominate, pay respectful attention to the preaching and singing.

Hoppers in Salehurst, Sussex.—The hop-picking season has come to a close in this district. A "tent mission" has been held, conducted by one of the Church Army lay readers (Mr. E. F. Hankins). Meetings were held four nights a week. Every Saturday lantern lectures and services of song and coffee suppers were much appreciated; whilst on one Sunday "The Life of our Lord" was illustrated by lantern pictures, the officer giving a running comment. The services were productive of much good, and especially the daily visit of the officer in the various hop gardens, giving away a great quantity of literature, tracts, and invitations to the meetings.

Personalia.

Rev. A. B. Grosart, D.D., of St. George's, Blackburn, has been compelled by ill-health to place his resignation in the hands of the session.

Mr. G. Minor has closed a Gospel Temperance mission at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, and begins on Sunday at the Royal Assembly Hall, Reading.

Dr. Murray Cairns, of Liverpool, has been appointed to Formosa, to take up the medical mission work so long associated with the late Dr. Russell.

Rev. John Nunn, who has laboured so faithfully and well at Haverstock-hill for forty-two years, feels it needful to retire from active work at the end of this year.

Rev. W. H. Webb Peploe, we are very glad to learn, is returning to London from Switzerland early this month, greatly restored in health, and hopes to be able to resume his work.

Mr. J. M. Pamment, formerly of London, has undertaken pastoral and missionary work on the Puyallup, Indian Reservation, near Tacoma, on the Puget Sound, British Columbia.

Mr. William Forbes has been giving addresses at Croydon, Metropolitan Tabernacle, Marylebone, Westminster, and Holloway. On Sunday last he began a mission at Hayling Island, Hants.

Rev. W. G. Lawes, F.R.G.S., is about to visit New Zealand in the interests of the London Missionary Society, visiting in turn Oamaru, Christchurch, Wellington, Napier, Dunedin, Nelson, and Auckland.

Rev. F. E. Clark, D.D., has left Sydney, where his welcome was of the warmest, for Melbourne and New Zealand. On October 19 he was to set sail for China and Japan, and after a tour in India and the East, hopes to reach England in June, 1893.

Dr. R. W. McAll.—The Paris correspondent of Evangelical Christendom writes: "We hear that the venerated Dr. McAll is withdrawing to England, leaving in good hands the work he and Mrs. McAll have carried on so nobly and unostentatiously for twenty-two years.

Dr. Pentecost will deliver a series of special addresses each Friday in November, 8.15 p.m., at the Y.M.C.A., 172, Queen's-road, W. Subjects; The Reasonableness of Christianity, The Sure Word of Prophecy, Scientific Grounds of Unbelief, Historical Evidences of Christianity.

Rev. John Pearse Clark has accepted the pastorate of Gunnersbury Baptist Church. During the last seven months increasing congregations have widened the power and spirituality of Mr. Clark's teaching, and his decision to remain has been received with heartfelt gratitude and satisfaction.

Rev. Oscar Michelsen, the missionary evangelist of the once cannibal island of Tongoa, New Hebrides, has already arranged to tell his deeply-interesting story in several towns of England. The address given in our recent sketch no longer holds good. Communications should be addressed to him at 57, Petherton-road, Mildmay Park, N.

The Spezia Mission.

In a communication with respect to the work of this Italian mission, Mr. H. H. Pullen says:—"The thought which most powerfully and most painfully impresses one who sees on the spot what is being done by the Spezia Mission in Italy, is that of the crying need for advance and expansion. Italy is a land of brilliant promise. The days of her decadence are passing and her former greatness is reviving. Shall she take her place among the nations as a land of superstition and atheism, or as a land where the light of God's truth shines out clearly? It is for those who can pray and those who have means to answer; and no better answer could be given than to render to this great work, with its widely-spreading agencies, and its clear evidences of the blessing of God, the aid of earnest believing prayer and hearty support."

Japan.

Miss M. McLean, of the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, S.W., writes to us, conveying the thanks of Dr. Saiki, of Kioto, Japan, for books and periodicals, etc., sent to him. They were distributed among English-speaking native pastors, and at the Theological Seminary, where there are eighty English-speaking pupils. Further gifts of good literature would be welcomed, and should be sent to Miss McLean as above, carriage paid.

Dr. Saiki proposes to establish in Kioto a maternity hospital, for which there is a pressing need. As the Christian friends who support his project are not blessed with great wealth, he would be very thankful for the practical co-operation of British Christians.

Dr. Saiki, says Miss McLean, lately resigned a position in the Imperial Navy to devote himself entirely to good work among his Japanese countrymen and women.

Obituary.

REV. DR. SAUNDERS, OF SWANSEA.

This beloved and honoured servant of Christ has just passed to his rest after an illness lasting some months. He fell asleep on the 19th Oct. at Penarth, Cardiff. He was ordained to his first charge in 1855 going to Liverpool in 1862, where he did a most succesful work in Princess-road. After a brief term of service at Abercairn, he settled in 1873 at Trinity Calvinistic Methodist Church, Swansea, remaining there until his death. By many he was regarded as one of the great preachers of Wales. We hope shortly to give a portrait and sketch of Dr. Saunders

MR. DONNELLY PINK.

Friends of Y.M.C.A. work will learn with much sorrow of the death, last week at Devonport, of Mr. Donnelly Pink. For a few months Mr. Pink conducted the evangelistic work at Exeter Hall, where his ministrations were warmly appreciated, then, a vacancy occurring at Devonport, he was appointed only four or five weeks ago, to the secretaryship of the Association in succession to Mr. Harris, who has gone out to South Africa, as a missionary. But his work, acceptable as it proved to be, was of the shortest duration. He was seized with hemorrhage of the lungs, and to this illness succumbed, after the brightest possible testimony to the blessedness and reality of salvation by Christ Jesus. Mr. Pink had undergone a ministerial course, and was only twenty-seven years of age.

DR. ROSSVALLY, LEEDS.

The death of Mr. Max Louis Rossvally, M.D., at the age of 64, has closed the career of an enthusiastic convert from Judaism to Christianity. The story of his conversion is told in one of Horner's penny stories, entitled "Charlie Coulson, the Drummer Boy." It was through Charlie Coulson's Christian fortitude, after a wound sustained in the battle of Gettysburg during the American war, at which time Dr. Rossvally was a surgeon-major in the United States service, that his thoughts were first directed towards the true Messiah. For ten years after that period he fought against Christian convictions, but was ultimately converted. He was at once disinherited by his friends, his mother writing to him:—"You are no longer my son; we have buried you in effigy; we mourn you as one dead. And now may the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, strike you blind, deaf, and dumb, and damn your soul for ever."

From that time until his death he worked hard in his Master's cause. He carried on evangelistic work with much success before leaving America. After his arrival in England Dr. Rossvally wrote the story of the drummer-boy, of which no fewer than 2,000,000 copies in seventeen different languages have already been circulated, three-fourths of which were gratuitously distributed by himself. Aided by Mr. Cory, J.P., of Cardiff, Dr. Rossvally opened a free medical mission in Leeds early last year, selecting the Jewish quarter of the town for its location. To sufferers, both Jew and Gentile, the mission was always free, and thousands have profited through the large-hearted philanthropy of the deceased gentleman. He attended Roscoe-place Wesleyan Chapel, and, often under much physical pain, his cheering words and ready purse helped forward the work of that and other places of worship.

Medical Mission Work in Madagascar.

It is now nearly eight months since you inserted a notice of the burning of the new mission hospital in the heathen province of Antsihanaka, which has been in course of erection for the past fifteen months. Since the fire the building has been almost entirely re-roofed, thanks to the efforts of our native helpers, evangelists, teachers, and others, who have again come to our aid. The lively interest in this building is evidenced by their having made over half of the bricks needed for the building in the first instance; and, after that, almost completing the roof that was destroyed by fire. The incendiary, I may as well state, has been convicted by the Malagasy Government authorities, and sentenced to ten years in chains, the real instigators having been let free.

The £150 which the London Missionary Society gave towards the work has been used up, and the building is nearing completion. In fact, the consulting room, dispensary, and private ward have been in use for some months. The two main wards, for eight beds each, are still somewhat behind, and have no flooring down as yet. This of itself will take nearly £20, for it must be brought thirty-five miles distance on men's shoulders. Inclusive of this and other extra expenses, we find that to finish and furnish we shall need £100 more, i.e., making the total cost £350. James G. Mackay.

Letters to the Editor.

"THE FEVER OF DOING."

Dear Sir,—I have read with much interest the article entitled "The Fever of Doing," which appeared in a recent issue. I should, however, like to ask what your correspondent would consider to be an indication that one is working in this "fever" spirit rather than in the true spirit of service? I should be inclined to think it my duty to respond to a call to work if I were not already engaged at the time, and provided I thought it would not be overtaxing my strength. What rule would he give as to accepting work?

If I were to be critical I would, on the illustration used, ask, whether in the case of fruit trees, gardeners do not have to cut the roots in order that the tree may bear fruit freely?

Yours truly,
Kinnaird.

EVANGELISTS FOR INDIA.

My Dear Brother,—You will know that since our return from America, where we had sixteen months of happy evangelistic work, we have been led to ask fresh guidance of God about further Gospel work abroad. India was much laid upon our minds. There are great and ever-widening fields of service open amongst the English-speaking people in that great empire.

Many are being called out to do the work of the evangelist at home, which we have sought to do for many years. This and other indications point to our responding to the call of those who are not privileged as the millions are in this country, of having Gospel truth ministered to them, so we decide to go to the regions beyond.

Many of your readers who have followed us for months in the United States and Canada in earnest prayer, are asked to do so again, that myself and wife may be enabled to witness for Christ in the N.W. of India.

All being well, we expect to leave England about the middle or end of this month.

Yours very sincerely,
Herbert R. Francis.

[We trust that our beloved friends, Mr. and Mrs. Francis, will be kept in loving remembrance by their many friends at home.—Ed.]

"THE CATHOLIC."

Dear Sir,—As an Ulsterman deeply interested in the spread of the Gospel in Ireland, I am thankful to see in operation any measure calculated at once to diffuse Scriptural light, and weaken and destroy the priestly tyranny so prevalent in my native land. I read from time to time your "Outlook in Ireland" with abiding interest, and this week specially so in seeing the long extract from The Catholic.

After coming to a knowledge of the truth as a young man, I was often pained to see the uncharity exercised towards Roman Catholics, believing that Christian love was the best way of winning them to Christ, and this the able editor of The Catholic nobly carries out. Educated and gifted, and possessed of an experience that is unique, he brings his splendid powers to bear on Roman Catholicism in the Master's spirit—that of love. I cannot doubt he has a great work to do in the enlightenment of Ireland, and the consequent healing of her woes and unrest.

It has been no easy task for many years to get accurate information about the spiritual condition of Ireland on this side the Channel, and my object in writing is to draw attention to this ably-conducted monthly periodical, which I should be glad to see published in London as well as in Dublin.

Amid the growth and rampancy of Ritualism in Britain and America, it is cause for unbounded gratitude to God, that He is raising up and equipping servants of his in a land that was once "the light of the west," and whose missionaries traversed all known lands in the promotion of Scriptural Christianity, so that again she may take her place in his kingdom and shine in his diadem.

Yours truly,
Wm. Hobson.

FOOTBALL—AN APPEAL TO COFFEE TAVERNS.

Sir,—I want to use your columns to make a strong appeal to the directors and managers of coffee taverns to provide suitable accommodation for football players to change their clothes. It is a pity to have young men and lads almost forced into licensed premises for lack of this accommodation elsewhere. May I suggest that a card be hung in the window of such coffee-houses stating clearly that a room is provided for the convenience of footballers?

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC is said to cost the United States, directly and indirectly, 140,000 dollars every hour, and kills, in the same space of time, 185 men.

Temperance Notes.

There are about 2,300,000 boys and girls attached to the United Kingdom Bands of Hope.

The great fire that devastated Milwaukee on Friday last appears to have originated in a liquor house.

Dr. Norman Kerr says that "since he has given up prescribing narcotics in delirium tremens he has had much better success."

Hamburg is said to have the worst water and the best beer of any city on earth. For the moral, observe the result when cholera struck Hamburg!

A public conference on the subject of grocers' licences, and their effect on drunkenness among women, was held last week in the Chelsea Town Hall.

In Waterford, out of a Protestant population of 2000, between four and five hundred children (practically all the children) are members of the Band of Hope.

By the Dutch public generally the teetotaller is as yet considered a most ludicrous and fanatical individual, and his position at a dinner party is not always an enviable one.

Lady Frederick Cavendish has had to stand the fire of criticism on account of her recent statements as to drinking in society circles, but she maintains her ground, and reiterates her protests.

In Holland total abstinence and temperance work is progressing, although by very slow steps. The National Christian Total Abstinence Society has branches in thirty-eight different places.

At the annual conference of the Yorkshire Union cheering accounts were given of work done by the branches, amongst almost all classes of people, but chiefly amongst those who suffer most keenly from the manifold evils of the drink traffic.

Out of fifteen women prisoners recently interviewed in York Gaol, fourteen were found to have come there through strong drink, and the Governor states that out of every twenty women who were committed to his charge eighteen came through drink.

It is reported that, in France, since 1870 (the war), there are 150,000 additional public-houses for drink. At present 270,000 are open in Paris, and 415,000 in the provinces. A fair field this for temperance societies: one drinking place for every eighty-seven inhabitants.

While in 1869 there were only 365,878 establishments licensed in France for the sale of intoxicating drink, that number has now increased to over 448,000, which is at the rate of one such establishment per eighty-seven inhabitants. The annual average consumption of alcohol per head is 4½ litres, or little more than 7½ pints.

Under the auspices of the Irish Temperance League, Mrs. Servanté, of the British Women's Temperance Association, has recently held a series of very successful meetings in Cork, Limerick, and Waterford. In the two last-named places there are flourishing branches of the British Women's Temperance Association, and great interest felt in the cause of temperance.

The World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union has published the paper given by the Duchess of Bedford at the recent Church Congress. Some very attractive literature, by such writers as Lady Henry Somerset, Miss Willard, Canon Wilberforce, Mrs. Josephine Butler, and others, has been recently published and is on sale at their headquarters, 47, Victoria-steet, Westminster.

The Dean of Bristol, in the course of a recent sermon in the cathedral of that city, on the subject of "Temperance," said, that if the Legislature did not see its way to dealing with dipsomaniacs, it might at least minimise the opportunities of temptation, and might allow the people of a given district to have a voice as to how many or how few public-houses should ply their trade in a given area.

Rev. Horace W. Townsend, of Kilmeen, county Cork, has concluded a most successful temperance mission in Birr Garrison. Colonel Crawford, the commanding officer of the district, presided at the meetings, which have been made a great blessing to the soldiers in the garrison. Gospel temperance meetings have also been held in Ahascragh and neighbourhood, county Galway, by Rev. A. E. Bor.

Whatever may be the opinion or judgment, based on experience or science, as to the value or the reverse of taking some form of alcohol with the meals, there is no doubt (says the Hospital) that the custom of taking wine or spirits or beer, between meals and on an empty stomach—in one word, the pernicious habit of "nipping"—is highly injurious. The morning nip between breakfast and the midday meal, which is so frequently taken by domestic servants, nurses, workpeople, and "City men," renders the taker less fit for his daily work than he would otherwise be, and is often in women the first fatal step towards dram-drinking, and the shameful life of the woman drunkard, of which we are hearing so much at the present time.

The Book World.

Annual Volumes.

Hand and Heart is an old friend. It is called a family, social, and temperance journal, and well deserves the name. The volume for 1892 is bright with illustrations, and the letterpress is uniformly wholesome and elevating. (2s. "Home Words" Office.)

The Sunday Magazine.—The new volume (7s. 6d. Isbister & Co.), matches its predecessors in character; its contents are somewhat mixed from a religious point of view, but of a high literary order. Hesba Stretton's story "Half Brothers" runs through the twelve monthly parts, and there are several shorter stories. Missionary articles are a prominent feature.

Home Words for 1892 is a capital volume, well illustrated. There are running stories by Emma Marshall and Agnes Giberne, biographical sketches and narratives of travel, and many short articles of an instructive and entertaining character. Rev. G F. W. Munby, M.A., rector of Turvey, Bedford, contributes sound counsels on courtship and marriage. (2s. Office, 7, Paternoster-square.)

Good Words for 1892 is an attractive collection of illustrated reading. There are several serial stories, many historical and descriptive sketches, and religious papers and meditations in topical and doctrinal variety. The artistic features are of a high order, well maintaining the reputation of the magazine, which, in volume form, has been a favourite visitor year by year in many homes. (7s. 6d. Isbister & Co.)

From the Sunday School Union we have—Young England (5s.), a handsome and attractive present for young people; The Silver Link Annual (2s.), the illustrated volume of a well-known monthly; Child's Own Magazine (1s. 6d.), in the stories and pictures of which the wee ones will find much delight. The Sunday School Teacher (2s. 6d.) forms quite a treasury of Biblical information and illustration for the use of teachers. Notes on Scripture Lessons, 189⁴ (2s.) comes too late to be of any service this year, though many may like to have and preserve these useful notes.

Richard Jefferies. Mrs. Mary Gorges contributes to the Fireside Magazine ("Home Words" Publishing Office) for October and November an able study of that marvellous lover of nature, Richard Jefferies, who "wrote of nature as no man had ever written of her before." Unquestionably the greater part of his life was spent in the bewilderment of one who, enamoured of God's works, had yet missed God Himself. The authoress believes that at last, pain-stricken and weary, he found rest in God. Thousands who have been charmed by his wonderful studies in Nature will welcome this analysis of his character from the spiritual point of view.

The Key to All Blessing. By J. T. Wrenford. (Partridge and Co. 6d. per dozen.) A New Year's address, in which, reasoning from the analogy of a bank, the author seeks to lead to more implicit and simple faith. The booklet will be, we believe, helpful to many.

Miss E. S. Elliott's poem on "Stillness," written some years ago, and recently reprinted in this paper, has been included in a beautiful booklet, entitled Stillness and Service. (2d. Partridge.) Of envelope size, this little book should be in great demand during the Christmas season. Another booklet by the same author, and of a like spiritual order, is Thou Remainest!

A Warning to Christians. By Rev. R. P. Carroll, B.A. 1d. (Bridlington Quay: R. Brown, 3, King-street.) Here are some earnest words against compromise with the world, the flesh, and the devil, in the details of daily life. Mr. Carroll rightly maintains that the whole man must be brought into subjection to Christ, if we are to prove faithful and true witnesses before those who are without.

Mr. W. G. Wheeler, of Warwick-lane, has issued some attractive chromo booklets for Christmas and the New Year. The Rock of My Refuge (1s.) gives poetic gems and appropriate texts, with coloured illustrations. In the Secret of His Presence is an illuminated presentation of the well-known hymn; and The Shepherd True contains Faber's touching lines. (6d. each.) The Christmas Chimes booklets are printed in sepia. (3d. each). Two calendars, in four small sheets, are The Upward Path and While the Days are Going By. (3d. each.) Mr. Wheeler also publishes cards with Scripture texts and mottoes.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 6.—JOSHUA XIV.

"The lot of their inheritance" is a significant phrase (2). The literal use of the lot in assigning to the tribes their respective portions in the land of Promise seems to have been intended to remove all cause of jealousy, or appearance of favouritism. The lot, too, was overruled to work out God's purpose (Prov. xvi. 33, and xviii. 18). It should be only used under his direct suggestion, and in dependence on his Providence. The absence of his direct command in Acts i. 26 will always make it doubtful whether Matthias was really God's choice to fill the vacant post on the Apostolate. As the portion of each tribe was allotted by God Himself, so was the whole land the allotted portion of the nation, "Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan, the lot of your inheritance" (Ps. cv. 11). Similarly we are made partakers of our allotted portion among the saints in light (Col. i. 12). How important ever to let God choose our inheritance for us, and to believe that He overrules circumstances, and what men call chance for his own ends.

Hebron means "fellowship." It had been the city of Arba (hence its name Kirjath-Arba), Arba being one of the dreaded Anakim. Caleb's faith was therefore vindicated (Num. xiv. 8). Is there not also a spiritual suggestion here? Those that wholly follow the Lord come in unwaning energy into the land of Promise, and subdue their foes, and there where some hateful son of Anak had harboured, there comes to be a Hebron, a scene of delightful fellowship, of serene enjoyment. The Apostle John is the Caleb of the New Testament.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 7.—JOSHUA XV.

The border of the tribe of Judah is traced in the earlier part of the chapter. It ran to the south side of Jerusalem (8), so that, strictly speaking, the fair city which was destined to play so important a part in future ages belonged not to Judah but to Benjamin. See Benjamin's portion (xviii. 16—28). God's choice of the city, however, "to put his name there," and of Judah to be the reigning tribe, together with David's conquest of Zion from the Jebusites (2 Sam. v. 7), virtually brought it into the possession of Judah.

The conduct of Achsah (19), in pleading with her father for a further gift of "springs of water," in addition to his gift of "a south land," is suggestive of how God's children should plead for the gift of the Holy Spirit in addition to the gift of their inheritance in Christ. The south land was no blessing without the springs of water. And our inheritance in Christ is comparatively valueless apart from the Spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Him (Eph. i. 17). He gave her upper springs and nether springs, as indeed God gives exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think.

Ashdod and Gaza (47) were afterwards regarded as cities of the Philistines (Jud. xvi. 21; 1 Sam. v. 1). They had, however, no right to them, Let us beware of leaving in our souls the strongholds of sin, lest they cause us much sorrow in after years.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 8.—JOSHUA XVI.

The two tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh drew one lot between them (1) as representing together Joseph's portion, and their frontiers were therefore contiguous. The "Speaker's Commentary" says: "The territory allotted to these two powerful tribes comprises the central, and, in every way, the choicest part of Canaan, west of the Jordan. The hills of this district, making up what is called Mount Ephraim (xx. 7), are less high, and far less barren than those of Judah; the water supply is much larger; and the very rich and fertile plains of Sharon and Esdraelon are left between the rocky fastnesses of Benjamin on the south, and the highlands of Galilee, belonging to Issachar, on the north." We may see in this rich earthly portion a fulfilment of the blessings foretold by Jacob (Gen. xlix. 25), and by Moses (Deut. xxxiii. 16).

It is sad to learn that the children of Joseph took their inheritance (4), but drove not out the Canaanites (10). And the mention of Gezer in x. 33, and xii. 12, as a city whose king and people were exterminated by Joshua, makes their failure appear yet more criminal. It is referred to again, Judges i. 29, and in Ps. lxxviii. 9. But we are liable to the same condemnation. For though our Joshua has vanquished all our spiritual foes, we are often overcome by them, to our sorrow and shame. Oh, for the exercise of a living faith!

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 9.—JOSHUA XVII.

Manasseh was the first born of Joseph (1), and so obtained a double portion, one part on the east, the other in the west of the Jordan. Would that we, too, might claim the double portion of the Holy Spirit.

The daughter of Zelophehad claimed the portion which had been promised them. It was not enough that God had commanded Moses, the girls came to Joshua and pleaded the command and promise, and asked that they might be fulfilled. There is a vast distinction between praying and claiming what you have prayed for, between asking and receiving the boon sought.

The complaint of the children of Joseph (14), that they had been given but one lot (xvi. 1), whereas as "a great people" they deserved more, seems to refer, not to their numbers (for according to Num. xxvi., the two tribes united were not much more than Judah), but to their own estimate of their deserts by virtue of the special promises to Joseph. But Joshua, himself an Ephraimite, exhorted them to show their greatness in deeds as well as in words. Besides, their territory was large enough, if only they would cut down the wood which covered the hills, or attack the Canaanites, who, with their iron chariots, held the valleys. We are all naturally slothful, and are unwilling to bestir ourselves. But there is within the reach of each of us all the fulness of God. Let us explore it, and possess it.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 10.—JOSHUA XVIII.

The first verse records an event of great importance, and one which engaged the attention of the whole congregation, the setting up of the Tabernacle at Shiloh, which hitherto had remained at Gilgal. The place was probably chosen by the Lord himself, as we gather from Deut. xii 11, and Psalm lxxviii. 60. It is supposed that its name, "Shiloh," which means "rest," was given to it at this time, when the land was subdued. The honour fell to Ephraim of having God's dwelling-place within their border, perhaps owing to its being the tribe of Joshua.

To stir up their zeal as to taking possession of their inheritance (4), Joshua sends out a company of twenty-one, three of each tribe not yet in possession, to survey the land and describe it. How long are ye slack to possess the given land? This surely is a question which our Joshua is constantly putting to us. The balance has been paid into our account, but we do not draw cheques on it.

The Jebusite held the stronghold, afterwards known as the holy city, in the territory of Benjamin (28). So our evil strongholds may hereafter become shrines of holy worship. Out of the eater, meat; out of the strong, sweetness. Oh child of Benjamin, who dwellest between the shoulders of Jehovah, arise, put on thy beautiful garments, and shine, for through the Jerusalem of thy soul there shall no more pass the uncircumcised and the unclean.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 11.—JOSHUA XIX.

Simeon's lot (1) was taken out of that of Judah, which proved to be too much for them. (9) They were honoured with the possession of Beersheba, consecrated by its association with Abraham. This was the extreme southern portion of the land; so that "from Dan to Beersheba" became an expression for the whole length of the land.

In verse 47, R.V., read, "The border of the children of Dan went out beyond them,"— words which introduce a reference to the expedition of the Danites against Leshem or Laish, which is more fully recorded in Judges xviii. That city was afterwards called Dan, and was at the extreme north, as Beersheba was at the extreme south of the Holy Land. In Judges i. 34, we learn the real reason that led to this northern conquest. Instead of expelling the Amorites from the portion assigned to them, the Danites were "forced" by them into the mountain, for the Amorites would not suffer them to come down into the valley. "Hence their expedition against the unwarlike and peaceable race whom they exterminated, and annexed their city and country to the portion of Dan." No blessing seems to have rested on them in this settlement. They were the first tribe who formally set up idolatry (Judges xviii. 30). Their name is omitted from the list of tribes in Rev. vii. They are a striking exemplification of the lot of those who seek their portion in this life, but are suddenly cut down (Psa. xxxvii.).

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 12.—JOSHUA XX.

The appointment of the cities of refuge here narrated (2) was the carrying out of the directions given in fuller detail in Num. xxxv. 9—34. In each passage a careful distinction is drawn between deliberate murder and unintentional homicide (3). Those alone who had committed the latter were eligible for refuge. The fugitive told his story to the elders at the gate, and was admitted provisionally (4); but his case was afterwards fully investigated by the citizens of the city to which he had fled, when he stood before them for judgment. Does not this clear-cut illustration warn us that sins of presumption are viewed by God in a very different light from those of ignorance. They harden the heart and deaden the workings of conscience. Those who are born of God cannot sin in a course of knowing and presumptuous rebellion.

The unintending homicide must dwell in the city of refuge until the death of the high-priest. This may be intended to bring out into relief the fact that Jesus ever liveth, and therefore our security in Him is unending. Or, "the death of the high-priest may signify that death of Christ by which captives were to be freed, and the remembrance of transgressions made to cease" ("Speaker's Commentary").

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 13.

THE FIRST CHRISTIAN MISSIONARIES.

Acts xiii. 1—13.

GOLDEN TEXT: Luke xxiv. 47.

The first Christian missionaries were sent forth, not from the church at Jerusalem, but from the church at Antioch, which had been in existence only a few years (xi. 20, 21). Already this church possessed as a gift from the ascended Saviour "certain prophets and teachers." Of the five names mentioned, three are otherwise unknown to us. Of Simeon we can learn nothing. Lucius may be the same who is referred to in Rom. xvi. 21. Possibly he was one of the men of Cyrene to whom the church at Antioch owed its origin (xi. 20). The little we can learn of Manaen is exceedingly interesting and instructive. Think of him as the foster-brother, and child-companion of Herod Antipas in the home of Herod the Great. How different the destiny of the two playmates! The one becomes the murderer of John the Baptist, and at last is so hardened as to make cruel sport of the suffering Saviour (Mark vi. 16-29; Luke xxiii. 7-11); while the other becomes a prominent teacher in the Church of Christ. Barnabas appears to have been chief among the five; hence his name comes first. Saul, lately introduced to the church by Barnabas (xi. 25, 26) is mentioned last.

In the circumstances connected with the call of these missionaries there is much that is instructive (2, 3). Note (1) how the Church was employed. It was not a banquet, at which eloquent speeches were made in hope of moving the Church to sympathy with the heathen. It was a meeting for worship and fasting. Early Christians knew that a pampered body is a hindrance to devotion. Is it not a significant proof of our declension that we have a feast where the early Church held a fast? (2) How the call came. It was recognised as the voice of the Holy Ghost, who spake probably through one of the prophets in the Church. The presence of the Spirit of God was no doubtful thing to the Christians of Antioch. (3) Who were called. Two of their best and most useful members. For this work God demands our most gifted men. (4) The language of the call is suggestive. None are separated unto Him for mere rapture, but for service. "Unto me for the work." And (5) how it was met. By an immediate and obedient response (verse 3). Their farewell was not a banquet, but a fast and a prayer-meeting. The laying on of hands communicated no miraculous gift, but identified the Church with the missionaries they were sending forth.

Their mission work began in the island of Cyprus. Probably this was chosen because Barnabas was a native of that country. The people of Cyprus had already heard the word (xi. 19). The way from Antioch would be either down the Orontes or overland to Seleucia, which was the port of Antioch, and from which, on a clear day, the island of Cyprus is visible. Salamis, formerly the metropolis of the island, was still its chief port. From this place the Apostles journeyed to Paphos, a city famed for its temple to Venus. The phrases "Cyprian goddess" and "Paphian goddess" suggest that the worship of Venus was popular throughout the island. The seat of government had been removed to Paphos, and here the Roman deputy or pro-consul resided. This title, applied to the governor of Cyprus, has been regarded as proof of inaccuracy in the New Testament. In the division which Augustus made, Cyprus was retained by him as a province requiring the presence of troops. The governors were in all such cases called pro-prætors, while the governors of provinces belonging to the Senate were pro-consuls. But a more accurate acquaintance with the facts verifies the sacred narrative. The Emperor subsequently gave Cyprus to the Senate in exchange for Dalmatia. Sergius Paulus is, therefore, properly called the pro-consul.

Nothing is said of the work in Cyprus, except that it was done among the Jews (5), and that it attracted the attention of the pro-consul (7). Prudent: thoughtful, intelligent, ruled not by passion but by judgment. Proof of his prudence is seen in his desire to hear Barnabas and Saul, and decide for himself as to their message. A sincere, unprejudiced hearing is all the Gospel demands.

It is strange that a man like the pro-consul should have been willing to pay any heed to the sorcerer Bar-jesus, who gave himself the Arabian title of Elymas, meaning wise man. Yet it must be remembered that the old heathen philosophy and customs had lost their power over men, and general unrest and scepticism prevailed.

Many explanations have been given for the name Paul being given here (9) for the first time. The most reasonable is that which regards it as having been from the first his Roman name. As his work is mainly to be among Gentiles, there is an appropriateness in his henceforth adopting that name.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

[illegible] Rees, formerly, and for a short time, pastor of [illegible] Church, Denmark-place, has joined the Church [illegible]

[illegible] and Bristol Diocesan Conference last [illegible] earnest consideration to the suffering amongst [illegible]men, and appointed a committee to take steps to [illegible] fund.

Bishop of Manchester has intimated that at his next [illegible] will not summon his clergy to meet him, but [illegible]m time to time various parishes with the view [illegible] inquiring into the work of the churches.

Bishops of Ripon, Rochester, and Sodor and Man, [illegible]roy, and others will take part in the simultaneous [illegible] to be held in London on November 21, 22, 23, 24. [illegible]25, to promote home missions in connection with the [illegible]n Pastoral Aid Society.

Another University Settlement in London has just been lodged in a permanent building. This is the Gonville and [illegible]llege Mission, in Old Battersea. The first portion [illegible] building has been formally opened by the Bishop [illegible] Rochester.

The Durham University C.M.S. Union commenced its third year, on October 25, with a capital meeting addressed by Rev. J. W. Hall, missionary from Calcutta, who trusted the outcome of the Union would be fresh labourers for God's service among the heathen.

The Bishop of Chichester (Dr. Durnford), who completes his 70th year on November 3, has opened a Church Institute at Eastbourne, which has been erected in memory of the late Canon Thomas Pitman, who was vicar of Eastbourne for nearly sixty-two years.

Rev. T. J. Madden, in a paper read at Liverpool on "How to Awaken and Deepen Spiritual Life in our Church," maintains that the necessity of having special, distinct services both for awakening and deepening spiritual life, deserves the constant attention of the clergy.

At a meeting on Friday week of the Calvinistic Protestant Union, Rev. C. Stirling, speaking as to present affairs, mentioned that he had just received from a learned clergyman's daughter a letter stating that a few Christian ladies were gathered in prayer, asking God to deliver them from what appeared to be a general return to a bondage which our forefathers were unable to bear.

The Christian Evidence Society has arranged for a course of three lectures to be delivered in the nave of Manchester Cathedral on successive Tuesday evenings. The Bishop of Ripon lectured on Tuesday evening on "The Ministry of Great Races"; the Bishop of Chester will give an address on Tuesday evening, November 8, on "The Problems and the Progeny of Unfaith"; and on Tuesday evening, November 15, the Dean of Armagh (Dr. Chadwick) will lecture on "Jesus Christ and Natural Development."

At a conference held last week in connection with the Church Association, the Lincoln judgment was declared to be a distinct call to more energetic action in defence of national Protestantism. Sir Arthur Blackwood expressed a hope that Evangelical clergymen would lose no time in removing the Communion tables from the east wall into "the body of the church," as sanctioned by the rubric. Mr. S. Causton advocated the formation of a fund for £50,000, to be spent in working mission halls in Ritualistic parishes.

The second annual meeting of the Brixton and Clapham Branch of the Protestant Churchmen's Alliance was held on Monday last at the Horns Assembly-rooms, the president, Rev. W. R. Mowll, in the chair. The report, read by Mr. W. F. Sargood, showed that the year which had just closed had been an active one, lectures having been given by Sir Robert Phayre, the Revs. J. W. Marshall, W. Horne, Dr. R. A. Webb, and Mr. J. O. Chadwick. In addition to this a large number of books and pamphlets, dealing with the question of Ritualism and Romanism, had been circulated in the neighbourhood.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A series of Pleasant Monday Evenings for the People has been started at Ventnor.

Mr. C. Garnett, who has for some years superintended the Star Hall Mission, Ancoats, has accepted a pastorate in the district.

Dr. Dale, preaching at the opening of a new mission hall in connection with Carr's-lane, dwelt specially on the value of "lay" agency in winning the masses.

A meeting was held at Guildford on Monday to bid farewell to Miss E. R. Carling, who is leaving for China in connection with the London Missionary Society.

At the second anniversary of the Mansfield Settlement, held on Saturday week, Dr. Fairbairn and others spoke warmly of the real work now doing in Canning Town.

New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, reports 800 Sunday scholars, with an average attendance of 660; 110 of these are members of the church. The school has raised £100 for foreign missions.

A series of special services was held last week at Bishopsgate Chapel in connection with the eighth anniversary of the pastor, Rev. T. Grear. The secretary reports progress all round.

Nine deaconesses have been appointed in connection with Park Green Chapel, Macclesfield. Their work will consist of district visitation, caring for the sick and needy, and arranging for social gatherings.

A meeting was held at Victoria-road Church, New Chesterton, Cambridge (Rev. J. Eames), to bid farewell to Dr. Hart (deacon and organist) and Mrs. Hart, who are leaving for mission work in China in connection with the London Missionary Society.

A meeting was held in Friar-lane Chapel, Nottingham, on Saturday night to take farewell of Miss Haskard, who is going to Bellary, Southern India, under the auspices of the London Missionary Society. Miss Haskard has been an active helper in Sunday-school and temperance work, and has conducted with much success a large Bible-class for domestic servants.

The sixth annual meeting of the London Missionary Society Young Men's Missionary Band was held at the Mission House on Friday, Mr. A. J. Shepheard presiding. The report, read by Rev. G. Cousins, stated that there are now 117 members, and the attendance at the meetings had been better than in any previous year: the members had delivered 272 Sunday-school addresses and forty-two lantern lectures.

A meeting was held in Staines Congregational Church on October 20, to bid farewell to Misses Gookey and Dawson, who are proceeding to India to engage in missionary work.

Principal Reynolds, of Cheshunt, speaking last week at a meeting on behalf of the College, said that he did not remember that they turned out any epoch-making man, but they had in all countries men who had done, and were doing yeoman service. He began his work thirty-two years ago with one colleague; now, besides the theological tutors, there were three men, each of whom was in close touch with university life, and as energetic in sustaining the spiritual life of the College as in carrying out their literary and critical work.

BAPTIST.

The work at the Southend Tabernacle is reported as showing many tokens of interest.

The new president of the Baptist Union of Scotland is Rev. W. Stewart Chedburn.

Rev. J. P. Clark, M.A., has accepted the pastorate of the Gunnersbury Baptist Church.

Azof-street Sunday-school, East Greenwich, reports 329 scholars and eighteen teachers.

A special mission just held in the Queen's-road Chapel, Wimbledon, has been followed with good results.

Rev. William Stevenson, late of Kirkcaldy, commences his labours at Highbury Hill Church, N., next Lord's Day.

New Sunday-schools connected with the Baptist Union Chapel, Luton, have just been opened by Miss Marianne Farningham.

Baptist work at Cologne seems to be prospering. A new chapel is being built, and several mission stations are growing into strong churches.

Gipsy-road Sunday-school, West Norwood, reports 485 scholars and forty-four teachers; twelve scholars have joined the church during the year.

George-street Church, Ryde (Rev. E. B. Pearson), reports 145 members, a net increase on the year of eleven. In the Sunday-school there are 140 scholars and sixteen teachers.

Special services have been held at Gorton, under the auspices of the Manchester District Baptist Union, by Rev. W. F. Edgerton; addresses to women were delivered by Miss Bethel.

The Baptists at Christ Church have held an evangelistic mission in the Town Hall, and the services were conducted by the Revs. W. V. Robinson, R. B. Morrison, and W. R. Chesterton, and many have professed religious decision.

Rev. Charles Williams, Accrington, will take as the special subject of his paper at the Free Church Congress at Manchester, the possibility of united action by the denominations in their village work without compromise of distinctive principle.

Rev. W. Bishop delivered an address to the East Midland Association, in reference to pastoral oversight in villages where there was no pastor. He suggested the federation of village churches in one locality; affiliation with town or village church having a pastor; or the ordination of competent men, either residents or college students.

METHODIST.

A helpful Spiritual Life Conference has just been held in Hastings.

The Methodists of Sheffield are uniting in a bold forward movement.

A new Wesleyan chapel which has been erected at Stourton, Yorkshire, was formally opened on Saturday.

Crowded meetings on behalf of the London Mission have just been held by Messrs. Price Hughes and Walters at Peterborough.

A new Wesleyan chapel which has been erected in the village of Shadwell, near Leeds, at a cost (exclusive of the site, which is the gift of Mr. Richard Buckton, of Leeds) of £650, was opened on Tuesday.

On Friday evening week the President of Conference, Rev. James Travis, preached in the old Quarry-hill Chapel, Leeds. The service marked the opening of a great Sunday-school Conference on various aspects of Sunday-school work.

The opening services of the new church at Forest-gate have been remarkably successful. Revs. J. Travis, J. B. Knapp, J. Wenn, and W. Wray have preached at the services. Since the opening precious souls have found the Saviour in this new building.

Rev. E. Abbot, of Birmingham, strongly advocates the formation of "young people's societies of Christian endeavour" as the "missing link" between the school and the church, combining at once the social and the religious, the prayer meeting and the Bible class.

The proposed basis of union for the Methodist Churches in Australia is a somewhat lengthy document. It concedes much which has been long contended for by the freer Methodist bodies in this country, not the least important being the principle of representation by the laity as well as the ministry which runs through the whole document.

The Wesleyan Methodists at Aldershot have commenced an aggressive movement which will involve an expenditure of nearly £5000. The scheme includes the enlargement of the two Soldiers' Homes—one at the South Camp and the other at the North Camp—the erection of a school for civilian purposes, the purchase of a minister's house, and the enlargement of Farnham Chapel.

Over a thousand pounds has been already secured by Rev Joseph Odell for the erection of the new Conference Hall at Small Heath, Birmingham. At the present time over two thousand children meet for Sunday-school instruction in the Ada-street and Tilton-road Board schools. Sixty Sunday-school teachers attend to the classes, and more could be done if further accommodation can be secured. God has graciously blessed the work at Small Heath.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The anniversary services at Camberwell on Sunday week proved very successful, showing good work for the past year.

A special mission held last week by Rev. D. Macrae at Silvertown Church was accompanied by many encouraging tokens.

Rev. Hugh Falconer, of Juniper Green Free Church, has received a cordial call to Jesmond Church, Newcastle.

The Dublin Presbyterian Mission Board has received a gift of £1000 towards the support of an additional missionary in China for three years.

The Presbyterian missionaries in China will shortly receive welcome reinforcements, thirteen new or returning labourers being now on their way or about to leave within a little time.

A full report of the proceedings of the Presbyterian Alliance Council, held in Toronto, in September, is to be issued by the Presbyterian Publishing House, 14, Paternoster-square.

The special preachers at Broad-street Church, Birmingham, are creating considerable interest, and the congregation are increasing in numbers. The preacher on Sunday was Professor Cameron, of Aberdeen.

Mr. Mark N. Robson, who for nearly a year has been doing successful work as a missionary in Willington, Durham, recently conducted evangelistic services with great acceptance in the congregations of Crook and Tow Law.

The Stratford congregation has just opened new Sunday-school buildings, the work among the young extending greatly. The old schoolroom has been doubled in size, and it is now one of the finest Presbyterian halls in London.

A very interesting statement has been prepared by Sir George Bruce showing the progress of the Presbyterian Church of England in London. Of eighty-seven congregations and preaching stations now existing, no less than sixty-three have come into existence since 1860. The total membership thirty-one years ago was 7301; it is now 20,271, or an increase of 12,970. Nearly two-thirds of all the money now raised is contributed by congregations established since 1860.

SALVATION ARMY.

Mr. McKie's campaign in Norway appears to be awakening remarkable interest and enthusiasm.

Mrs. Booth-Clibborn, "La Maréchale," has just concluded an interesting tour in Switzerland and France.

As a result of a visit paid to the Army shelters Mr. R. Cory has sent £500 to General Booth, in answer to the appeal for more funds.

The Salvation Army propose to form a Social League, of friends outside the ranks of the Army, but willing to co-operate and collect £5 per annum.

During the first three weeks of October there were sent into the elevators (i.e., workshops) upwards of five hundred men. This is an ominous foreshadowing of this winter's distress.

The returns of the self-denial week so far show a great increase, and the £50,000 aimed at will probably be reached. A working man has given £3, all in farthings, the savings of a lifetime.

A crowd of ruffians in Wyandotte, Mich., attacked a band of Salvation Army people on the streets on Sunday evening, October 17, injuring three of the Salvationists. The leader, Lieutenant Lowe, a woman, was probably fatally hurt. There has been ill-feeling among the roughs towards the Salvation Army for some time.

THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

A new meeting-house has just been opened at Wilton.

Special meetings just held at Almeley have awakened great interest.

Isabella Young, of West Hartlepool, has been set at liberty to visit friends in Scotland, and hold meetings in Perth.

A special mission has been conducted at Charlbury by Mr. Alexander Dunlop, of Ardrossan, Ayrshire, and there have been signs of spiritual blessing.

Joseph J. Neave has left London for St. Petersburg, accompanied by John Bellows, of Gloucester. Their mission is of a religious and philanthropic character.

R. B. Brockbank, from Cumberland, and F. J. Gavid, from Cornwall, have been for some time ministering in Ireland, visiting meetings at Clonmel, Limerick, and Dublin.

The Friend of last week gives a pleasant account of the opening of a new meeting-house at Wilton. Quite a number of young London and Bristol Friends helped during the first week of services.

A crowded meeting of Severn-street scholars and members of other Adult Schools in Birmingham, was lately held in the Town Hall, over 3,000 being present. The proceedings were of an enthusiastic character.

This week a large conference in Devonshire House has been discussing home mission work in England. Its decisions will probably greatly influence the spread of the Gospel, and are awaited with some anxiety as bearing vitally on the future of the society at home and abroad. Doubtless the Divine Head will overrule all for good.

While Friends at home are conferring together on how to carry most efficiently the good news to perishing men, American yearly meetings, representing, perhaps, a membership of 60,000, have been also conferring together with the same end in view. Surely the Divine Spirit is breathing on the Friends' Church in both hemispheres, and growth and progress must be the result.

At the Bristol and Somerset Quarterly, Henry Baron Smith directed the attention of Friends to the forces at work in the religious world—the advance of Roman Catholicism, the growth of Ritualism in the State Church, and of sensationalism and excitement in many other forms of worship—and urged Friends seriously to inquire what the Lord would have them do in the face of such a state of things.

Two of the great Western yearly meetings (U.S.A.), those of "Indiana" and "Western," have just been held, and The Christian Worker gives most inspiriting accounts of them. Home and foreign mission work, Gospel temperance, education—advancement all along the line under the manifest power of the Holy Spirit characterised the great gatherings, and the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour evoked most enthusiasm of all the meetings and inspired the most hope.

Birmingham holds a distinguished position in connection with adult school and other Christian work. On the 11th of last month Wm. White, J.P., presided over an adult school meeting of 3,000 in the Town Hall, while the membership of the Severn-street Christian Society numbers over 1000, and the attendance is 2000 on Sunday evenings. All sorts of Christian effort cluster round the schools, and the men are for the most part members of the Society of Friends except in name.

George Cadbury, writing to the Friend, on Home Missions, says:—"How vast is our responsibility when we see the abundant harvest that may be reaped in our own land; when Friends are willing to adapt their practices to circumstances, while maintaining their principles; when we look abroad and see the tens of thousands of thoughtful men and women in Russia drawn towards us. Large numbers of Jews are, I believe, ready to accept the views as held by Friends as to the spiritual nature of the Redeemer's Kingdom; but are hindered from becoming Christians by being asked to exchange one ritual for another, and who, if once truly converted, would become the best of evangelists, scattered as they are over the world, and knowing nearly every language."

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Bradford, on 24th inst., Mrs. Benjamin Illingworth, a leading and earnest Wesleyan and temperance worker.—At Hope House, Lytham, Rev. E. Lightfoot, aged seventy-two, for many years an able and useful Methodist minister.—At Ashton, Cheshire, Rev. John Simson, aged seventy-seven, who for nearly half a century did good service as a Congregational minister.—At Harrogate, in his fifty-third year, Dr. Russell, J.P., formerly a well-known Presbyterian minister.—At Prestwich, near Manchester, on 16th inst., Miss E. Eveleigh, aged seventy-three, a faithful servant of Jesus—At Hollyville, Wexford, on 13th inst., Mrs. M. Johnson, aged thirty-five, a loved and earnest worker.—At Stackpole-road, Bristol, on 23rd inst., Mr. W. N. Evans, F.C.S., aged sixty-six, honoured for his work's sake.—At South Hampstead, on 25th inst., Rev. B. B. Gibson, aged seventy-five, for forty-eight years Rector of St. Mary Abchurch and St. Lawrence Poultry.—At the C.M.S. House, Bagdad, on 23rd inst., the infant daughter of Dr. and Mrs. H. M. Sutton; these well-known and beloved missionaries will have the sympathy of many in their sorrow.—At Ingersby (Leicester), Mr. James Hill, the station-master, killed by a train, a devoted and earnest worker and S.S. superintendent.

WARNING.—A London correspondent asks us to caution the public against young man, tall and dark, who represents himself as being connected with the Cape General Mission, and appeals for money. Friends should in all cases be careful not to respond to such representations without verifying their genuineness.

A BLACK OUTLOOK.

DEAR FRIENDS,

The outlook for the coming winter is black with woe and want.

Fever has been rife: the labour market is depressed: those who have heroically struggled to keep their lips above water are now throwing up their hands in despair and sinking, in utter hopelessness, into pauperism and vagrancy.

This has been the busiest month I have had in 22 years. I have stretched myself to the utmost to try and cope with the need. Respectable young men, with tears in their eyes, have begged for a bit of bread. Promising boys, whose mothers have had to enter the workhouse, have craved for shelter. Widows, with faces ghastly from privation, have implored me to receive their children, whose cry for food has been piercing their hearts.

I have spent every penny I have. Every bed is full. Each day the pressure upon me increases. What am I to do? I cannot hear these life-tragedies, and say in empty words, "Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled." Am I to turn away unheard and unhelped the widow and the orphan, the prodigal boy and the famished waif? God forbid!

To carry on the work here till Christmas, secure some extra sleeping space, and keep an open door for every really needy, homeless boy, we need £2,500. Who will help? £100 will keep fourteen waifs right through the winter; £50 will send five to Canada, where they will not need another farthing of English charity. £10 will pay for one boy's emigration; £7 10s. for one boy's maintenance till the spring. £5 will pay for five beds; £2 for a boy's outfit; 10s. will give 60 a good breakfast.

This is a home missionary work. We are grappling with famine at our doors. We are living and labouring amongst our young home-heathen. Will you strengthen our hands and cheer our hearts?

Your servant for Christ's sake.

SOUTH LONDON.—The committee of the South London Christian Institution, Greenwich, have secured Morton's Theatre, Greenwich, for evangelistic services on Sunday evenings during the winter months. The first of the series will be held on Sunday, November 6. The committee are desirous of reaching the non church or chapel goers. The work is entirely unsectarian, and they will be glad of the sympathy and co-operation of Christian friends, especially would help be appreciated in the choir, either as vocalists or instrumentalists. Prayer is asked that God's blessing may rest upon this effort for teaching the masses. W. J. G. ALFORD, Hon. Sec.

55, South-street, Greenwich.

JEWS IN MILE END AND STEPNEY.—Mr. I. Gelbflaum writes:—"We have begun our winter's work among the thousands of Jews in this district. Five meetings are held weekly at the Great Assembly Hall, and attended in very encouraging numbers. In various ways we seek to help the Jewish population, as well as to tell them of Christ. We hope to be able, during the severe weather, to show Christian sympathy for the naked and distressed, among many of whom we go day by day." Mr. Gelbflaum is a worker of the London City Mission, and has the assistance of a local committee. Communications may be addressed to the care of Mr. F. N. Charrington, at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, E.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For special evangelistic services in Caledonia Hall, West Port, Dundee.—For a ten days' Mission to be held at 77, Church-street, Lisson Grove, by Mr. Edward C. Millard, from Nov. 3 to 11.—For special services by Mr. Opie Rodway, of Stroud, at Hall of Freedom (Mission, on Nov. 5, 6, and 7), Newfoundland-road, Bristol.—For an Evangelistic Mission by Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes, M.A. from Nov. 6 to 20 inclusive, in connection with the Lewes Y.M.C.A.—For special services to be held next week in the Mission-room, Lillieshall-road, Clapham.—For the restoration of a victim of dipsomania who formerly passed as a believer.—For blessing on a mission being held at Tangley, near Andover, Hants. PRAISE.—For the confessed blessing on believers that resulted from the instrumentality of Messrs. H. A. Squire and H. M. Barnett in special services at Brenchley and Tunbridge Wells lately.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING

FEMALE EDUCATION IN THE EAST.

Treasurer:—Sir W. R. FARQUHAR, Bart.

This Society, established fifty-eight years ago, has lived to see its work, once considered Utopian, not only recognised as possible, but regarded as an indispensable part of Gospel Missions.

It is the oldest Society established in the Western Hemisphere for the spiritual benefit of women and girls in Asia and in Africa; the pioneer of all subsequent Zenana work among them, and the first to send out a Missionary teacher for Hindu and Mahommedan Zenanas, and for Turkish Harems.

Its object is to lead all under its influence to "The Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world"; and to enable every Eastern woman and girl to read the Holy Scriptures for herself, in her own tongue; and it will not give Education without the Bible.

The sphere of the Society's work embraces China, Japan, India, Persia, Africa, and the Levant, and it includes the Establishment of Orphanages, Boarding, Day, and Infant Schools, Bible and Sewing Classes, Mothers' Meetings, Zenana Visiting, and Medical Work.

This important work is now crippled by want of Funds. HELP is therefore URGENTLY NEEDED for its support and extension, and will be most gratefully received by the SECRETARY, Miss Webb, 267, Vauxhall Bridge-road, London, S.W.; or by the BANKERS, Messrs. Herries, Farquhar, and Co., 16, St. James's-street, S.W.

Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen.

This Society has ministered for 11 years to 20,000 Smacksmen in the North Sea and other waters. It has Eleven fine Medical Mission Smacks cruising with the fishing fleets.

During the past summer a Hospital vessel has been dispatched to carry on Medical Mission Work amongst the 25,000 Fishermen and their families who annually migrate from Newfoundland to the barren coasts of Labrador.

The burden of the work financially is very heavy. Funds are most urgently needed to carry it on.

FRANCIS H. WOOD,
181, Queen Victoria-street, Secretary.
London, E.C.

HELP WANTED

FOR THE

ANNUAL SALE

ON BEHALF OF

"Dr. Barnardo's Homes" for Orphan and Waif Children,

NOW SHELTERING, EDUCATING, AND TRAINING OVER 4,500 LITTLE WAIFS AND STRAYS.

Will all who are preparing gifts for the ANNUAL SALE on behalf of these Homes

KINDLY SEND THEM IN AT ONCE?

Will those whose busy fingers are at work for the Sale remember that crochet shawls, really fine underclothing for ladies and children, shirts for boys and men, suits for little boys, aprons and pinafores for girls, and sets of baby clothing, are particularly valuable additions, being much asked for and readily sold? Well-made woollen shawls are frequently asked for, and indeed, women's garments of all kinds would be especially useful. Besides these, jewellery, old coins, old china, bric-a-brac, curios, musical instruments, fancy work, trinkets, articles of vertu, drawings &c, &c., will be gratefully received and acknowledged. Valuable help would be afforded if donors of gifts of old china, foreign goods, articles of vertu, &c., would kindly mark on them their value, or indicate the price which is likely to be obtained.

The SALE will this year be of the SAME CHARACTER as for the LAST FEW YEARS; that is to say, instead of holding a Public Bazaar at the West End of London, during the month of December, as formerly, all the goods received will be made up into

£5 AND £10 BOXES.

These Boxes will contain a very excellent selection, of the value of at least £6 and £12 respectively, and these will be sent to any part of the country on receipt of P.O. Order or Cheque, made payable to Mr. JOHN T. PAGE.

Ladies who order these Boxes will confer a great benefit upon the Homes; for by this easy method all the articles received may be disposed of without any loss in the way of such expenses as are usually incurred by holding a Bazaar at the West-End.

Many kind-hearted sympathisers have repeatedly expressed warm approval of this plan, and have promised to purchase boxes, with the contents of which they propose to hold in their own houses, to which their personal friends can be invited during the winter months.

Dr. BARNARDO earnestly invites all who love poor children to co-operate with him in this plan to increase the funds of the Homes, by which, too, all the wearying, disappointing and expensive drawbacks of a public Bazaar are effectually avoided.

The Boxes, carefully lined and packed ready for transmission, will be dispatched on receipt of remittance to any railway station in the Kingdom. Applications (PREPAID), with full instructions as to conveyance, &c., should be sent in as soon as possible, addressed to

THE SECRETARY,

18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

The secretary, Mr. Smail, reported that the society has sixty-seven active members, fifty-two associate members, and twenty-two hon. members. The total membership was 141. There are eight committees, each consisting of six active members. The chairman, Rev. J. Hutchison, congratulated the society on its success during the past year. Mr. Wood, of Grosvenor-street, Manchester, as a Methodist, spoke of the society as having revolutionised the prayer-meetings at the place he attended. Rev. W. H. Towers, Oldham-road, Manchester, secretary of the Manchester Union of Societies of Christian Endeavour, delivered an address, and a few other gentlemen spoke.

THE MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.
Patron: Admiral H.R.H. The Duke of Edinburgh, K.G.
LORD BRASSEY has, with great munificence, promised £5,000 towards the £30,000 needed for a carefully elaborated scheme to cope with the evils afflicting seamen in the Port of London; including a Missions to Seamen Church, Institute, Gymnasium, Officers' Rooms, Class Rooms, Adult Schools, and Coffee Bar, etc., in one block, with four smaller branch Seamen's Institutes, to be worked by two chaplains and five experienced readers. Besides the above £30,000, about £3,000 a-year additional will be needed for maintenance of staff and buildings in East of London.
COMMANDER H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, R.N., K.G., is president of the London Funds Committee of the Missions to Seamen to raise the necessary moneys. It includes, amongst others, the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Mayor, the Prime Warden of the Fishmongers, the First Lord of the Admiralty, and many leading shipowners and merchants, etc. Offertories and drawing-room meetings, etc., are solicited. Subscriptions and contributions for the General Fund, and for the Special "London Fund of the Mission to Seamen," should be sent to Messrs. Barclay, Ransom, and Co., Bankers, 1, Pall Mall East, or 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or to the General Secretary, Commander William Dawson, R.N., the Missions to Seamen, 11, Buckingham-street, Strand, London, W.C.

THE FORTY-FIRST SERIES OF CASES.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

BRONCHITIS AND ASTHMA AT WOODBRIDGE—CASE OF AN OLD LADY SEVENTY YEARS OF AGE.

"I am writing for Mrs. J. Wood (my grandmother), of ALDERTON, WOODBRIDGE, Suffolk. Will you kindly send her advice and medicine? She has for years been troubled with Asthma. Now she is in a very weak state. Her cough is very bad, and expectoration profuse; and very great difficulty of breathing. I have read of you in the Gospel Standard, and told her, and now write at once. She has been losing flesh all over the body. I hope she may get good as others have done." This letter was written Feb. 11th, 1892.

In three weeks the patient writes:—"Your medicine has has done me much good. My cough is much less, and I do not raise so much." In six weeks the appetite was ever so much better, and the breathing greatly relieved.

May 23rd, she writes me:—"My thanks for your kind advice, and all that you have done for me, trusting you may long enjoy that greatest blessing—health. Your treatment has completely cured me. I am grateful to Almighty God that my attention was directed to it. Make any use of my testimony."

SEWING MACHINES as CHRISTMAS BOXES TO THE READERS OF THIS PAPER. We have made arrangements to supply to the readers of this paper as a Christmas Box some splendid first-class LOCKSTITCH SEWING MACHINES.

These form the entire, complete stock of a celebrated firm of makers, relinquishing this part of their business, and have been purchased at less than a quarter their proper price. It is not possible to entirely give them away, for to do so would mean to be instantly flooded with applications, more than could be supplied, and it has therefore been decided to make a nominal charge of 6s. 6d. each, which shall cover entire cost of carriage, packing, and testing each machine before being sent out, each being thoroughly examined and worked by an experienced machinist. These machines are not meant to be given to outside strangers, but to regular readers of this paper: and it is necessary, therefore, that the form at the bottom be filled in and sent with the application. The 6s. 6d. includes guarantee of the perfectness of the machine. Should more applications be received than there are machines, those first to hand will be executed, and the rest will have their money at once returned in full. On no account will any machines be supplied for hawking [illegible]. Each machine is beautifully silver-plated, will make either fine or coarse stitches, will do thin or thick work, have large improved shuttle and bobbin, are [illegible] made by experienced workmen, and were made to be sold at a guinea each, though they will even do better work than many machines at four guineas. They are second-hand machines, and full instructions are sent with each. If you wish to accept this marvellous offer, send 6s. 6d., with the form filled up, as soon as possible. Extra needles can be had at 1s. per dozen, and cotton 1s. 2d. per dozen; oil-can and oil, 6d. extra.

I beg to certify that I am a constant reader of The Christian, and therefore entitled to a Lockstitch Machine for 6s. 6d.

MORGAN & SCOTT'S CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

Rev. C. H. SPURGEON wrote regarding MORGAN & SCOTT'S PORTABLE "CRUDEN":—

"Messrs. Morgan & Scott are resolved not to be beaten, and so they have produced a portable edition of "Cruden's Concordance" for 3s. 6d. Nobody should now be without a Concordance: which is to the Bible-reader what a foot-rule is to a carpenter, or a chain to a land-surveyor. For the sake of all poor parsons in the three kingdoms, we feel grateful to Messrs. Morgan & Scott. How they can issue such a book at such a price we cannot tell."

THE PRINCE OF PREACHERS:

A SKETCH, A PORTRAITURE, & A TRIBUTE

By Rev. JAS. DOUGLAS, M.A.

C. H. Spurgeon WITH LIFE-LIKE PORTRAIT.

The Rev. THOMAS SPURGEON says of this book:—

"I have been happily conscious that the book is not a mere narration of oft-told facts (with some fiction) and worn-out anecdotes. The 'Sketch' is good; the 'Portraiture' is better; the 'Tribute' is best of all. Right glad am I that Mr. Douglas has succeeded so eminently in his difficult but congenial task."

From "The Sword and Trowel":—

"Since the 'Prince of Preachers' has been promoted to glory, many tributes of love and esteem have been rendered to his memory; but the one before us far excels all others that we have seen at present."

From "Word and Work":—

"In its own way it is quite unique, as it deals with Mr. Spurgeon not from the outside, but is a keen, loving, sympathetic analysis and exposition of the powers, purposes, and achievements of the great modern apostle."

From "The Rock":—

"The information is original, the author having exceptional opportunities of 'a personal and private' nature of knowing Mr. Spurgeon. We have no doubt the book will command a wide popularity."

From "The King's Own":—

"It is far and away the very best presentation of Mr. Spurgeon that has yet appeared. This book should become THE gift book of the season from all Spurgeon-lovers to their friends."

By Rev. JOHN MACPHERSON.

With Life-like Portrait.

Presentation Edition; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

Cheap Edition; Cloth boards, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

"We very strongly advise every reader who wishes to get a glimpse of a real man, a real Christian, and a real worker for eternity, to get this volume. And we make bold to say that every out-and-out Christian who peruses it will rise from the study saying, 'After all, reality is the great thing,' and be thankful that he has been in the company of this noble man of God."—The Weekly Review.

Cheap Editions:
Tinted covers, 6d.; Cloth limp, 1s.

"The spirit of a great reformer's life has seldom been presented in a form at once so brief and lively. There is no disproportion in the memoir: it portrays Wesley in all the aspects of a character that was many-sided. Every page sparkles with edifying anecdote. . . A better bit of biographical work in the same compass and at so moderate a price we have seldom seen."—Christian Leader.

"The popular and powerful preacher, whose efforts synchronized with those of the Wesleys, is here set before us in a striking piece of portraiture; and the extracts from his diaries give many life-like touches to the sketch. The details of his work, both in America and in this country, are full and complete; and afford a striking proof of his immense capacity and unceasing energy."—Publishers' Circular.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving a portrait and sketch of Rev. C. S. ADAMA VAN SCHELTEMA, a veteran Gospel worker and temperance advocate in the Netherlands.

Having closed his two weeks' work in Dublin, Mr. Moody proceeds to Reading, Derks, where he will conduct services to-day and to-morrow. As stated elsewhere, Oxford will also receive a visit. At a breakfast meeting of ministers and business men held in Dublin on Tuesday morning, the committee of the mission arranged to continue the special effort in that city and other parts of Ireland. Noon meetings for business men will be held during Mr. McNeill's stay in Dublin.

We have already noted the large attention given to the Dublin mission by the daily press of the city, whose reports of the evangelist's addresses have been much appreciated in distant parts. It is a remarkable fact that some of the Roman Catholic dailies have had very favourable notices of the services in the Rotunda. We doubt not that our Dublin contemporaries will have the sagacity and enterprise to give good reports of Mr. McNeill's addresses.

The clergy and Nonconformist ministers of the Lambeth and Southwark district are about to co-operate in organising a committee to prevent overlapping in the administration of charity, and to see that all the destitute of the neighbourhood are cared for during the ensuing winter. In view of this action, Rev. C. B. Meyer, of Christ Church, Westminster-bridge-road, is desirous of hearing from any friends in other places who may have had experience in organising united committees of this description, so as to benefit by their suggestions and successes. Mr. Meyer, it may be added, has opened one of the schoolrooms in connection with his church, so that the unemployed may resort thither in the forenoons and consult the newspapers, with a view of securing work.

The leading feature dwelt upon in all the references to the body of Christ—the Church wherever mentioned in the New Testament, is that there are members each with a different function, but only one body, animated, enabled, and impelled by one and the self-same Spirit. And all the exhortations which follow this presentation of the pattern of the body—the antitype of the tabernacle and the temple—have for their keynote love, peace, mutual helpfulness, co-operation—in the word, love; for God is love, and love is the fulfilling of the law, not of the Mosaic law only, but of all law; for the nature of God must be the fundamental principle or law of all his works, and his nature and his name is love.

A correspondent who is a railway shareholder, writes to us defending himself and fellow-shareholders from some of the strictures of the author of the sermon we lately published on "Sabbath-breaking Companies." He contends that if it be morally incumbent on Christians to relinquish railway investments because of abuses such as Sunday traffic, by parity of reasoning, all Christians should eschew civil or political obligations because wrongs are sometimes done by Parliaments and public bodies. Similarly, he thinks that every ratepayer would be guilty because the money he contributes to the national exchequer may be spent in warlike preparations. Doubtless there is force in his contention. If all Christians were to renounce their share in the management or control of railways, the evils of Sunday traffic would flourish unchecked; on the other hand, Christian shareholders have the power and the opportunity of influencing railway officials to minimise, if not to abolish, the wrong that such traffic generally implies.

We were speaking with an old sea captain in Dublin, a few days ago, concerning the fearful catastrophes by land and sea which have been so frequent lately. Our friend now writes us:—"It will be well for you and others to caution the travelling public against the unseemly and very dangerous rage for undue speed in travelling, and the love of socalled 'beating the record.' How little people think of the great peril they run when they are urging captains of ships and drivers of engines to make short cuts, and lessen the time of the journey by land or sea."

The Irish Times echoes the judgment of all sensible people when it says:—"No railway accident in recent years has exceeded in ruin and horror the wrecking of the Scotch express near Thirsk by collision with a goods train, which has killed by awful slaughter nine persons and injured very many. The marvel is that the destruction was even limited to this harrowing record. The disaster was plainly the result of carelessness, wherever the fault lay. The moral of the calamity also points to the special risk of the high rates of reckless speed which travellers nowadays demand, and companies are very ready to grant, to their habit of impatience and desire to 'annihilate time.' Drivers and signalmen cannot be employed for an excessive number of hours except at such tremendous risks that it would be imagined that railway boards would always shrink from the responsibility of economising by the method of taking too much out of the individual. We know, however, that they do tempt the danger, and means to visit the error with penalty sufficient to prevent the evil must be rigorously adopted."

So far as the travelling public are concerned, it is to be hoped that the fearful loss of life and not less painful injury inflicted may check the insane rush of present day life. "It is the pace that kills."

From certain recently published statistics of crime it appears that the number of criminals known to the police in England and Wales in 1891 was less by two per cent. than that recorded for the preceding year. There has also been a reduction in the number of indictable offences and of "known thieves and depredators" under sixteen years of age. Various reasons may be and have been assigned for such an improvement, e.g., a better system of police, improved legislation, and more discriminating administration of the law, "the spread of education, and better rates of remuneration to the toiling classes." But if the matter be probed a little more deeply it will be found that a very large share of credit is justly due to the various Christian agencies. To give only one example—the influence brought to bear upon a very large number of criminals at the critical moment of their leaving prison has been a powerful factor in reducing the mass of crime. It is by such means as these, by Christian energy and tact, by rescuing and training the young, by judicious sympathy and help, rather than by the policeman's truncheon, that transgressors are to be led into honest courses.

A very remarkable improvement has taken place since the gin-drinking Mrs. Gamp was the representative of English nurses. The nurse of to-day is sometimes a refined and cultured lady, and is generally a well-conducted, pleasant-mannered, and efficient aid to the physician or surgeon. The homes and institutes for nurses have very much helped forward this improved condition. But the system needs revision in the interest alike of the public and of the nurses. They are, for the most part, in the hands of the Ritualistic party in the Church, and the advantages accruing to the nurses, especially to those most competent and reliable, are inadequate.

With regard to the first objection, it is very undesirable for their own sakes that the nurses should be brought under ecclesiastical influences, to which, if weak-kneed, they succumb, or by which, if steadfast to principle, they are oppressed. And it is objectionable that into families where a nurse is required such an influence should be introduced, whether desired or not. With regard to the second point, it is hardly equitable that while higher rates are charged in contagious or mental cases, the nurse, who runs all the risk of infection and incurs all the responsibility of ministering to the mind diseased, gets no addition to her salary.

Whether by co-operative institutes, or by any other means, it is very desirable that qualified and certificated Nurses should be easily accessible to those who need them; that they should not be subjected to ecclesiastical domination through committee or matron; and that they should derive the full benefit of their labour. Homes for Christian Nurses, with these ends in view, are in every way to be desired; and there are surely evangelical and large-hearted ladies who could do much to provide them.

In his new book, REVELATION AND THE BIBLE, Mr. R. F. Horton says:—

The numerical statement of Job's possessions, the methodical account of his bereavements, and the exact duplication of the property in the day when "the Lord turned the captivity of Job," show that the details are simply the product of poetic composition.

In the narrative of the impotent man (John v.), the period during which he lay by the Pool of Bethesda was thirty and eight years, with this result, that he had no man to help him, and he could not help himself. It was when the Lord "saw that there was no man, and wondered that there was no intercesso that his own arm brought salvation, and s righteousness it sustained Him" (Isa. lix. 16). "Jesus saith unto him, Rise, take up thy bed, and walk." This was one of the "signs" which are a characteristic feature of the Gospel of John. Its point is this: The impotent man was a sign to impotent Israel: a memorial of their past and a symbol of their then present condition. As the man lay thirty and eight years, becoming weaker every year, until all human strength and help were gone, so Moses records of Israel:—

And the days in which we came from Kadesh-Barnea, until we were come over the brook Zered, were thirty and eight years; until all the generation of the men of war were wasted out of the host, as the Lord sware unto them (Deut. ii. 14).

The period was the same, thirty-eight years; the result was the same, the wasting out of human strength; the Divine dealing was the same, Israel was brought into the land by the power of God, the impotent man was healed by the power of God manifest in the flesh. Are we to say that "the numerical statement" of the years at the pool, agreeing with the years of Israel's wandering in the wilderness, "show that the details are simply the product of poetic composition"?

It is strange and well worth considering how a preacher of Christian perfection can, at the same time, be the author of two of the most shallow and yet most daring assaults on Scripture. His last book helps to solve the enigma: he has sat so long at the feet of Professor Driver, that he has become his echo. It is a proof of the inherent inspiration of the Scripture that, torn to pieces as it is by the superficial and dim-sighted so-called higher criticism, it should still convince the conscience and [illegible] the affections of one who knows it only in its mutilated form. We think so highly of Mr. Horton's Christian sincerity, that we regard these books as far more mischievous than those of merely professional Higher Critics.

We have never ceased to protest against the ungodly thirst for riches represented by the establishment of the Monte Carlo gambling agency. Its income during the past year has been £920,000, an amount representing misery sufficient to mark the place as the plague spot of Europe. We are glad to learn that the Prince of Monaco, since his marriage, has not touched the £50,000 a year paid annually to him for the concession. He has spent the money in building a cathedral and in new schools. The contract expires in 1913, and it is said it will not then be renewed. We hope that, on religious, moral, and social grounds, it will be closed long before that period.

One feature of the expenditure is specially degrading; £32,000 are annually spent in bribing newspapers and newspaper correspondents. Their instructions are, "Do nothing, say nothing, let us alone." But it is too late in the day to think that public opinion is to be muzzled even by the expenditure of all their unholy gain.

A recently published book, called THE NEW EXODUS: A STUDY OF ISRAEL IN RUSSIA, lets in much light upon the cruelty, the treachery, and the oppression which have marked the treatment of the Jews within her borders, by a nation which scarcely deserves the name of civilised. In a review of this striking volume, The Daily Chronicle has the following remarks:—

The financiers who sit in Lombard-street with their date-calendars in front of them in Hebrew, are without competitors, and only the future can reveal what use they intend to make of the new freedom which they so greatly prize. A single glimpse by anybody who sees behind the scenes, even a little in our contemporary life, is enough to reveal how many of the chief forces which control nations and public opinion are to-day in the hands of Hebrews.

The manner in which the Jew is coming to the front, not only in his special department of finance, but in politics, in journalism, in literature, science, and art, is one of those signs of the times which is not to be explained away as the merely natural sequence of certain historical events or as a passing phase of political or social development. It is a link in the chain of God's dealings with his chosen but now scattered people. But while noting this present power and prosperity of one section of the Jewish nation, it is well to bear in mind that it is not along the line of worldly prosperity or social or political influence that the ultimate pre-eminence of Israel is to be sought: his way to the Divinely-destined glory, and supremacy, and blessing, lies through discipline, trial, and terrible distress. The dross must be "purely purged away" before "Zion shall be redeemed with judgment."

It is somewhat startling to find the problem of overcrowding a pressing one in Australia. It appears that, as in the old country, there is there a great tendency towards congestion in the towns. It is thought that the matter will have to be dealt with by the Legislature, and it will be interesting to see what measures will there be proposed. From this condition of things in Victoria it is evident that the land difficulty is not the only one that requires to be solved before we can get back to healthy national life.

The Opium Curse.

THE opium trade has been called England's sin and China's curse. Both sin and curse it may prove itself to be to both nations yet ere their hands are free from it. The present extent of the curse in China is alarming, and it still increases. The Western provinces produce enough for home consumption, enormous as that is, and yet leave a margin for export to other provinces.

The vice has fastened itself upon all classes and all ages. Recently the writer was guest with a responsible mandarin, and through him was brought into friendly acquaintance with several other officials and students. All of these smoked the drug, most of them quite heavily. The earliest memories of many children, both at home, among friends, and at school, are of opium in its most seductive forms.

One of the most alarming features now is the loss of conscience on the subject. It is no longer a shame to smoke—indeed it is considered a shame not to smoke when all others are doing so, much the same as it used to be considered a want of tone in anyone who could not drink his share with the rest when drinking was more common in Western lands than is now the case, happily. Not to smoke is to be strange. In the city of Suifu there are said to be over two thousand opium dens, and in the smaller city of Luchow thirteen hundred such places are reported. To the question, "Do you smoke opium?" one often gets the reply, "Who doesn't smoke?" a counter-question that is both reply and comment.

Why do they smoke? may be asked and may be answered in a sentence—the moral deterioration of the people combined with the seductive character of the habit. It begins in play, it ends in grim earnest. There is a growing fascination in the way it is taken, this subtle drug. The smoker lies down to it—bliss in itself to an Oriental. Such a position affords an opportunity for the gossip the Oriental loves. The opium becomes a pet to him; he fondles it with his fingers, heats it over the tiny lamp; its fumes enwrap him and finally send him off to slumber and dreams.

Who shall measure the damage wrought by this facile agent for suicide—they can commit suicide and yet die decently and painlessly! To the lack of adequate medical attendance and accurate medical skill may he traced the large use of opium. It is a panacea to a people whose medical faculty is in the barbarous condition of Europe in the dark ages. Opium is an added plea for the quick evangelisation of China.

THE NEW FRIEDENHEIM.

SUNNYSIDE, the new Home of Peace at South Hampstead, was full to overflowing on Monday afternoon, when H.R.H. the DUCHESS of TECK opened the Home, giving the following touching reason for her special interest therein:—

"I have very great pleasure in declaring this Home open, and the pleasure is all the greater perhaps because I promised this to a dying friend. She is no more, but she interested my daughter and myself greatly in a Home of this kind. It was a much smaller home, and I did not even know at the time that this was in contemplation. She herself, as I have said, was passing away with every comfort around her, and she felt so strongly the contrast between her own position and that of others not so situated, that she pleaded warmly with me if ever I had the opportunity of befriending a Home of this kind I would do it. I am so glad, therefore, that the opportunity is now given me, and more I need not say, for I am sure you have heard enough to commend this Home to your special favour."

Mr. T. A. DENNY, who presided, recalled something of the history of the work, and stated that about £3,500 is wanted at once to complete the furnishing and fitting, and enable forty inmates to be admitted.

Dr. A. T. SCHOFIELD, without whose generous assistance the work could never have been got through, gave an account of the development which had taken place. The determination to have an enlarged Friedenheim was formed at a meeting last year at the doctor's house, but for nine months the council sought in vain for a suitable place. Now the visitors could see how a large dwelling house had been converted into a complete hospital, with admirable wards on every floor, and comfortable staff accommodation. According to Dr. Schofield the patients at the Home die on an average in three months, but the care bestowed upon them is rewarded in some cases by restoration to health in defiance of all the doctors. Some of the rooms are as yet unfurnished, because no furniture is allowed entrance until paid for, and the last available penny has been spent.

All communications should be addressed, Miss Davidson, Sunnyside, Upper Avenue-road, South Hampstead, N.W.

THE RUSSIAN STUNDISTS.

DEAR SIR,—The communication upon this subject in the last issue of THE CHRISTIAN is calculated to call forth the warmest sympathy and interest of Christian people in England, and I hope it will lead to much prayer on behalf of our suffering brethren.

It would be unwise to give details, but perhaps you will permit me to state in your columns that steps are being already taken in the directions suggested by your correspondent, and a fund is being raised to relieve the physical necessities of many of the families of the Stundists who have been exiled. I feel sure you will gladly receive any sums which your readers may entrust to you for this purpose, and I have the pleasure to communicate to you privately the channel through which these gifts are being distributed in various districts in Russia.

The publication of particulars would only increase the difficulties from which the Stundists are now suffering. Yours faithfully,

A. J. ARNOLD,
Secretary, Evangelical Alliance.

Joshua and His Life-Work.*

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.,
CHRIST CHURCH, WESTMINSTER BRIDGE ROAD.

"Be strong and very courageous."—Joshua i. 7.

As Joshua stood on the threshold of his great work, he was repeatedly bidden to be strong and of good courage. Some little time before the death of his predecessor a great convocation of all Israel had been summoned, at which Moses had solemnly transferred his office to his successor, and had given him a charge, saying, "Be strong and of good courage, for thou shalt bring the children of Israel into the land." And now the voice of God reiterates the charge and repeats the injunction.

At first this startles us. What! must all they whom God uses be strong? Is it essential that there should be strength of limb and muscle in the physical and moral constitution of those who are called to do the divine biddings in the world? Because, if that be so, we who are like Ehud, left-handed; like Gideon, least in our father's house; or like Saul of Tarsus, painfully conscious of weakness, can never get beyond the rank and file in the army of the Lord.

And yet, may not this reiterated appeal indicate that the heart of Joshua misgave him, and that he was conscious of his utter inadequacy to fulfil the great commission that was thrust upon him? Probably he had never dreamt of so high an honour, so vast a responsibility. He had been content to be Moses' minister, satisfied to wait below while his master passed into the cloud to hold fellowship with God; staying in the tent to serve Moses if he were required, or in his absence to guard its contents; zealous for his master's honour, when Eldad and Medad prophesied; glad that all the glories of the conquest of Eastern Palestine decked with laurels the closing days of the great lawgiver and leader.

When Moses first received the sentence of death on the further side of the Jordan, none could have been more deeply grieved than his faithful friend and attendant. But the thought of succeeding him never presented itself to his mind. Indeed, Moses himself does not appear to have thought of him in this direction, for we learn that he besought the Lord to appoint a man over the congregation, that they should not be as sheep without a shepherd (Num. xxvii. 17). In that prayer Joshua may have joined, thinking all the while that Caleb, the lion-hearted, or Phinehas the priest, or one of the sons of Moses, might take his place, but not supposing that he would be called to it. His one aim had been to enhance the glory and lighten the cares of Moses, and he was too absorbed in his personality to be greatly conscious of his own.

When, therefore, the call came to him to assume the office which Moses was vacating, his heart failed him, and he needed every kind of encouragement and stimulus, both from God and man. "Be strong" means that he felt weak; "Be of good courage" means that he was affrighted; "Be not thou dismayed" means that he seriously considered whether he would not have to give up the task. He was a worm and no man: how should he deliver Israel?

It is when men are in this condition that God approaches them with the summons to undertake vast and overwhelming responsibilities. Most of us are too strong for Him to use us, too full of our own schemes, and plans, and ways of doing things. He must empty us, and humble us, and bring us down to the dust of death, so low that we need every straw of encouragement, every leaf of help; and then he will raise us up, and make us as the rod of his strength. The world talks of the survival of the fittest. But God gives power to the faint, and increases might to them that have no strength; He perfects his strength in weakness, and uses things that are not to bring to nought things that are. If Ehud had been right-handed, he would never have judged Israel; if Gideon had been the greatest instead of the least in his father's house, he would never have vanquished Midian; if Saul had been as eloquent in his speech as he confesses himself to have been contemptible, he would never have preached the Gospel from Jerusalem round to Illyricum.

Let us consider the sources of Joshua's strength.

I. A FAITHFUL PAST.—"After the death of Moses the servant of the Lord, the Lord spake unto Joshua, the son of Nun, Moses' minister." In his case, as always, the eternal rule held good, that faithfulness in a few things is the condition of rule over many things, and the loyalty of a servant is the stepping-stone to the royalty of the throne. Of the Highest it is said that he was obedient to death, even the death of the cross, and that therefore, God highly exalted him, and gave Him the Name above every name. We must learn obedience by the things that we suffer, ere we can be lifted from the dunghill to sit with princes.

The previous years of Joshua's past had been full of high and noble endeavour. For forty years, if Josephus be correct in his statement as to his age at the death of Moses, he shared the slavery and sorrows of a captive race. His childish eyes must have become accustomed to witness the brutality of the Egyptian taskmasters, even if his own shoulders were not torn by their cruel whips. As a scion of one of the leading families in Ephraim (Num. xiii. 8—16), he may have taken some leading part in the marshalling of the Exodus, and there approved himself as worthy of all trust. His conflict with Amalek, his good report of the Land of Promise, his refusal to take any part in the disastrous attack on the Canaanites, his eagerness for the good name and fame of Moses, his patient endurance of the weary years of wandering, all prove that his was no common character. The aloe blooms but once in a hundred years, but every hour of all that century is needed to produce the delicate texture and resplendent beauty of the flower. The deed of a Grace Darling is not the sudden outburst of the moment that gives it birth, but the result of long years of self-discipline, courage, and ministry to others. And this summons of Joshua to the leader's place in Israel was the guerdon of more than eighty years of faithful service.

None of us can tell for what God is educating us. We fret and murmur at the narrow round and daily task of ordinary life, not realising that it is only thus that we can be prepared for the high and holy office which awaits us. We must descend before we can ascend. We must suffer, if we would reign. We must take the via crucis (the way of the cross) submissively and patiently, if we would tread the via lucis (the way of light). We must endure the polishing from the sand-paper, full of tiny grit, if we would be shafts in the quiver of Emmanuel. God's will comes to thee and me in daily circumstances, in little things equally as in great; meet them bravely; be at your best always, though the occasion be one of the very least; dignify the smallest summons by the greatness of your response; so the call will come to you as to Joshua, the son of Nun, Moses' minister.

II. A DISTINCT CALL.—"Arise, go over this Jordan, thou, and all this people, unto the land which I do give to them." "Be strong and of good courage, for thou shalt bring the children of Israel into the land which I sware unto them." When a man knows that he has been called to do a certain work, he is invincible. He is not unconscious of his own deficiencies, whether they be natural or intellectual. He is not insensible of difficulty; none so quick as he to see the great stones, the iron gates, the walled cities, the broad and flowing rivers; he is not invulnerable to the shafts of ridicule and adverse criticism; but from all these he looks steadily away to the declared purpose of God, and yields himself to be the channel through which it may operate.

Joshua's task was a very difficult one. The people of Canaan were well versed in the arts and sciences of the time, acquired from commerce with the Phœnicians on the north, and the Egyptians on the south. One of the most interesting discoveries of recent years has shown that the Hittites were a great people, highly cultured, and of sufficient importance to rival Assyria and Egypt. It seems preposterous to suppose that a nation of a few years' existence was so soon to dispossess nations that had gained the country by conquest and were prepared to fight for every inch of territory by the most approved methods of warfare. The Jewish legend says that when Joshua, appalled at the greatness of the task, rent his clothes and fell on his face, weeping to think of his incompetence, Moses lifted him up and comforted him with the assurance that God had foreseen and provided for all. Whether it were so or not, it is at least clear that the reiterated assurance of God to settle Israel by means of Joshua, must have been a great source of strength to him.

The supreme enquiry for each of us, when summoned to a new work, is not whether we possess sufficient strength or qualification for it, but if we have been called to it of God; and when that is so there is no further cause for anxiety. If it is in his plan that we should march through a river, or attack a walled town, or turn to flight an army, we have simply to go forward. He will make the mountains a way. Rivers will dry up, walls will fall down, armies shall be scattered as snow in summer. There is no such thing as impossibility, when God says, Forward, soul, arise, go over this Jordan.

III. THE SENSE OF THE PRESENCE OF GOD.—"As I was with Moses, so I will be with thee. I will not fail thee nor forsake thee." There was one particular in which Joshua would always come far behind his great predecessor. Both were in necessary and constant communication with God, but Joshua had to seek counsel through the High Priest, whereas Moses had enjoyed direct intercourse with God, "speaking unto him face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend." Still Joshua the son of Nun was equally sure of the personal companionship of his great Ally, though he lacked the direct vision.

There have been generals whose presence on the field of battle has been the presage and guarantee of victory. Not only have they inspired the soldiers with a sense of confidence in their leadership, but they have encouraged them by their personal prowess and bravery. There is a marvellous sense of security and courage when a Christiana, a Mr. Fearing, or a Miss Much-Afraid is assured of the presence of a Greatheart, who has never turned his back on a foe. And a lonely, trembling soul dares to step bravely across the margin of life into the unknown beyond: to go down unabashed into the chill waters of death, because it can sing, Thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff, they comfort me.

All through the arduous campaign that followed, nothing could daunt Joshua's courage whilst that assurance was ever ringing its silver tones in the belfry of his memory: "I will be with thee." Ah, it is well when we can so encourage ourselves in God. The fire is heated seven times, but He is with me, and no smell of fire shall pass upon my flesh. The river is deep, but He is with me, and its waters shall not sweep me off my feet. Mine enemies are many, and they hate me with cruel hatred, but He is with me, and no weapon that is formed against me shall prosper, and every tongue that shall rise in judgment against me He will condemn. Who can wax faint-hearted whilst He holds the right-hand saying, "Fear not, I am with thee"? Moses dies, and is buried in the lonely valley of Peor, but the Lord Jesus ever lives to save unto the uttermost, and is with us all the days, even unto the end of the age.

IV. THE INDWELLING OF THE WORD OF GOD.—"This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth, but thou shalt meditate therein day and night." Coal contains within its texture the strength absorbed from the sun in bygone ages; so words will pass on to men the heroic thoughts which thrilled the souls of those who spake them first. There are words, as there are strains of music, which cannot be uttered without nerving men to dare and do, to attempt and achieve. A woman will be strong to wait and suffer for long years in the strength of a sentence spoken by her lover as he parted from her. An army has before now forgot sleepless nights and hungry marches in the stirring harangue of its general. And is not this what the prophet meant, when he said, "Thy words were found and I did eat them, and thy words were unto me a joy, and the rejoicing of my heart"; and what Jesus meant when He said, "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life?"

We must mediate on the words of God, because it is through the Word of God that the Spirit of God comes in fulness to be the mighty occupant of our inner man. This, after all, is the secret of strength, to be possessed of the strong Son of God, strengthened by his indwelling might, and filled by his Spirit.

We can do all things when Christ is in us in unthwarted power. The only limit lies in our faith and capacity, or, in other words, in our absolute submission to his indwelling. Little children can overcome when there is within them a Stronger than their foes. Weaklings may do exploits when the Mighty Conqueror who travels in the greatness of his strength makes them the vehicle of his progress. Nobodies, nonentities, broken reeds, bleached jawbones, quills plucked from the wild-fowl, and arrows that a babe could snap, accomplish marvels because they are the channels through which the mysterious current of Divine power and Godhead flows forth to the world.

Our risen Lord is charged with power. It is stored in Him as in a cistern for us. As the force of the brain is communicated to the members by the energy of the vital current flashing along the nerves, so does the power of Jesus come to us, his members, by the Holy Ghost. And if we would have that blessed Spirit, we must seek Him not only in the fervid meeting or in the great convocation, but through the Word, wherein his force is stored. Meditate on it day and night, till it yield to thee strength and good courage, drawn from the nature of the glorified Redeemer. Thy God hath commanded thy strength; claim it from Jesus, through faith, by his Spirit, and in his Word.

Be strong in your weakness through the strengthening might of Christ. Take weakness, weariness, faint-heartedness, and difficulty into his presence; they will melt as hoar-frost in sunbeams. Give yourself wholly up to Him to do or die, as He shall choose. Then anoint your head and wash your face. You shall have your inheritance in Timnath-heres (the portion of the sun); you shall make your way prosperous, and have good success; and you shall lead a nation to inherit the Land of Promise.

MR. HENRY THORNE AT CLAPTON.

A ten days' mission by Mr. Thorne has been held at Upper Clapton Congregational Church. The faithful preaching of the Gospel has been graciously blessed by God, and the power of the Spirit has been manifest in each service. Numbers have found their way into the enquiry room, and have publicly confessed Christ as their Saviour, whilst many others have been deeply impressed and led to decision. Christians have been greatly encouraged and strengthened, and altogether it has been indeed a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

On the evening of Monday week, Mr. Thorne met the enquirers with the Christian workers at tea in the lecture hall of the church, and addressed to them some words of comfort and exhortation. Afterwards a "praise meeting" was held and largely attended, numerous testimonies being given of spiritual blessing received under the ministry of our brother. E. P. I.

COUNSEL TO MISSIONARIES.—The Church Missionary Intelligencer gives the address to outgoing missionaries, delivered recently by Canon Hoare. In conclusion, the venerable clergyman said:—"I will give you three parting words, which I hope you will remember when you are far away on your mission. They are the words, 'For,' 'With,' 'In,' and I want you to follow them out. For Christ. Look at Him as your loving friend, and seek to do his will; for He says, 'Ye are My friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you.' You are going out for Him—not for the Society, not for the Church, but for Him, for that blessed Saviour who redeemed you by his blood. With Christ. A perpetual companion is here described working with you, not merely by you. Then, in Him. That is the secret of the imputed righteousness. 'In the Lord have I righteousness and strength;' not without Him. If you go forth for Christ to do his will, with Christ to be a fellow-labourer with God, in Christ, accepted in Him, and, therefore, standing in imputed righteousness—may you not go with good courage?"

THE CHEAPEST IN THE END.

By T. J. Barnardo, F.R.C.S.Ed.

Who that possesses even common feelings of humanity can peruse the following notes of cases recently admitted, without being assured that this work of waif and stray rescue must be infinitely dear to Christ's own heart and well worthy of the unselfish, generous support of his people everywhere?

Take, for example, the case of those wee mites of humanity, Polly G——, aged two years, and Dick, her brother, aged seven. Here is an extract from a trustworthy opinion concerning their drunken and degraded mother; "She is the most untruthful woman I have ever come across. She says anything that comes first, utterly regardless of the consequences to herself and others. To take the children from her would, in my opinion, be salvation to them, as nothing but vice and wretchedness await them with her." There are depths, and there are still lower depths of misery; but surely at the very lowest level, at the very basement of the pit, among what I may call the Aborigines of Woeland, must lie such little folks as Polly and Dick. Subjected to barbarous treatment and shocking neglect, these two forlorn waifs would have been better circumstanced without such a mother. Of her, I will only say she was without natural affection. Having been turned adrift for confirmed drunkenness and gross misconduct, she had seen the inside of workhouse after workhouse; the children, meanwhile, although living the dreariest of lives inside the Union walls, obtained thus a brief respite from their usual wretchedness; and when she was again cast adrift, she would sink to the lowest level of neglect and cruelty, sometimes all three herding in a common lodging-house, or more often passing the whole night on the streets.

Ah, what can be done to turn Polly and Dick, and their hundreds and thousands of brothers and sisters, back again into the paths where their heritage of rights under God's appointment shall await them? Here are meanwhile my two little rescues. Who will blame me for having consented to the removal from so worthless a mother of the responsibility of these two precious young lives? Over such as she the law is powerless: the evil tendencies of her nature lie far deeper than human ordinance can touch. Her parental responsibilities have been and are unfelt, and, as it is, she and hers have been supported for years by State provision, and the children, if not removed from her custody and influence, must grow up, if they live, as hundreds of such children do, vicious or criminal. God help them!

In Christ's name I opened my doors to these uncared-for little people, and hope by his help to give them an upbringing which will, I trust, efface the past, and open to them the vista of a happy future.

Doubtless it will be many years before either of them goes forth again from within our borders; at least twelve years for Polly, and eight or nine years for Dick; unless, indeed, I send them after a year or two for adoption in some Christian family abroad. Is it a long price for these scraps of humanity to total them up at £16 a year for all that period? Perhaps so? Yet, Mr. Economist, let me remind you that a criminal costs you £80 a year, that a workhouse pauper costs you £45 a year, and that Polly and Dick, if you leave them alone, represent criminal and pauper in the making. So to you first, dear Sir, on the ground of economy, I make confident appeal for my young protéges' subsistence; and, beyond you, to the Christians of all the churches who follow the children's Christ, and who see in their young souls the gems that shall sparkle in the Redeemer's crown. I lay Polly and Dick and their thousands of unrescued brothers and sisters at your feet, and at my Lord's, and I know my appeal shall not be altogether in vain.

The great comfort in Polly and Dick's case is that they are so very young; for experience shows that a genuine street waif, in whose blood the "wander corpuscle" circulates, is a much more difficult person to deal with. Of such it may be said that he has been so long a law unto himself that he chafes under the restraints of authority. He has slept and lived "anyhow" so long that he cannot understand a clean bed, regular meals, and an ordered life. I have known many an instance in which a boy or lad rescued from a wandering life has, I believe, spent in the Homes at first weeks and months of real discomfort, if not of misery, in the process of learning civilised ways and modes of living. Boys, and even girls, who have been used to the streets from childhood, and who have been leading an unattached life, require the very greatest tact and care to habituate them to the restraints of civilisation, and many an escapade has to be tolerated before the rescued waif settles down to his or her life-work.

Such a waif was Freddie, an orphan lad from Liverpool, whom I admitted through our "Ever Open Door" in that city a few months ago, and who so far as early training was concerned had verily "never had a chance" until he came to me. His father, who was a blind beggar, had died several years before, and his mother had predeceased her husband. Of his mother's family no particulars could be obtained. An elder brother had emigrated years before to New South Wales. Freddie was, therefore, practically homeless, without friends or relatives who could aid him.

He accepted the inevitable, and after his father's death did as hundreds do—betook himself to the streets, sleeping in common lodging-houses, or out in the open. For a time he was enrolled in a shoeblack society, and he subsequently found an engagement in an oil-cake factory. But the restlessness born of a street life was strong upon him, and he threw up his situation to rove the country with a barrel organ. "His chief characteristics," wrote our correspondent in the case, "appear to be a very changeable disposition, and inability to continue in any place long." But I found there was absolutely nothing else against his character, and as he was beyond question destitute, homeless, and friendless, he obtained admission.

Freddie professed himself anxious to do well; yet even during his temporary stay in our branch, while inquiries were being made into his case, he absconded, giving no other excuse than that he "couldn't stay so long in a house." A few days afterwards, however, he returned of his own accord, and on his permanent admission to the Homes he set to work with a will, and gave no trouble beyond what was due to restlessness and a mercurial temperament. It was instructive and indeed touching to observe his struggles against his besetting fault, and encouraging to note how he steadily won the victory.

In a short time he began to "settle down," and soon he commended himself to every one by his docility, diligence, and trustworthiness. I sent him out this year to Canada, with his restlessness either wholly purged out of him, or in process of being transformed into an energy which in the coming years may, by God's blessing, mean independence and happiness. Needless to add that, while under my care, no pains were spared to lead the lad to Christ, and in heart and mind, the seed of the Gospel has been sown to bear fruit I trust in the days to come. The £25 which I spent in Freddie's rescue and reclamation will, without doubt, be amply repaid, not only in the withdrawal of such a waste force from the city streets, but in its transformation into stability and usefulness.

Such is the engrossing and deeply encouraging work we are carrying on in London and in seven provincial centres unceasingly; our doors ever open day and night to the genuinely homeless waif of the streets, or to the orphan child on the brink of destitution. Nearly 5000 girls and boys are under my care to-day, and look to me for food, maintenance, and Christian instruction. Alas! my store is bare and my purse empty. The burden at such a time would be intolerable if God were not with me; and to his people everywhere I commend the cause of the children with a grateful and expectant heart.

THE BOYS' BRIGADE.—The eighth annual meeting of the Brigade Council was recently held in the Y.M.C.A. Buildings, Sheffield. The report showed a marked increase in the strength of the Brigade during the past year. The number of companies on the roll has increased from 418 to 490. These companies are connected with churches and Sunday-schools of all denominations. The officers have increased from 1301 to 1618, an increase of 317 in the course of the year. The boys have increased from 17,259 to 21,002, an increase of 3,743. Interesting statements regarding the progress of the movement were made by officers from different parts of England, Scotland, and Ireland. An illustrated booklet, by Professor Drummond, will be sent post free to any sending name and address to Headquarters' Office, 68, Bath-street, Glasgow.

THE CENTRE OF KNOWLEDGE.

BY DR. J. STALKER.*

After man's judgment and our own judgment, ere is another far more august—the judgment of d. It is only the recollection of this which will ep the manliest mind from becoming proud and arisaical. As, at night, I pass the day's work der review, I can see much to blame; but when I ss it on to God's hands, I know that his eye will ect a thousand faults where mine has noticed one. d, when I think of having to meet all my past life in, and hear his judgment on it from the great ite throne, I know that I have nothing to depend on t his infinite mercy and the precious blood of his n Jesus Christ, which cleanseth us from all sin.

I have been trying to lead you into the mystery self-knowledge, but let us try, before closing, to get the very centre. These are practical truths, and y are little worth unless they lead to action. Let show you in a couple of instances how they can used to solve the deep questions of the soul.

There is surely no more solemn question which a n can ask himself than this: Am I as yet a ristian in deed and in truth? About this there l be four opinions: the opinion of the world, the nion of friends, your own opinion, and the judgnt of God. There is, first, the opinion of the rld. We know what this is likely to be. We w how wide and how vague its opinion is about at makes a Christian. The name is a mere e of courtesy, which everyone may claim. Then, ondly, there is the opinion of your friends. It y be a mere echo of the opinion of the world, or nay be at the other extreme: they may refuse the name, unless you are able to pronounce the bboleth of some narrow coterie. Thirdly, what your own opinion? Fourthly, what, as far as can make it out from his Word, is the judgment God?

Which of these opinions are you going by? you satisfied if you simply come up to world's estimate and can pass muster in its gh judgment? We are hard ridden by conventalism in most departments of life; but surely a is lost altogether if he allows conventionalism ome into this holy of holies of his personality. ! shallow, shallow the man who, on this ques of destiny, is satisfied with any judgment except t which he has anxiously and deliberately arrived n the presence of God!

The other question which I would suggest to you ry by the method of our text is not less impor-t. Suppose any man feels that the secret wer given in his soul to the first question must in the negative, then this other question arises, ght I to become a Christian in deed and in truth? l on this also there are four judgments. The t is that of the world; and what is it? We all w. The world laughs at the suggestion: "You hristian, at your age! It is absurd! Enjoy your-; you can begin to think of religion when you too old to think of anything else." Secondly, re is the opinion of your friends. What is it? echo perhaps of the world's. Perhaps you even w that you have to endure bitter persecution, if real or earnest sense you become a Christian. perhaps it is the other way; perhaps you well w that this is the daily wish and prayer of all hearts which truly love you. Then, thirdly, re is your own judgment. What is it? What all the sane, great and sacred voices within you ng on the point? And, fourthly, you know what od's judgment.

Which of these judgments are you to go by? Is voice of the world to prevail, or will you rise in the strength of a man and say, "In God's ne I walk henceforth only in the way in which the sacred things I know, within and without, constraining me to go; from this hour I am ist's, wholly Christ's, and Christ's for ever"?

C.M.S. GLEANERS' UNION.

The sixth anniversary of this union for prayer and work in connection with Foreign Missions was held in Exeter Hall on Tuesday week, when it was stated that 46,288 members have been enrolled since the inauguration of the union in 1886.

Rev. B. Baring-Gould, who presided (in place of Mr. Eugene Stock, now in Australia) at the afternoon conference, dwelt on the two aims which Gleaners hold before them—work and prayer. Work to remove ignorance and prejudice with regard to missions, to circulate missionary literature, and raise funds for training lady missionaries. Prayer for fresh labourers to be thrust forth, for blessing on those now in the field, and at the present time very specially for Uganda affairs.

The missionaries chosen for special support by the Gleaners' Union for the present year are Rev. J. S. Hill, Bishop-designate of the Niger, Rev. J. F. A. Warner (of North India), and Miss Elise Kauffman, an Alsatian by birth, who has been a fellow-worker with Miss Goodall, of Lagos, but has now gone to the Palestine mission.

The financial report, submitted by Mr. E. M. Anderson, showed that after all expenses the Union had been able to hand over to the C.M.S. the sum of £1400.

Addresses followed by Miss Sarah Geraldine Stock, Miss Petrie, and Mrs. H. P. Grubb. Then came two lady missionaries, Mrs. A. E. Ball, of Scinde, and Miss Lawrence who has laboured in China since 1869.

In the evening the large hall was well filled. Archdeacon Long presided, and in his opening address referred to the two members of the union most in the minds of all that evening, Mr. Stock and Bishop Tucker. It was impossible that their hearts should not go out to them. He went on to speak in heartfelt tones of the way in which the country at large had rallied to their side at this critical time in the history of the Uganda Mission. He was thankful to Bishop Tucker for his statesmanlike pronouncement; to the C.M.S. committee for the way in which they had conducted this important affair; and to The Times for the significant stand which it had taken. He had been "almost startled" at seeing the leading journal of the day print an appeal to prayer for Uganda. The chairman then went on to speak a few words of counsel to Gleaners, whom he urged to make their union a practical, progressive, and prayerful one, in order that it might be also a living union.

Rev. G. C. Grubb followed with a burning address on "The Fire of the Lord" which fell on Mount Carmel, which he described as the Old Testament Pentecost. The story of Elijah and the prophets of Baal he applied to modern missionary needs. They must first get rid of all false fire before could come preparation for the reception of the true. That preparation entailed whole-hearted sacrifice and unceasing prayer. Then, after the false prophets had been slain, would come the sound of abundance of rain, but they must go not once or twice, but seven times, to the top of the Mount.

Rev. Obadiah Moore, Principal of the Grammar School, Sierra Leone, gave an encouraging account of the work in West Africa, begging the Gleaners to remember that amongst the hindrances to Christian work in that region was that they had not 1000 years of Christian experience to fall back upon as we had in England, and also that there were hundreds and thousands of heathen coming from the interior and settling in their very midst.

Archdeacon Winter represented the North-West American Mission, of which he spoke hopefully; and Rev. A. Clifford (Bishop-designate of Lucknow) gave an account of his future diocese, and based a powerful appeal upon the words of Lawrence, who "tried to do his duty."

The closing address was given by Rev. H. E. Fox, of Durham, who from the words "My Spirit" enforced the lesson that apart from God the Holy Ghost there can be no growth in spiritual work.

SUNDAY TRAVELLING.—At a recent special meeting of official members of the Hastings and St. Leonards Lord's Day Observance Society, a paper was read advocating a union of Christian shareholders for purposes of Sabbath Defence. The officers of the society will be pleased to correspond with any shareholder who may wish for information as to modes of procedure to be adopted in order to secure a better observance of the Day of Rest, in connection with companies. The office of the society is 1, Grand-parade, St. Leonards.

GOSPEL WORK IN TOULON.

Toulon, with its extensive dockyards and its imposing fleet, is the Portsmouth of France. The teeming population of a naval port—officers, cadets, sailors, regiments in garrison — make it a busy centre, but alas! a sink of vice. While the inhabitants are mostly Roman Catholics, at this place, where Huguenot convicts at the galleys were faithful unto death, the Protestants to-day rather hide their candle under a bushel. Some past attempts to rekindle the light have one by one been abandoned in so unpromising a field.

M. Marc Lombard writes from Villa des Galeries, Mourillon, Toulon:—After a long interval mission work has been resumed in Toulon. Instead of the old hall in a narrow street, a larger one in a main thoroughfare, formerly a café, was opened last February, thus answering the prayer of a lady fifteen years ago that this place should become a Gospel Hall. At the two week-night meetings there have been rapidly-increasing audiences, sprinkled with soldiers, eagerly listening to the message of salvation, while strollers from the city have been attracted on Sunday afternoons. At a social evening at the close of the season many expressed gratitude for the message delivered, while some, mostly of a humble class, joyfully co-operate in the work. With their aid, leaflets have been distributed in the market, on Bank holidays, and in the cemetery on All Saints' day.

A reading-room in a central square is eagerly frequented by soldiers and sailors; but, being inconveniently crowded, a much larger one is required. While offering Testaments for sale from house to house, shops, workshops, cafés have been entered and conversations held with all sorts and conditions; objections have been met and Scripture read, and prayer offered in most unlikely places. One hundred and eighty Testaments have been sold in very various centres, some sixty of them in the Quartier Réservé (district reserved by the French Government for vile purposes). Ladies, filled with loving courage, have visited the haunts of vice, where Gospel papers are eagerly welcomed, and have returned with hearts bleeding for the unhappy women found there.

A desire to restore some of these unfortunates to hope has led to the opening of a Home, affording shelter to such as may wish to free themselves from their evil surroundings. A Christian sister has offered to superintend, but the expense of this Home, which must now be furnished, has to be met. Visiting friends will be welcome, also helpers. Communications regarding the work may be sent to Mrs. Ward, 18, Lyndhurst-road, Hampstead.

MR. RICHARD WEAVER.

This faithful evangelist has lately concluded a series of special services at the Abington Hall, Northampton, which has accommodation for about 1,400. Many had been earnestly praying that this return visit might be even more blessed than the previous one, which was owned of God to the salvation of many who are now earnest and active Christians.

From the first of the services it was clearly manifest that the Gospel, as proclaimed by Mr. Weaver in his graphic and earnest way, was again drawing and holding. The congregations throughout were very large, especially on Sundays, when the building was packed; many who could not get seats preferring to stand rather than go away, while large numbers could not even gain admittance. The power of God was such that many went to the inquiry room, while believers were greatly rejoiced.

These services have furnished another proof that the people can still be drawn by the faithful and earnest preaching of the "old, old story."

CHINA INLAND MISSION.—There are not many people, we are sure, who have any definite idea of the magnitude of the work which the China Inland Mission is carrying on in proportion to the funds at its disposal. The burden is lightened in many ways. Some of its workers support themselves. Others are sustained by the churches in this and other lands from which they came. But even so, when we look at the network of stations, spreading out more widely year by year, and realise that the whole work is being done at a cost of less than £27,000, including all expenses both at home and in China of every kind, it is impossible not to feel that here, as in the Moravian Mission, every penny is made to render service.—Sunday Magazine.

Christian Endeavour.

THE MOVEMENT IN VICTORIA.

(From our Australian Correspondent.)

In my last letter I mentioned the progress being made by the Christian Endeavour movement in Victoria. The Endeavourers throughout the colonies are having a wonderful rallying time just now. Dr. F. E. Clark, founder of the movement, is visiting our colonial centres at present. His reception in Sydney was most cordial, and the societies there have had great times of blessing, as I learn from various sources. For the last ten days or so the Melbourne churches have been roused to a wonderful pitch of enthusiasm by the visit of the doctor. Crowds met him on his arrival at the railway station. The private reception of Mrs. and Dr. Clark was a most happy event, while their public reception in the beautiful, newly-decorated Congregational church in Collins-street was most enthusiastic.

The third annual convention of the Victorian Christian Endeavour Union was held partly in the Melbourne Town Hall and partly in the Congregational Church and Hall. The president for last year, Rev. Alfred Bird (Baptist), presided over most of the meetings on the first two days, and the Rev. A. R. Edgar (Wesleyan), the president-elect for 1892-93, occupied the chair the last day. These meetings have drawn together ministers and members of the various denominations in a happy manner, and the love and enthusiasm displayed at all the gatherings have been quite refreshing. We do not know whether we are Wesleyans or Baptists, Presbyterians or Anglicans; indeed all our angles are being rubbed off. Perhaps it has been the most delightful season Melbourne has seen, and there is every token that the happiest effects will remain.

Dr. Clark has, of course, taken a most prominent part in these great gatherings, and has endeared himself to one and all. Some of the topics under consideration at the convention were: Our associate members—how to get them, how to make use of them—how to make them "actives;" The Christian Endeavour Society and its relation to (a) the Christian Church; (b) the Missionary Enterprises of the Christian Church; and on a later occasion, when a mass meeting with Sunday school teachers was convened, the Christian Endeavour Society and its relation to the Sunday School.

So many able addresses were delivered by Dr. Clark and the other speakers that it would occupy too much space to record even their outlines. Perhaps the speech par excellence was made by Rev. A. R. Blackett, who spoke of this work begun through the instrumentality of the Congregational Church, and which in so short a time had seen such marvellous results. He added that if it had commenced in the Church of England he was sure it would have been respectable—most respectable, indeed; but he feared it would have remained respectable—and in the Church of England. Mr. Blackett (Canon Blackett we used to call him on the other side of the Murray) is the model chairman of a prayer meeting. Where some of the best-intentioned men would kill it, he has the charmed method of making it "go"—and go to a purpose, too.

Any notice of this Christian Endeavour Convention would not be complete without some mention of the wonderful gatherings at the Town Hall. Wednesday evening and Thursday evening, September 28 and 29, were spent there. At a tea-meeting, some 2,000 persons were refreshed. It was a most animated sight. The crowds which poured in after tea as well soon crammed even the huge capacity of the Town Hall, and an overflow meeting of some 500 was held in Dr. Bevan's Church, where several speakers, along with Dr. Clark, addressed those who were shut out from the greater congregation.

The Chairman, Rev. A. R. Edgar, in his opening remarks, spoke of the wonderful blessing at his church recently. During the past ten days (since Dr. Clark's visit to Geelong, where Mr. Edgar resides) no less than eighty young men and women had decided for Christ! Then Mr. Blackett gave the address from which I have already quoted. Miss Mary Reed (Tasmania) gave an excellent mission address at this gathering, specially noting the leading features in the Christian Endeavour work—"consecration" and "obedience." Mr. Bird introduced four Endeavourers who are preparing for mission-work—Miss Reid, daughter of the Broadford Presbyterian minister; Miss Campbell (Wesleyan), daughter of the Hon. James Campbell; Miss Sedgwick, of the Church of England; and a Mr. Strong.

Perhaps the climax of all was reached in the great consecration meeting of Thursday evening. Only members of the Endeavour Union were permitted to enter the hall, which, however, was packed. The service was unique. Rev. S. Savage, though presiding, handed over the charge of the great gathering to Dr. Clark, who conducted it on the ordinary lines of a consecration meeting. But instead of individual replies, the responses were given by all the members of the society whose name was called. This occupied somewhat over an hour, being here and there broken by intervals of prayer for special subjects which seemed to call for supplication. This was a most solemn time. The societies in and around Melbourne, judging by this roll-call service, are somewhat as follows:—One Primitive Methodist, two Church of Christ, four United Methodist, four Church of England, nine Presbyterian, fifteen Congregationalist, twenty Baptist, and twenty-seven Wesleyan; giving eighty-two. Country societies answered in groups; and such cities as Ballarat, Geelong, and Warnambool also had all their societies united under special banners and their delegates gathered to one centre; while Tasmania and New South Wales were represented by several delegates from these places.

Most of the delegates, when called on, rose in their places and repeated their motto or a passage of Scripture, and frequently concluded their united testimony by singing a verse of a hymn. Once and again the choir, led by Mr. W. H. George, would gently break out in sweet and solemn refrain, and then wind up with some hearty chorus. Throughout these gatherings this feature of excellent management of the musical department was conspicuous. Dr. Clark could not refrain from expressing his extreme pleasure and thankfulness to God for this portion of these services. He did not think he had ever heard the hymns better rendered than in Melbourne. Mr. George is an enthusiast in this Christian service. When the choir were called on as a body to give their testimony, they did so by singing most sweetly, "I will sing unto the Lord as long as I live." The ministers united in repeating as one man, "For I am determined to know nothing among you, save Jesus Christ and him crucified." Both before and after this memorable gathering, the members sang their hymns in the open streets in the midst of the city, and marched to and from the railway stations, chanting their bright choruses as they stepped along. Night after night the railway stations were scenes of the liveliest description, the gathered crowds singing and responding, and even keeping it up in the railway carriages, till their stations in the suburbs were reached.

One pleasing feature of the convention was an address by Mrs. Clark on the work of "Our Junior Societies." This contribution was received most enthusiastically, and will be an incentive to start such associations for the little ones in our colonies.

It is astonishing the little interest taken here by the daily press in anything of a religious character, and the reports, when given, were of the most meagre description. Evidently some of them were concocted from circulars and notices, as The Argus, the leading Melbourne morning journal, reported a United Communion Service which was never held. Dr. Bevan, remarking on the supineness of the press, pointed out that had Dr. Clark been the Boston Bruiser or a pugilist from San Francisco, or one of that fraternity, there would have been column after column describing his reception, and every movement would have been noted and commented upon. Dr. Clark mentioned that the weekly papers in some parts of America devoted a portion to Endeavour intelligence in every issue.

On Monday evening, October 3, a Christian Endeavour farewell meeting to Dr. Clark was held in the Hawthorn Wesleyan Church, which was crowded. Rev. Mr. Bath, resident minister, presided over the opening proceedings, and accorded Dr. Clark a hearty welcome to the church. He then vacated the chair to Rev. A. Bird, president of the Kew and Hawthorn District of Christian Endeavour.

Dr. Clark gave a capital address on the Pledge of the Endeavourers, which he considered was the backbone of the movement, and was, that which, humanly speaking, gave it its staying power, for it encouraged private devotion, public service, and loyal devotion to Christ. Many who began from a sense of duty, carried on from motives of real love. Although there were several excellent testimonies and prayers offered by the members, this meeting was not up to the mark of the previous ones for fervour and enthusiasm. At first the pauses before testimonies were given were longer than usual, and some pressure had to be put on to induce a start. Probably the fact that a number of older people were present who were unconnected with the union had something to do with this; and the shape of the building is not so good as that of Dr. Bevan's church, where all feel at one directly they enter. However, as the evening wore on the warmth increased, and the wind up was more demonstrative, Dr. Clark's address having roused up the audience considerably.

The greetings of the Melbourne societies were given to the doctor for conveyance to those at Ballarat and Adelaide, whither he proceeds. He is expected in Melbourne in a fortnight, when a mass farewell is to be given, probably in the large exhibition building.

CONFERENCE IN LONDON.

On Tuesday week, an interesting conference of Christian Endeavourers, delegates from societies in the home counties, was held at 56, Old Bailey. The attendance proved very encouraging, and possibly some may have been surprised to learn that there are now 362 Christian Endeavour societies in the country.

Mr. E. Towers, who presided at the afternoon meeting, welcomed the Christian Endeavour movement as one of the most hopeful signs of the times.

Rev. H. R. Davis, of North Kensington, read a paper on Junior Societies of Christian Endeavour, maintaining that for various reasons it is well that the younger children should have separate societies of their own. He saw certain difficulties, but these may be overcome, and in fact have been overcome successfully in his own church.

An open conference followed, in which various views were freely expressed as to the advisability of separating the younger children from the elder. Some had found this to work well; others held that the elders were helpful to the younger. The question as to social evenings also arose, and it was felt that whatever is done ought to have as its end, spiritual advancement and the glory of God.

THE Y.P.S.C.E. AND THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

Mr. C. James opened the important subject of the Young People's Christian Endeavour Society, in its relation to the Sunday School, stating that the Sunday-school is a place to receive, the Christian Endeavour a place to give. In the Sunday-school order and silence are demanded, and that very request means inactivity for the young, leaving the teacher to speak and act for the class. The Christian Endeavour suggests life, activity, work. Everyone has something to do, and all become teachers. The great question has been, "How to retain our elder scholars?" Should it not rather be, "On what branch of Christian service or mission of mercy can we send them?" The Endeavour is not to take the place of the Sunday school, but to be as a college where the scholar may continue their studies. Many have tried to retain them in the Sunday-school by worldly amusements, but these have failed, and, it is to be feared, have in some cases led them farther from Christ. There must be a more distinct division between the Christian and the worldling, and the Christian Endeavour is bringing this about. Christianity is a seed sown in the Sunday-school, and watered by the teacher's tears and prayers; the Christian Endeavour opens a new plantation where all may have abundant room for growth and usefulness, and under such favourable circumstances it soon blossoms and bears fruit. The Christian Endeavour is doing unspeakable good in moulding the future Church, and the day is very near at hand when those who are faithful Endeavourers will make their presence felt, not only in the Church, but in the world. The world is made up of individuals, and the Christian Endeavour is a place where the individuality of every member can be used with marvellous effect. The waverers should be looked after by Endeavourers and led with cordiality to the Christian Endeavour meeting. One of the special features of Sunday-school work is to inspire the scholars with a missionary spirit, and the Christian Endeavour fosters this, for in its meetings members study the Word of God and acquire the power to speak. To the Sunday-school the Christian Endeavour looks rincipally for recruits, but in its turn it supplements the work of the teacher in the deepening of spiritual life. It takes the scholars by the hand, nd stands as a connecting link between school and hurch, and the schools receive back better teachers nd officers, while volunteers are found to visit the bsent and the sick ones.

Amongst the branches represented by those who ook part in the open conference of the afternoon ere Rotherhithe, Winchmore Hill, Ladbroke Grove, Peckham, Luton, Crouch End, Hemel Hempstead, Wood Green, Chatham, Whitfield's Tabernacle, Albany Congregational Church, and amaica.

AIMS AND OBJECTS OF THE SOCIETY.

In the evening a public meeting was held, opened y an address by Rev. W. K. CHAPLIN, of Bromley, who said: I believe the hope of the Church in the uture lies in leading the young to offer their ves to Christ. We may look upon the Christian ndeavour as a forward movement in aggressive vangelisation. The greatest Christian interest is ar—war with the devil and all his works. The Society of Christian Endeavour recognises his, and is so alive to the necessity for all hristians being constantly on the alert, that one of s chief committees is called the "Look-out" Committee. Every disciple of the Lord Jesus Christ ught to be a member of that committee, in spirit, t any rate. The world is wide-awake, and it is ill hat Christian men and women should sleep. The hristian Endeavour Societies are not based upon entiment, but upon work. They teach their nembers to go from the quiet chambers of devotion, nd from the public service of the great congregaon, to exercise every power and talent in the arena f life and work for Christ. The movement seems estined to march on to the achievement of victories hat will astonish both the Church and the orld. It may be so when we remember its motto, For Christ and his Church," its motive power, For Christ's Sake," and best of all, its working ower, "The Baptism of God the Holy Ghost."

Mr. R. C. MORGAN, who presided, said: I am here o express my great interest in this Christian Enleavour Movement. It seems to me a most hopeul sign of the day, and one of the most valuable of gencies. The very fact that it seeks to evangelise, nd having evangelised to utilise in Christian service, he young people, commends it to all. In taking hold f these as they leave Sunday-school, in leading hem to help one another and look after their comanions, the Christian Endeavour Society is training hem to grow up strong in Christian work and testmony.

Testimonies followed by Mr. Radford Hill as to ork at Redhill, Mrs. Fletcher as to Christian Enleavour work in a small village in Bucks, Rev. J. . French as to Camberwell, Rev. G. T. Edgeley as o Hemel Hempstead, and Miss Miller as to Canada.

Rev. J. A. DAVIES, of Barnet, closed the day with stirring address on the movement generally. He oved it because it treated young people as young eople; because it found work for them to do, and rought into their lives the warmth and tenderness f human sympathy. The Christian Endeavour ociety does three things—many others, but these pecially; it teaches its members to take part in hristian service, to work definitely to win souls to he Saviour, and it insists upon the importance of ecision, clear and open. Hence in such a movement all who love the young must be deeply and ractically interested.

Miss Mason's House of Rest.

THE monthly meeting at the House of Rest, St. ohn's Wood, on Friday last, brought together friends ho found ample opportunity for spending a few ours in a manner likely to conduce to their spiritual rengthening and benefit. In the afternoon Rev. W. uller Gooch delivered a helpful address. In the vening, following a prayer-meeting, Miss Mason poke on the coming of the Lord, and urged upon hristians the need of a careful and prayerful study f this hope of the Church.

Friends were present representing various departents of Christian work, and they appreciated not a ttle the privilege accorded them of meeting with ellow-workers in the great harvest-field. The Aged Workers' Home was not forgotten in the interest of ther work, and it was satisfactory to note that it has ow assumed considerable proportions, and is completely covered in. Next week another instalment of 400 towards the building fund is due, and at present Miss Mason has no funds in hand towards meeting his claim.

THE TABERNACLE MISSION.

A CONVERTS' PRAISE MEETING.

THAT the mission recently conducted by Mr. Moody at the Metropolitan Tabernacle was fruitful in blessing became abundantly clear at the time to all who were in close touch with the work. Fresh evidence has been, however, afforded on this point by a delightful praise meeting, held at the Tabernacle on the evening of Wednesday week, when the opportunity arose of bringing together for fellowship and counsel those whose names and addresses had been taken in the inquiry-room and who professed to have found peace in believing. The names numbered 987, and of these over 600 responded to Mr. Williams's invitation to tea last week; a very encouraging proportion, considering how wide was the area over which the young converts—as these may be regarded—were scattered. Many came from great distances to attend the mission, and it was not easy for such to arrange to return for one evening.

After tea and friendly conversation, a meeting was held in the Lecture Hall, the first part being devoted to prayer and praise. It was delightful to hear the brief, fervent petitions (a sentence or two sometimes, uttered in the style of men and women by no means habituated to wonted forms) arising from all parts of the hall, and offered by those who thanked God for blessing in the recent mission and asked grace to witness for Him.

Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS welcomed all present, and added:—When a man enlists the first thing is to enrol his name—that has been done already for you—in the Book of Life we trust, and not merely in our secretary's book. But next the soldier must be equipped and drilled. That is what we want to be the means of doing for everyone who has lately been led to join the ranks of the King's army. If you would be good soldiers of Jesus Christ you must "put on the whole armour of God" as described in Eph. vi., and having put on the armour you must learn how to use it in carrying the Gospel anywhere and everywhere in the name of Jesus.

Dr. HARRY GUINNESS said that in speaking to such a company he felt that possibly some who gave in their names, who were genuinely inquiring, having been convicted of sin, had yet not found peace and were not in the enjoyment of pardon. To such he sought first of all to bring help, and accordingly devoted the earlier part of his address to showing how a man may realise peace with God, and, identified with the Lord Jesus, understand that "there is, therefore, now no condemnation." This in Old Testament language is, said the speaker, to have a clean heart, or, as Paul calls it, "a conscience void of offence."

Passing on to address those who realised pardon, Dr. Guinness said: Having trusted Him for a clean heart, how am I to keep it clean? Not as one has said by "doing our little best," but by realising the power by which Paul lived. In Gal. ii. 20, the apostle lets us into the secret, "Not I, but Christ liveth in me." Suppose we try to manage ourselves to defeat the enemy, how soon we come to grief. Paul had learned that in his flesh dwelt no good thing; that he was dead with Christ, buried with Christ, raised with Christ, and, in short, one with Christ, so that it was no longer Paul's old self, but Christ. So with us; if we are to continue to be Christians, we must continue in Christ. Thus abiding we shall have the clean heart. Clouds may come. Why? Sometimes a little thing unconfessed, sometimes a temptation of the devil—whatever it may be, take it to Jesus, leave it with Him, that is all. If He be your friend, you must speak often with Him in prayer, and let Him speak to you in his Word. Thus let Him reproduce his life in your circumstances, and you shall go all the way with Him from the Cross to the Glory.

Mr. G. WILLIAMS followed, urging those who had not yet done so to join at once some Christian church, the fellowship of which they would find very helpful in the Christian life. It was, he believed, a real privilege, and a means of grace to unite with others round the Lord's table and in Christian work.

Mr. J. MACINNES, of Exeter Hall, made a pressing plea to the young men to join the Y.M.C.A. It would be a help to themselves and a help to the association. Miss HABERSHON followed with a similar plea to the young women to become members of the Y.W.C.A., and thus gain the advantages of Christian companions and helpers. Mr. ROBERT PATON added a few pointed words on the home life as witnessing for God. A few testimonies were then borne to the saving grace of God, and the proceedings concluded. Each professed convert on leaving received a copy of Mr. Moody's book, "The Way to God."

METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE.

THE following circular letter has been issued to the members of the Metropolitan Tabernacle:—

As the Church officers of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, we desire to assure all our friends that no changes have been made in the doctrines, constitution, practice, or institutions of the Church so long under the care of Pastor C. H. Spurgeon. Perfect unanimity has characterised all our counsels upon these points. This ancient Church has been, and must ever be, a Baptist community in its creed and practice. No one has expressed a wish to make any difference, and the attempt would instantly be suppressed. The pastor is, and must ever be, an immersed believer who is pledged to maintain the distinctive creed of the Church in all its integrity. Upon this point also there is perfect oneness of purpose throughout the whole Church and all its officers. Indeed, no other than a Baptist can be chosen to the pastoral office according to our deed of trust.

No change has been made or proposed in the management of the Pastor's College, which is conducted, as far as can be, upon the old lines, alike as to choice of students, their qualifications for admissions, and the course of study pursued. Any statement to the contrary is incorrect. Mr. C. H. Spurgeon had upon his list of candidates sufficient names to fill the college for several years; from these, with but few exceptions, all the new men have been chosen, and there remain still waiting many more, who will be received in due course as vacancies occur. In all other departments of our church work there has been no need for alterations, and none have been so much as suggested.

We have much cause for gratitude that though differences have been exhibited, and highly-coloured statements published, yet the Tabernacle Church in all its agencies is enjoying steady progress, and maintaining its worship and work with undiminished efficiency and blessing. The heartiest welcome is being accorded to Dr. Pierson, while he repeats the valued services he so efficiently rendered us previously at the request of our departed leader. And we are anticipating that in answer to our united prayers the present blessing will exceed the former one, large as that was, through the grace of God.

Signed on behalf of the church officers,

JAS. A. SPURGEON, Pastor.
THOMAS OLNEY, Treasurer.

SAILORS AT DUNKERQUE.

ALTHOUGH almost unknown in England outside shipping interests, Dunkerque holds an important position in the mercantile marine, and is rapidly taking first rank among northern French ports. The Government is sparing no expense to render these docks both commodious and convenient, and when the new entrance to the port is finished, ships of the largest tonnage will be able to enter, which now have to pass on to Antwerp.

While everything is done to facilitate the shipping interest, comparatively little is being done for the welfare of our merchant seamen. For the last nine months I have been visiting the ships frequenting this port, and no wider or more important sphere for evangelistic effort can be found within the same distance from our own shores. My work hitherto has been to visit the ships, speak to the men as opportunity offers, distribute tracts, etc., and, where practicable, place bags on board for the use of officers and crew, well filled with wholesome reading.

As the winter sets in visiting the ships will be next to impossible, and it is now time that the work took a permanent form. I am anxious to secure rooms which can be used for the double purpose of reading and coffee rooms during the day, and for Gospel meetings at night, where the sailors can come and go without encountering the ever-present temptation of drink. For a rental of about £60 per annum, such rooms in the best possible position can be had on a three years' lease. If any friends will be responsible for the rent these rooms can be taken possession of at once. I shall be glad to give further details to any desiring fuller information.

THE UPPER CONGO.

Six years ago Mr. Murphy (my husband) and Mr. Banks left England for the then most advanced mission station on the Upper Congo river, South-west Africa, i.e., Equatorville. For five years they had laboured and prayed without apparent success. At the end of this time God rewarded his servants; the people came in the greatest anxiety about their souls, and in a few days sixty professed conversion. Over thirty have been baptized and now formed into a Church, the first formed on the Upper Congo.

Equator station is situated in the midst of a labyrinth of waterways—great tributaries teeming with people who have never yet heard the word of God. We are now most desirous of going among these people with the band of Christian young men—dark sons of Africa—and by the means of natives themselves to make known the unsearchable riches of Christ. The only way to reach these people is by boat, and while Mr. Murphy is at home he is desirous of raising the sum needed. The boat must be built of steel, and in sections of 60lb. loads, as it must be carried over two hundred miles of cataract region on the heads of Congo men. One hundred pounds will get the boat, which is to carry the glad tidings of salvation to many who otherwise will never hear it.

Should any friends be desirous of helping or sending a donation, will they kindly communicate with the treasurer, Mr. H. Potter, 5, 6, and 7, Raven-row, Artillery-lane, London, E.?

CHINA INLAND MISSION.

The work of God in this place (Tai-wen-fu, Shansi) revives, and we feel that we are not far from showers of blessing. There are at present about twenty who are inquirers (more or less instructed). Much faithful work has in years past been done in this place, and amongst those who have sown the precious seed is one who is still well remembered in this city, Dr. Schofield. I have the same Chinese name that he had, and only the other day a shopkeeper asked me if I was related to him. On my answering him in the negative, he said, "That man's death was very much regretted."

I hear of probable baptisms during September or October at Hsiao-i, Kih-chu, Kuh-uh, Pung-iang-fu, and Hong-tong, all stations of the C.I.M. in this Province. Alex. R. Saunders.

YOUNG CHRISTIANS IN INDIA.

We have in this central station of the Methodist Episcopal Mission a new community of converts. Feeling deeply the necessity of training the pastor-teachers, a number of them from various circuits have been gathered, with the design of giving them a year's instruction, so that they may do more efficient work in the villages.

The training-school was opened seven months ago. The master of assemblies has given us a dear man of God, Mr. H. W. Butfield, as principal, he having resigned Government service to devote the rest of his life to the education of Christians. Having been in charge of large numbers of educated clerks for many years, also having been head master in Government schools, he has a knowledge of native character, Government methods, and a fluency in the vernaculars which peculiarly qualify him for his position, in which he has much pleasure, assured that the Lord has called him to it.

When Dr. Johnson, the presiding elder, issued an appeal for scholarships for these students at £6 a year, a gentleman in England, delighted with the opportunity of thus having a representative in the field, accepted one for life. We seek fifty such friends, and fifty ladies who will maintain as many Bible readers, preparing for usefulness.

At half these amounts each, we hope for 100 in the Christian Boys' School and 100 in the Christian Girls' School. Half of the time is given to the Scriptures, in painstaking explanation, questioning, drill, and memorisation. It is hoped that, though many can read but little, these forty-five pupils, men and younger, will at once be able to use, in preaching and teaching, the truths which are placed in their minds. Indeed, this is being proved in the weekly preaching of fifty in the bazaar on Mondays and Sundays.

From their pittance of salaries the scholars are purchasing small libraries. We hope to spend Christmas with them so happily and spiritually conducted that it will constitute a vivid contrast to the heathen festivals. We shall be thankful for aid to load the Christmas tree with good books and with cloth for garments for the workers and their families and the Sunday-school children.

WORK AMONG THE POOREST.

We sisters in the West London Mission would like to suggest to all those friends who have money to give and who give it, a few thoughts which have occurred to us in our work about the relief of the poor. In these days of large organisations, by which the distribution of charity is carried on on economic principles, we enjoy many advantages such as our predecessors scarcely dreamed of. For the well-to-do the dangers of indiscriminate giving need no longer exist; the district visitor can go about among her people with a feeling that their affection is disinterested, and not simply "cupboard-love." On the whole, the poor are not pauperised as they used to be, except, indeed, a few who, as the result of an old-fashioned system, have already reached that condition.

But in handing over their purses, scanty enough, to experienced committees and regularly-appointed almoners of relief, are not givers neglecting the very best part of the gift? Are they not depriving themselves of half the blessing, and the receivers of more than half? Not that organisations are at fault in this matter. The associations of workers in this, as in other branches of social and religious service, are the most helpful and happy development of modern Christianity, but in supporting these organisations there is great danger that the individual recipient should be lost sight of. Nothing can equal the beneficial and elevating effect that the personal sympathy of a good man has on the poor brother whom he befriends. There is a bond of interest and kindly feeling which does far more than any gift of money, and which is the true charity we are all striving after.

We, who are part of a large organisation, feel more and more every day how impossible it is to give the individual attention and interest which our people need. It is our constant aim to put our friends who subscribe in touch with those who enjoy their gifts. More especially is this the case with our pensioners and with those who receive help for any length of time.

It is most delightful, for instance, to deliver the kind messages and little presents of clothing, as well as the weekly allowance, which one gentleman sends to the "brother" whom he has "adopted." It rejoices the poor old man's heart to receive them, and I believe they pray for each other every day. I think, too, of our poor paralysed Maggie, who has been saved from a wretched home, and is now living in a country village, partially supported by two or three kind friends, one of whom knew her well in London, and takes a great interest in her welfare.

I cannot refrain from mentioning two or three poor folks for whom we are trying thus to find special friends. One is an old woman who is crippled with disease. She suffers greatly, but is nevertheless a bright, cheerful Christian, and takes a deep interest in all that goes on in the world outside. She is partly supported by her daughters, but a small weekly sum is still needed to make her life tolerably comfortable.

Then we have a very naughty girl who runs away from all her situations and prowls about the streets at night. She is in imminent moral danger and must be sent to a home, where six months of kind, firm treatment may, by God's help, render her more fit to resist the temptations which surround her life. For her, too, we need a kind friend who will be sufficiently interested in her to pay the necessary cost of training, and perhaps help to find her a nice place, when the time comes for her to leave the home.

We have another girl in training for service (poor little mite) who sorely needs twelve months more at the seaside home where she is. Her mother is dead, and her father is a scamp. When we first took her away she could neither read nor write, and was so small and pinched that no one would believe she was twelve years old. She has improved immensely since then, but is still quite unfit for service, and suffers from weak eyes.

If there are any readers of this paper who would like to carry out their charity in a more individual way, and who would realise its full meaning by bearing the burdens and sharing the joys of their less fortunate brothers and sisters, could they do better than help by their money and by their prayerful sympathy such poor folks as those I have mentioned? We, at least, should be only too glad to put them in communication with those whom we know and long to help.

In the many ups and downs of our mission work nothing is more delightful than to be the connecting link between such friends, and we grudge no time which is spent on promoting the truest union between rich and poor. If this kind of individual charity were, as it ought to be, the prevailing spirit of the Christian Church, it would fulfil all the aspirations of socialism without incurring any drawbacks. It would be the triumph of unselfishness and mutual love. Sister Evelyn.

MILDMAY MISSION TO THE JEWS.

OPENING OF THE CENTRAL HALL.

Wednesday last week was set apart for the opening services and dedication to God of the large Central Mission Hall, Philpot-street, Whitechapel.

The first meeting, from eleven to one o'clock, was presided over by Mr. James E. Mathieson, who, in his opening address, drew several important lessons from John iv. Mr. Alfred Pite, the architect, in a brief address, expressed his gratitude to God for having carried him through many difficulties in the progress of this building.

The afternoon addresses were given by Colonel Morton and by Rev. W. Fuller Gooch. The latter dwelt on the tenderness of the love of God to Israel, and his fixed purpose to carry his design in the salvation and blessing of that people. If the Father has loved them so much, shall we not love those whom our Father loves? Let us labour for, and long after Israel.

The evening meeting was a crowded one, notwithstanding heavy rain. Rev. J. Wilkinson presided, and gave a brief statement concerning the building and the work to be carried on in it. Dr. Bullinger referred to the marvellous way in which God had opened Russia for the New Testament work, and mentioned some of the movements that are being set on foot by Jews in different places to feed and consolidate their national hopes. The mission work among the Jews is that of the Lord's harvest, and our order is to pray Him to send labourers into his harvest. Rev. G. C. Grubb followed with a practical exhortation founded on Isaiah's vision of God and the cherubim.

Mr. Hermann Warszawiak, of New York, delivered the first address to Jews and Jewesses in the Central Hall on Friday evening. Over 150 were present, and listened most attentively to a fervent appeal on the supreme and final authority of the Word of God.

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

Light of the world, with cheering ray
Dispel our doubts, our fears allay;
Dispose our hearts and minds aright
To walk as children of the light.

Without Thine aid our feet would stray
Far from the straight and narrow way;
But by Thy word and spirit led,
No foe we fear, no ill we dread.

In vain would man, with reason blind,
Some newer light for guidance find;
Like meteors passing through the skies,
Soon shall they fall, no more to rise.

Thine is a light that ne'er shall fade,
It shone ere yet the world was made;
It shall survive that awful day
When heaven and earth shall pass away.

E. Carrington.

DURING the past eighteen months there has been a considerable diminution of drunkenness and immorality in Liverpool, chiefly attributable, it is believed, to the activity of the reformed Watch Committee. In the year ending September 29, 1890, the cases of drunkenness numbered 14,680; in the year ending September 29, 1892, they numbered 9,005—a decrease of nearly 40 per cent.

For the Young.

FREED FROM THE BASKET.

A SUNDAY MORNING TALK TO THE YOUNG.

By Rev. A. A. Ramsey, E. Dulwich.

is hands were delivered from the basket.—Ps. lxxx. 6, R.V.

This new reading of "basket" instead of "pots" rows much light on the passage. I know a good any young people who do not object to the basket. mother goes to market they like to carry the sket. They like to find it filling up with good ings—cakes, sweets, toys, fruits. They like to ve their hand in the basket.

Very different indeed is the basket mentioned ere. In Old Testament times the brickmaker rried his clay in baskets. On a tomb in Thebes, e ancient capital of Egypt, there is a picture of e Hebrew labourers making their bricks. Some them are carrying the clay in baskets, some of em are working the clay into blocks, some are ixing the clay with straw. Others have a wooden ke on their necks; ropes are suspended from the ke, and in baskets attached to the ropes the bricks re placed. That is not a pleasant kind of basket; was the badge of slavery.

God in this Psalm says to his own people who ere formerly in the house of bondage in Egypt, I removed his shoulder from the burden; his ands were freed from the basket. I brought him t of captivity, out of slavery; he ought to be y obedient child; he ought to walk in my ways nd keep my statutes; to be a loyal, loving, as he is redeemed, servant of mine."

I shall never forget my visit to Portland, not far om Weymouth, where I saw the convicts at work. was a pitiable spectacle, and I never want to see again. The men were grouped together in gangs. Varders, with loaded firearms, were overlooking em, and sentinels were placed at every vantage oint. How slowly the wretched toilers dragged emselves along and drudged! Their motions eemed mechanical and monotonous. About twenty en were formed in one gang. They had barrows ith which they were to wheel the earth away. At e word of command they stopped. At the word of mmand they laid their hands on the barrows. At the ord of command they took the first step in wheel- g the barrows away. They had to wait for nother word of command to stop, to empty, and to turn. It was like a piece of human machinery; here was no soul in it. The hands were on the arrows, and fetters were on the hands. I thought, f those hands were free, how much more they ould do; if they even had some measure of free- om, how much more gladly would they work!

Shortly after the proclamation of freedom in the nited States of America a lady from the North ent to visit the Southern States, and she stayed at n inn somewhere off the main road. The bed- ooms seemed to be covered with the dust of years. he servant was a wretched-looking coloured oman, to whom everything seemed a trouble. he lady talked kindly to her. "Now, unty, I am from the North. We gave you our freedom. See if you can tidy up the edroom." "Oh missus! is we really free?" She ent away to tidy up the bedroom. Presently the dy found not only the room entirely transformed, ut the face of the old creature herself was covered ith smiles; every muscle seemed to move more eely. "Oh missus!" she said, "is we really free? Ve heard about it, and massa told us we were not ee. We asked the Colonel, and he told us we are still to remain with massa." The Christian isitor told her she was free, that the Government ad issued a proclamation of freedom, and that she eed no longer live in slavery. The very moment reedom was proclaimed liberty was hers if she had nly claimed it.

Dear boys and girls, the Gospel of Jesus Christ roclaims liberty, as God proclaimed it to the Hebrews when He brought them out of the land of Egypt. Christ died for your transgressions, and ou have only to claim your freedom and your and will be set free from the basket. Thank God ou need no longer drudge and toil for the evil ne. Your hands are cleansed, your heart put ght, and your feet made swift to run on errands r Jesus. Learn this Old Testament lesson: "His ands were freed from the basket."

DRIFT CHILDREN.

The second annual conference of some 200 workers and friends of the Drift Children's Branch of the Ragged School Union was recently held at Zion Chapel, Whitechapel, Mr. Alfred Holness in the chair. Mr. C. L. Boyer reported that last year 244 drift meetings had been held at various East London centres, with a total attendance of 65,980. Through Pearson's Weekly and the R.S.U. some 25,000 children were taken out during the summer months for a day in Epping Forest. Though five missionaries are now engaged in the work of the branch, the need is still felt to be great.

The conference was opened by a paper by Mr. A. E. Varney, who called attention to the number of children outside our various religious institutions. After pointing out that a systematic course of visitation is not possible to the ordinary teacher, the speaker expressed the view that one person wholly devoted to the work could daily visit and invite to children's meetings some one thousand children.

Various friends gave hearty testimony to the success of the plan adopted by the Drift Mission. The chairman appealed to all present for personal help, and many responses were made to the appeal.

TO PARENTS AND TEACHERS.

I love these little people; and it is not a slight thing when they, who are so fresh from God, love us. —Charles Dickens.

A mother has not learned the A B C of her business until she has learned that her baby belongs more to God than to her.

When a little son of Sidney Smith died, his father said:—"His death was the first grief that he ever caused his parents."

Character, like porcelain-ware, must be painted before it is glazed. There can be no change of colour after it is burned in.

To inform the understanding of a child is a work of time; the first thing to be done is to conquer their will.—Mrs. S. Wesley.

"How do you get such beautiful sheep?" was a question put to a farmer. "I take care of the lambs," was the reply.

England is amongst the lowest of civilised countries in regard to the tender age at which it prevents child labour in factories. 76,000 children of ten years of age are allowed in England to work in factories.

High and low, rich and poor, in Denmark teach their daughters to support themselves in case of need, without being obliged to stifle their lives in the crowded rooms of great factories and workshops.

A recent change in the law has been of much service to poor children. Lately about forty attempts have been made by worthless parents to remove their little children from Dr. Barnardo's Homes, but the new law said "No."

By the circulation of unhealthy literature it is certain that no small proportion of the child population of this country, by the time it reaches sixteen, is depraved beyond any hope of leading wholesome and useful lives.—S. Smith, M.P.

For some years the Countess of Carlisle has invited about 2,000 children from the slums of Leeds to spend a fortnight's holiday in farmhouses and cottages in Cumberland. The cost comes from her own purse, or from her personal friends.

It is the rule that the boys at the Farningham and Swanley Homes work two hours each day at some handicraft or industry. All kinds of technical instruction are imparted, from agriculture and gardening to chemistry, from boot-making to photography, each boy to his liking.

THE BIBLE.

Here we have a rule of life and manners, including in one word of universal comprehension—love—every duty of every possible circumstance and relation. Here is the treasure of the man of God, full of all the riches of grace and wisdom, munificently rewarding the diligent inquirer, and, after the labours of ages, as inexhaustable as ever.

AN APPEAL.

Since I have been laid aside, my dear friend and fellow-worker, Miss Emily James, has been carrying on the work among women and children, travelling all over the kingdom, starting fresh branches of rescue and preventive work, consolidating and strengthening the work already begun, holding meetings in connection with mothers' unions for forming a higher moral standard, and acting as general referee in all difficulties connected with the movement.

She has also organised unions of all the workers for the elevation of women, the care of children in many of our large towns, and an annual conference with its central council under the presidency of the Duchess of Bedford, which is doing much to strengthen and expand our great woman's movement.

But in the midst of this splendid work, the needs of the noble worker have been somewhat forgotten, and she has been in danger of being involved in serious difficulties; so much so as to face the possibility of giving up a work which is absolutely necessary for the continued progress of what has become a great national movement.

A very small fund only is needed to relieve her of this anxiety, and to enable her to meet travelling expenses, postage, printing, and other incidental expenses.

I have been myself so long laid aside that in the isolation of illness it is difficult for me to realise that I have not altogether gone out of mind; but I believe that there are some hearts who still remember me, some few who may even have been helped by my words; and it would be a great cheer to me if any such would send me the smallest sum for my dear friend, whose work is necessarily the one great interest that remains to me.

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

The United Prayer Meeting of the various Sunday and Mission Schools took place on Monday week at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. There was a good gathering of teachers and workers, and a special address was given by the pastor, Dr. J. A. Spurgeon. The Ragged School Union was represented by Mr. John Humes, who also took part with Mr. S. R. Pearce, the superintendent of the Tabernacle School, and other officers.

Rev. G. W. Keesey, of Sutherland Chapel, gave an interesting address at the quarterly meeting of workers at the Camberwell Ragged School on Monday evening. Mr. Lionel Newbery, of Dulwich, was in the chair, and the various departments of work were described by the different leaders in this many-sided mission, an appeal being made for more teachers and more money.

The "Best Methods of Helpful Relief" was the subject dealt with at the Conference of Ragged School and Mission Workers, held on Thursday evening at the offices of the Ragged School Union. Mr. A. Goodwin, of St. Giles's Mission, read the opening paper, which gave rise to an animated discussion, in which Miss Gladstone and many other prominent workers took part. The chairman, Mr. John Kirk, the secretary, closed the debate by urging upon the workers to do all that was possible to mitigate the sufferings of the children in the schools during the winter, which threatened to be severe.

Mr. C. A. Parker, the superintendent of the Sunday Evening School at the Camberwell Mission and Ragged School, was the victim of a brutal attack by two burglars on Friday morning last. Fortunately, the noise alarmed the neighbours, who came to his assistance, when the men decamped, leaving him fearfully bruised, and he is still seriously ill as the result. The [illegible] as yet are at large, but there are hopes from the clue left behind that this will not long be the case.

LONDON SAMARITAN WORK.

Dear Sir,—Winter, with all its sorrows to the sick, suffering, and destitute poor, is again almost upon us, but it finds us quite unable to enter on the work we have hitherto tried to do.

Our new Convalescent Home at Sandgate has been an untold blessing to about 800 persons since we opened it in the summer, but we require about £400 to meet very pressing claims. We also need aid to enable us to carry on our children's dinners and other relief work at Homerton; for this we have nothing in hand as yet. We dread to incur further liabilities. I am sure your ever sympathetic readers will help us. Gratefully yours,

John James Jones.

Mr. Moody in Dublin.

Now that some time has elapsed since the opening of Mr. Moody's mission, the success of his efforts can be pretty accurately gauged. The results have been something extraordinary. They are to be met with at every turning. Christians have been stimulated to more prayerful and earnest efforts; backsliders have been led back to renew their allegiance to Christ; the careless and the godless ones have been gathered in by scores; and altogether the Church of Christ in Dublin has undergone such a revival as has not been witnessed since Mr. Moody's last visit to the Irish capital. The dry bones have had a shaking, with the result that "showers of blessing" have descended upon Dublin; and, best of all, there is a prayerful expectation of more to follow."

The meetings have gone on increasing in numbers night after night. For fully an hour and a half before the appointed time crowds are to be met with in the streets hurrying along to the meeting. They do this to secure a comfortable seat, that they may catch every word that falls from the lips of the evangelist; and with the result that the hall is usually crowded to the doors long before the hours of meeting, and though capable of containing from six to seven thousand people many have lately been unable to gain admission. For such an overflow meeting has been improvised in the adjoining hall, usually used as an inquiry room.

The principal meetings are at three in the afternoon and eight in the evening. The first of the series of three o'clock meetings was for believers. That evening, however, Mr. Moody announced that he would preach next day on "Repentance," adding that "anyone who felt he had nothing to repent of might remain at home." Until Thursday last the meeting at three o'clock has been principally for the unconverted. On Thursday and Friday, however, Mr. Moody preached on "The Blood," and after-meetings for believers followed. The power of the Holy Spirit was besought for the preacher and those present. These meetings were most solemnly impressive and helpful. On Thursday afternoon, Mr. Moody made a touching appeal for the prayers of his audience. He wanted more power. His mission was drawing to a close; in a few days he would be leaving Dublin, probably never to return. He wanted to make the most of his opportunity, and reach souls that were perishing. He besought with emotion the prayers of the Christians present that he might have such power as he never had before during those remaining days. There were many moist eyes in the building as this brave "soldier of the Cross" concluded, and those who heard him that night felt he had got the power he asked for. At the same meeting he invited all who wished to be "out and out" for Christ, and who desired more power to work for Him, to rise in their places. Those present rose almost to a man: it was a scene never to be forgotten.

The ordinary enquiry meetings have been most interesting. Night after night scores of people have stood up to decide for Christ, or to ask for the prayers of those present. The number of young men who did so was specially comforting to Mr. Moody. "Thank God for this!" "The finger of God is here to-night." Such have been his constant exclamations. The young women were equally, if not more numerously, represented. The aged and infirm were there, too, anxious to learn the way of salvation like the smallest child present. Some sceptics were there. They came [illegible] with this sensationalism, which has invaded the highways and byeways of Dublin, and determined to see what it was that was overturning society. Some left apparently unmoved, but some left in tears. Scepticism is not proof against the power wielded by Mr. Moody.

A more interesting feature, perhaps, remains to be noted. Roman Catholics have been present in considerable numbers, not only at the principal meetings but in the inquiry room. Many have been brought to Christ. The writer had the great privilege of helping several. One, a bright, intelligent lad of about fifteen, came to scoff. He asked some impertinent questions, and finally exclaimed, pointing to the platform, "If I got five shillings, I'd go up there and say I was converted." He has, we believe, been really and truly converted since. There is not a happier Christian lad in Dublin; and, like most converted Roman Catholics, his desire now is to bring others to Christ. The other night he came to the writer and asked him to go and help a Roman Catholic soldier friend, who was anxious about his soul. "I wish," he exclaimed, "I was able to go and speak to people! How I'd like to tell them of Christ, and the place I have got"! And he has been doing it, poor lad.

Another Roman Catholic had not said a prayer for fifteen years. His father, long dead, had neglected him when a boy. He had neglected his mother too. When that father came to die the lad refused to forgive him, even at the earnest entreaty of his mother. This has been the obstacle in his path. His heart grew harder and harder, and for fifteen years he had not bowed a knee to his Maker. He came to the meeting through curiosity; was much impressed by Mr. Moody's earnestness; ventured into the inquiry room, and was still further impressed. The first night he refused to recognise God's claims upon him, but promised to come back. He kept his word. The second night he forgave his father, and promised to pray to God for guidance when he got home. At a third interview he joined in prayer, almost broke down when God's claims were urged upon him, and finally promised to read the Gospel of John. "I never had a friend in my life," he exclaimed, "and don't think anyone cares for me." Surely, surely—

Down in the human heart,
Crushed by the tempter,
Feelings lie buried that grace can restore.
Touched by a loving hand,
Wakened by kindness,
Chords that were broken will vibrate once more.

Will the many readers of THE CHRISTIAN pray that this poor fellow may find in Christ "a Friend, oh, such a Friend—so kind, so true, so tender"?

SATURDAY'S MEETINGS.

Saturday, being the evangelist's rest day, was occupied by a trip to Bray, at the invitation of Mr. William Fry, an old and valued friend of Mr. Moody's, and well known to many of our readers ever since the revival of 1859.

But Major Whittle, Lord Bennet, and Mr. Merton Smith were not idle. The Major conducted at eleven, and in the afternoon an enormous children's service was held, and admirably managed. The evening, too, was a time of special interest. For some few days the streets had been ornamented with huge placards announcing a "great temperance demonstration" into which were merged all the temperance meetings usually held in the city on that night. The result was an audience of over 4000 persons, of which quite three parts were men. Seldom would a finer opportunity present itself for a recital such as Mr. MERTON SMITH gave of the fearful power of drink to ruin a man's life, and of the greater power of Christ to save him.

Lord BENNET, in presiding, urged that "when the Lord bids a man put forth his withered hand, He also gives him the power to obey," and encouraged all who were seeking freedom from their fetters to look to Him from whom alone could come their help.

An excellent choir was in attendance, rendering old favourites and new friends with pleasing effect; while Mr. Stebbins sang:

"Throw out the Life Line!"

"Where is my wandering boy to-night?"

Before commencing his adddress, Mr. Merton Smith also rendered a solo, depicting a mother's agonised petition for the salvation of her son—a slave to drink. Then when the audience, after one or two interruptions, had settled down, Mr. Smith related the story of his painful experiences as a drunken outcast, until the "strong man armed" that bound him found "a Stronger than he" by whom he was vanquished and had to let his captive go. It was no easy task, said the speaker, for him to retrace those erring steps, to recall those bitter memories which had marked his former life. Far rather would he draw a veil over them for ever. But there might be—and probably were—some present who had sunk low enough to think there was no possibility of deliverance for them. It was for such that he thus disclosed the past, that those who were past hope might hope again, for the deliverance that he had had might also come to them. With the keenest attention the audience followed his solemn and earnest recital, until many a hand was seen to find its way to weeping eyes and brush away a tear. At the close of the meeting over 400 pledges were taken, including that of the chairman, who publicly expressed his willingness to sign if by that means he could help any who had been tempted and tried.

The Sunday meetings were very large. An overflow was held in the evening by Mr. Merton Smith in the Cyclorama adjoining, followed by a meeting for men only in the Christian Union building, at which several came out for Christ.

CHILDREN'S SERVICES.

It is with great joy (says a correspondent) we have to tell of the wonderful work done among the children. Every day last week Major Whittle had a service specially for them, immediately following Mr. Moody's Bible Reading. The interest increased each day, and on Saturday at least 3000 were present, besides hundreds of adults. The Gospel could not have been put more simply than on these occasions. Major Whittle's addresses were inspired object lessons which the young minds can never forget, Speaking of the increasing power of sin, he bound a boy with cotton until he was quite powerless, and then freeing him told of the mighty Saviour. Many other important truths were illustrated by candles, nails, broken pitchers, blackboard drawings, and chemical experiments. After each service hundreds remained behind to be spoken with, and many of the dear little ones gave clear testimony to having received Christ into their hearts.

A lady writes:—"Mr. Moody has this week been in mighty power. The Holy Ghost has surely been a great reality, and has moved wondrously in the meetings. I have not missed an afternoon, thank God, and it has been like a real revival. The building is crowded each day and evening. Mr. Moody is surely a polished shaft."

Rev. J. McNeill arrived in Dublin on Tuesday, and took part in Mr. Moody's closing meetings. He carries on the Dublin work for a fortnight. Major Whittle commences at Roscommon on Sunday next, and will occupy the week between that place and Athlone and Castlereay.

FRANCE AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

IT IS delightful to witness the vigour which the Paris Society of Evangelical Missions is throwing into the work of evangelising the heathen. In the November issue of the Journal, the secretary repeats his occasional appeal for renewed and increased devotion to the cause. Bringing the matter home to French people, he says: "One fact characterises the history of missions during recent years, namely, the colonial expansion of the European nations. From this fact springs, for our Society, new duties which, as is well known, we are not shirking." After noticing the work of the Society in Oceania and Africa, and remarking upon the possibility of additional duties devolving upon French Protestants in Madagascar, the article thus refers to the great blessing which has attended the labours of the Society's missionaries:—

"Our Lessouto field is whitening to the harvest. There are 7689 pupils in our schools, and 12,460 Christians in our churches. While, formerly, the Basuto Christians doubled their numbers in fourteen years, it has of late only taken six years for the aggregate to double itself again. During the past ten years, the scholars have quadrupled, and the Christians tripled. Our Zambesi mission occupies in the missionary army working for the conquest of Central Africa a position of incalculable importance; what surprise, then, that the Prince of this world should defend with special fury the point menaced by our work? God has, moreover, permitted that this mission should be a powerful means of edification for our churches; stimulating the faith and courage of many."

After calling upon Christians to come to the aid of the Society, so that the financial year may not close with an enlarged deficit, the article continues: "Contemporary facts are on the line of giving a significant confirmation to our Master's order, 'Preach the Gospel to every creature.' The time has come when the decisive interests of nations no longer sport themselves within frontier limits, but rather extend beyond the seas, on the plateaux of Asia, or in the interior of Africa. It is the same with the churches. The time is coming when their importance, their vitality, and their destiny will be measured above all by their missions. Our French Protestantism cannot escape from the operation of this rule."

REV. JOSEPH AGAR BEET. D.D.,

PROFESSOR OF THEOLOGY, RICHMOND COLLEGE.

AMONG those who have won high and important positions in the present day as expositors or theologians, Dr. Beet occupies no mean place. He is recognised as one of the living leaders of religious thought, and anything that comes from his pen is read with avidity. Among his brethren in the Wesleyan Ministry he is highly respected and warmly appreciated.

He was born at Sheffield in 1840. His parents were well-known members of the Wesleyan Church. Under their training he was led in early life to give himself to Christ, and eventually to the service of the Church. He was educated at Wesley College, Sheffield, where he gained considerable distinction, and evinced the possession of great intellectual power. He offered himself as a candidate for the Wesleyan Ministry in 1862, after passing through the usual routine of training as a local preacher. He was fortunate enough to spend two years in the Theological Institution at Richmond, in which college he is now a Professor of Theology.

His first appointment to circuit work was in 1864, when he went to Runcorn, removing to Wrexham in 1866, Cheltenham in 1868, Blackburn in 1871, North Shields in 1874. After that a year was spent with his numerous friends at Wrexham, and was a truly important one. This year of so-called rest became one of close study, peculiar toil, and special joy, and was crowned with an abundant reward. During that period he completed and published the first permanent product of his expository skill, in the shape of his "Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans."

Mr. Beet's next move was to Stafford, and then to Warrington in 1880; in the following year his "Commentary on the Epistle to the Corinthians" appeared. Again he went to Wrexham—in 1888. But it was evident that the eye of the Conference was upon him, and that his brethren were anxious to place him in a more prominent position. The celebrated, and now sainted, Dr. Osborn—that man of wide, varied, and accurate learning—was failing rapidly, and had long felt that he would soon be compelled to relinquish his work. For many years he had occupied the theological chair at Richmond, but in 1884 he retired from that post to the quiet and rest of private life. The Conference wisely designated to the post the man whose ability had been demonstrated in the eyes of the world by the two valuable commentaries he had written. The Church has had abundant cause to thank God for the gift of such an able and judicious theologian and expositor.

As a preacher Dr. Beet exercises great power. His style is eminently expository, but that is not all. The force of argument—or the superadded force of a series of arguments—is convincing in the last degree; the logic is precise, and the language chaste and exquisite. His sentences are clear and crisp, full of "point" and power. Every word is in its place, admirably chosen, and delicately set, reminding one of a piece of fine mosaic.

But Dr. Beet's chief work lies in the range of exposition and theology. He is no mere superficial verbal critic. He aims at the very heart of the matter. He shirks no difficulty, but frankly and manfully accepts the responsibilities of a commentator. His "Exposition of the Epistles to the Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, and Philemon," is an admirable production. Not only does it maintain the high standard of his previous works, but it is peculiarly valuable for the four Dissertations with which it closes. The one bearing on St. Paul's Conception of the Church is forcible and timely; being in reality a lucid answer to Mr. Gore's exaggerated claims on behalf of Apostolic Succession.

In 1889 Dr. Beet was the Fernley Lecturer at the Sheffield Wesleyan Conference. His subject was, "The Credentials of the Gospel: A Statement of the Reason of the Christian Hope." This lecture was delivered in the chapel with which his parents were particularly identified, and in the erection of which his grandfather was the chief and moving spirit. The Lecture will take its place beside the best of the series, as worthy of a permanent and prominent place in literature dealing with Christian evidences. For over twelve years Dr. Beet has written extensively for The Expositor.

In 1889, when the Wesleyan Conference was held at Sheffield, Mr. Beet was elected into the Legal Hundred; an honour which his brethren accorded most heartily. Early in the year 1891 the University of Glasgow recognised his services and ability as a New Testament commentator, by conferring on him the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity.

This honour he richly deserved. His published works will remain as a monument of his ability as a scholar, expositor, and theologian, exhibiting as they do great mastery of his subjects, combined with originality and spiritual power.

Acting upon the request of the Secretary of the Wesleyan Sunday School Union, Dr. Beet prepared last year a Handbook of Christian Evidences for Sunday School Teachers. Certainly this is as good as any handbook that can be found to-day for the persons for whom it was written; and Sunday-school teachers are greatly indebted to him for so clear and comprehensive a view of the evidences of the Christian religion.

Another book from the same pen has just issued from the press. In size and general appearance and execution, it reminds one of Dr. Dale's work on "The Living Christ and the Four Gospels," while its arguments and scope recall that priceless book, Bishop Butler's "Analogy of Religion." Dr. Beet's latest work, "Through Christ to God; a Study in Scientific Theology" (Hodder & Stoughton, 6s. 6d.), is sure to take a high place among books of its class. It consists of thirty-nine lectures, originally given to the students in the Wesleyan College, Richmond. After reading the book, one cannot help congratulating the students who have the pleasure of listening to such lectures week by week. The volume is the first of a series which will be published in due course, and will treat of "The New Life in Christ"; "The Church of Christ," and "The Last Things"; all of them being, we presume, like the present volume, lectures delivered to his students.

The present work is equal to the author's "Fernley Lecture," and shows surpassing excellences. There is the same clearness, precision, and logical force; nothing is ventured that will not bear investigation; and where old truths and old arguments appear, they gain a power they never before exercised over us by their new setting. Beginning at the very foundation of Christian Theology Dr. Beet raises step by step his fortress of argument. His argument for the existence of God is most concise, but it is none the less forceful, built on this foundation—"The visible reveals the invisible beyond and above it," with its confirmation by the "moral sense" of mankind. Each lecture possesses its peculiar charm, but those which deal with "Justification through faith" and "The Son of God" will be read with peculiar interest by many students of Christianity all over the world.

Showing what is Paul's teaching on the former of these, Dr. Beet shows that though St. John did not use precisely the same words, he conveyed the same thought, and that while there is in the New Testament a wonderful diversity, which clearly indicates the testimony of several independent witnesses, the great truths of which they speak are the same; and the only explanation is that, "as a matter of historical fact, Jesus of Nazareth taught that God receives into his favour, in spite of their past sins, all who believe the good news announced by Christ." The harmony which underlies the claims of justice and the word of mercy is to be found "in the object-matter of saving faith, i.e., in the nature of the good news which, as a condition of his favour, God requires us to believe. . . . . In other words, saving faith is a belief, not of a doctrine, but of a wonderful promise." This is most important; the penitent sinner must not only believe this great doctrine of forgiveness as a doctrine, but he must believe that God's promise of pardon extends to himself, and his faith must embrace that pardon through Jesus Christ.

But we must withdraw our pen. This new book clearly displays Dr. Beet's special power. He is indeed "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth." His translations are free and graphic, always suggestive, and sometimes eminently so. The evangelical and spiritual features of this book deserve special note.

We conclude our sketch with the sincere hope that Dr. Beet may long be spared to the Universal Church of Christ.

AN INDIAN RESERVATION.

One mile from Tacoma, Wash. State, U.S.A., is the Puyallup Indian Reservation, containing about 500 Indians, who farm their land, and live pretty much as the white man. There is also a Government school at which 140 Indian children are educated, their ages ranging from six to fifteen years, and a few who are older still. In addition to the care of their mental and physical natures their spiritual interests have not been overlooked, and in the providence of God I find myself appointed to minister the Word of God to these "sons of the forest." In addition to the Indians, there are some twenty Government employés who also form part of the congregation every Sunday.

As I am known to some of your readers, it may interest them to hear how I spent my first Sunday among these Puyallup Indians. The church stands on an eminence overlooking the Puyallup River, with the neatly kept graveyard close by. This latter feature in the landscape is not to the mind of the Puyallup; some of their old superstitions about the dead still hold power over them. At 10 a.m. the church bell rang, and soon teams were seen approaching, bringing these Indian families to church. The service was conducted in both English and Puyallup, by means of an interpreter, and thus in their own tongue they heard of Him, "who is the brightness of his Father's glory, and the express image of his person." The afternoon was spent visiting a dying boy, once a scholar in the school, but now in the last stages of consumption. The evening found us gathered together for a service in English with about forty present in the school. We had a soul-searching time. The power of the Holy Spirit was present, and several testified to blessing.

I want to ask the prayers of your readers. Drink is a great curse to these Indians, men and women alike. Being so near Tacoma the saloon men make a prey of them. I should be glad to receive pictorial papers or good literature for distribution. All the young people read English. I shall also be glad if friends at home will note my address and drop me a line, or send me The Christian when they have read it; while I shall always esteem it a pleasure to let any of your readers know more about my work among these people as I get better acquainted with it. Address, Mr. J. M. Pamment, Puyallup Indian Reservation, near Tacoma, Wash. State, U.S.A.

MISSION TO THE KHONDS.

The work of the mission to the Khonds of Orissa proceeds steadily. Mr. and Mrs. Long reside at Russell Kondah, and Mr. Wilkinson at Udagiri. In a recent letter to subscribers, the hon. secretaries state:—"From the first our friends at Russell Kondah have held English services, which have awakened much interest. Mrs. Long holds classes for English ladies, and also conducts a mothers' meeting for natives.

"Everywhere great interest is awakened. In one village the native schoolmaster says:—'I have read your Bible and about Jesus Christ, but now I see these things very plainly.' In another the village doctor is visited. A year ago he purchased a Bible from the B.M.S. native preacher, and he is delighted to welcome the mission band. He brings out his Bible, and before his own people tells them that he has learnt to believe in Jesus Christ. The missionaries rejoice to think that in this idol-ridden village there is one at least who calls the Lord his God, and Christ his Saviour, and prays that he may be strengthened to break wholly with heathenism, and confess Christ before men. And so, in the most unlikely places, they find that the Gospel is known and cherished, and wherever they go the hearts of the people seem to be prepared to welcome the truth.

"Soon after Mr. and Mrs. Long arrived at their new home at Russell Kondah, the Lantern 'Life of Christ' was shown to the English-speaking clerks. One of them, an educated Telegu, came afterwards to the mission house to seek guidance. For four or five years he had been a student of the New Testament: and expressed a strong desire to confess his faith in Jesus Christ by baptism. After many interviews he was baptized by Mr. Long, in the presence of his fellow clerks."

Communications respecting the mission may be addressed to Mr. W. T. Long, 461, Bethnal Green-road, N.E.

MISSION TO ITALIANS.—Dr. C. Stauder writes that the work at Gray's Inn-road goes on well, while the mission house is doing good service, bringing many Italians within reach of the Gospel, spoken by sympathetic teachers. This work will commend itself to many. The address is 34, John-street, Bedford-row, W.C.

REST FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS.—Mrs. Bell is carrying on at Southend a Home of Rest for workers, regarding which a minister writes warmly, stating that special provision is made for teachers and others of small means. The space, however, is very limited, and an opportunity having now occurred for greatly increasing the accommodation, Mrs. Bell is waiting for guidance in the matter, believing that God will touch the hearts of his people, if it be his will she should go forward. The address is 6, Alexandra-terrace, Cliff Town, Southend.

THE SMYRNA REST.

The thirteenth report states:—"The work among merchant seamen in this port seems year by year to be diminishing, and we notice a growing indifference amongst them with regard to spiritual things. 'If it were a concert,' say they, 'we would come to the Rest!' But we cannot lower our standard; nay rather, we feel compelled to lift high the banner of the cross, and plead the more earnestly with souls to be saved before it is too late. . . There are some who value our meetings in the corner room; they have been blessed there, and like to return to the place where Jesus met and saved them. The captain and crew of one ship came every evening, and those who gave their hearts to God last year looked so bright as they told how He had kept them from going back."

Men-of-war have called occasionally, and interesting work has been done among the Marines. The report says of the late Dr. Constantine: "The seed sown through his instrumentality is still bearing fruit, and will continue to do so, for it is the incorruptible seed of the Word of God; and though the enemy comes in sometimes like a flood, and the opposition is keen and strong, yet we rest on the fact that the Lord reigneth, and sooner or later all enemies shall be under his feet." During the visit of a portion of the Mediterranean fleet at Salonica a branch Rest was opened. Of this the report says: "It was with regret that we closed it on the departure of the fleet; but, though the time was short, the results can only be measured in eternity."

Communications regarding the work may be addressed to Colonel Morton, Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, N.

REFUGEE JEWS AT SMYRNA.

Newspaper reports give bare dry statistics of the thousands of Jews expelled from Russia, and may, perhaps, express a general indignation against so many human creatures being deprived of home and means of living. That is not enough; while men wait to argue the injustice and inhumanity of wholesale deprivation, the victims are suffering—most of them—the extremities of poverty.

Here in Smyrna comparatively little has been done for those refugees, who have been, I might say, emptied on its quay to live or die. The greater number are unable to speak any language in use in Smyrna, and thus are at a very great disadvantage to begin with. They were packed into schools, khans, and wherever space could be found for them. For a few days bread was supplied to them by order of the governor; now they must provide for themselves.

I found in one school fourteen families; sixty-seven persons had to accommodate themselves in the three rooms, or camp in the yard. (There are at present over 100 persons there.) Many suffer from fever, and very many from ophthalmia, brought on by exposure and want of means of cleanliness. On my first visit I found not a crust of bread in the place, and there had been none that day. The pinched faces and longing eyes were sufficient evidence. One man brought out a handkerchief containing a handful of dirty raisins, picked off the street as they dropped from the camel load. This, he said, was all he had. Another man, while he spoke, had to lean against the wall, being too weak to stand unsupported. I never looked on faces more wan and pitiful than those of his wife and child.

A boy of twelve or so, an orphan who had tossed hither and thither, from Russia to Jerusalem, from there back to Russia, and thence to Smyrna, asked me with tears in his eyes to come and see a woman and baby who were very sick. He was hungry himself, but he could think of others first. Perhaps saddest of all was to see a woman who is, to all appearance, possessed of such an evil spirit as the lad our Lord met when he came down from the Mount of Transfiguration. At times she is quiet, but may suddenly burst into a storm of frenzy and tear her clothes and bite those near her. A brighter picture is the young girl, a cripple, who was so ready and so cheerful in doing what she could to help us. Many cases might be cited to show the existing misery in other places. Some khans are in a very filthy state; the smells are well-nigh unbearable. But if things are bad now, what will they be in winter, which is drawing on? The cold is more intense here than in England or Scotland, and unless charcoal is provided the trials of these poor creatures will be doubled. Native bed coverings are imperative; they cost from 5s. to 8s. Rough mattresses would be a boon, for nearly all sleep on the floor with only a thin cotton mattress below them. This is a time when we can show to the Jews what is the spirit of the Master whom we serve, for it is in his name we do all.

James Murray,
Church of Scotland Mission to the Jews, Smyrna.

MISSION WORK IN BULGARIA.

The Principality of Bulgaria is divided by the Balkans into two equal parts, called north and south. The capital of South Bulgaria is Philippopolis, with 32,000 inhabitants; that of North Bulgaria is Rustchuk, with about the same number of inhabitants. The Bulgarians, with Prince Ferdinand at the head, are a Slavonic people, and are estimated to number about three millions altogether, of which more than one quarter are Mohammedans. They are an enterprising and thrifty people. The country is very fertile, so that the chief products, such as grain (above all wheat), Indian corn, etc., flourish.

God has also been gracious to Bulgaria in spiritual matters. There are at present three missions carried on in the country, viz., by the Episcopal Methodists, the Congregationalists, and the Baptists. The Bulgarians are not so fanatical as to refuse to attend evangelical services.

Our Baptist church in the capital of North Bulgaria was organized some eight years ago, and now has fifty-eight members. We purchased some time ago an old house with a large garden, and here we have hitherto assembled for Divine services. So long as the streets of the city were not regulated, the church could worship in the old dilapidated house; but now, as the cities of Bulgaria, especially Sophia and Rustchuk, are to be regulated, a part of our garden is to be used and half of our house must be torn down.

Hence the church finds itself compelled to think of building. The site has been paid for, and the church has about 1200 francs in hand, but needs about some ten or twelve thousand francs more to build and furnish a plain place of worship.

The British people have assisted the Bulgarians industrially and commercially, and will surely not forget to assist us spiritually.

On behalf of the church,

W. Christoff, Pastor.

Rustchuk, Kara-Ali-Meichala, Bulgaria.

CHICAGO NOTES.

The victory in Congress closing the gates of the World's Fair on Sunday is greatly appreciated. Our fifty dailies are asking Congress to throw wide the gates, so that the wage-earners can spend their Sabbaths there. It is strange how ready some people are to break the law of God when some pleasure of man may be obtained.

In the Civic Parade on October 20, the Roman Catholics turned out en masse, intending to show the world that Columbus was a good Catholic. Protestantism was content to stand and look on, not caring to join in spectacular parades.

There is a blessed zeal, however, now taking shape which will become a power for good. The Christian Endeavour, the Epworth League, and other societies are arranging their work so that visitors to the Fair will receive all needed information where religious services are being held, where Gospel tents are pitched, and, in the language of Bishop Fowler, "where a "continuous camp meeting will go on."

It is to be hoped that this parliament of nations, this assembly of the good and the true, will work for humanity an eternal blessing. There is an immense amount of planning for the Lord, and it is to be hoped that the fullest execution will come forth in due time.

A new thing has just appeared. It is "The Seamen's Floating Bethel Association of Chicago," to establish and maintain places for, and to carry on moral and religious work and education among, seamen, boatmen, fishermen, longshore men, and all others in like employment, unreached by any other agency, together with the families of the same, and has taken up the work of building and equipping a "Floating Chapel and Homes" for the use of the seafaring class, and a magnificent floating palace is projected on a large scale. Some of the wealthy men are giving this new project their hearty support. The Lake Front and the miles of shore-line are ample water-ways for many such Bethel crafts, and it is well that the movement is under way.

J. O. F.

NEW FOREST GIPSY MISSION.—By invitation of Lady Marcia Cholmondeley, a drawing-room meeting on behalf of this work was lately held in Bournemouth, presided over by Major-General Hutchinson. Mr. Bullen, who labours amongst this class, spoke of the many encouraging features of the work. Mr. W. S. Griffith, as a resident in the New Forest, also bore testimony to the importance of the effort. For a mission of this kind old clothes are very helpful, and may be addressed to Mr. Bullen, Penn, Bramshaw, Lyndhurst.

MELBOURNE NOTES.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The coming of age of our Y.M.C.A. was a grand event. It took place on June 21, when the Town Hall was crowded to listen to addresses by Sir James M'Bain, president of the Legislative Council, who occupied the chair; the Hon. James Balfour, M.L.C.; Rev. W. G. Marsh (at one time the enthusiastic general secretary of the association); and Rev. Dr. L. D. Bevan, of the leading Congregational church of this city. The attendance was much greater than was anticipated, and the enthusiasm of the meeting was very great. A special feature of the evening was a gymnastic display by a number of the young men.

Mr. Southwell, who has filled the post of general secretary to the Y.M.C.A. for several years, was unable to attend the demonstration. He had had a very serious illness, which quite prostrated him for a considerable time, and was only recovering from the attack. Since then he has resigned his secretaryship. There was a pleasant gathering of young men to say "God bless you" to him on his severing his connection with the association.

The Christian Mission, started a few months ago to spread the truth of the second coming of Christ, and to urge the necessity of holy living in order to escape the second death, and be ready for the marriage supper of the Lamb, has its offices and bookroom in Eastern Arcade, Bourke-street. Meetings on week evenings as well as Sundays are being held in various districts around Melbourne.

Early in July a most encouraging success attended a Christian conference held at Brunswick, another city suburb. Altogether some 6000 or 7000 persons were brought together to the gatherings in the afternoon and evenings, and the buildings in which the conference was held were crowded to excess. A house-to-house visitation was one happy outcome, and a grand thanksgiving service concluded the meetings. Individual Christians were greatly roused up, and received much blessing, while many outsiders were brought to decision for Christ. All denominations cordially united in the movement.

July 21 was kept by many as a day of humiliation and prayer, and special prayer meetings were continued from the forenoon till 9 at night in the Assembly Hall, Collins-street. The object of this day was for confession and humiliation before God in view of the widespread distress owing to serious depression in trade generally. Both before that time, and since then, serious disclosures have been made in regard to the recklessness caused by the "boom" spirit which prevailed here some years ago and which has been the cause of so much financial ruin to thousands. It is to be hoped the colony will now learn the lesson and cease from man, in whom is no help, and look to God alone for direction in the affairs of the nation, of society, of business enterprise, and of individual life. Doubtless there has been much humbling before God, and He is blessing those who sought Him and made their request unto Him.

A United Gospel Temperance Mission was held in the Temperance Hall, Russell-street, for five days, beginning on August 23, and was conducted by Mrs. Harrison Lee, who has devoted her life to noble work amongst the poor and outcast. Her fervour and brightness, added to her known thoroughness of Christian character, made a deep impression on the large audiences who gathered to listen to her powerfully-sweet utterances. It requires all the help that can be given to stem, even in a slight degree, the tide of iniquity that rolls along from the drink curse alone, and the Women's Christian Temperance Union, of which Mrs. Lee is a leading member, is bravely doing a very heavy share of this hard work.

A Temperance Sanitorium.

In September, 1880, a few ladies established the Vergmont Sanitorium, 337, Prescot-road, Liverpool, for the treatment of inebriety and the opium and chloral habit amongst their sisters of all grades of society. This difficult and delicate work has been carried on under admirable management to the present time. The original premises being no longer suitable, were recently given up, and a good house, with sufficient ground, near Green-lane, West Derby, has been acquired. The new home was recently opened by Mrs. W. E. Gladstone. Amongst those who took part in the proceedings were Lady Frederick Cavendish and Mr. and Mrs. William Rathbone, who have very generously contributed the sum of £200 towards the cost of the new premises. A few liberal donations have also been received from other friends, but a sum of £1400 is still required to clear off immediate liabilities, including purchase money, furnishing, etc., leaving £1500 outstanding under mortgage.

Mr. William Grisewood, 5, Dale-street, Liverpool, is treasurer.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

OXFORD.

Sermons in the Methodist Free Church in aid of Home and Foreign Missions were preached on Sunday last by Rev. J. S. Withington, of Bristol.

Friends of the Protestant Reformation Society will be glad to know that the work amongst undergraduates of Oxford, which has been carried on with so much success for a number of years by Captain Williams, R.N., has been taken up by Mr. F. J. Hazledine, of Queen's College, Oxford.

The pleasant Sunday afternoon movement at the Y.M.C.A. for men only held the third quarterly prize-giving last week, when about 140 prizes were awarded for regular attendance. The crowded room and the individual testimonies from men which can be heard from them during the week are evidences of the interest in and blessing on this work.

The annual meetings of the Diocesan Branch of the Church of England Temperance Society were held on Monday last with two large gatherings and several hearty and valuable addresses. The evening meeting was held in the largest available city building, the Corn Exchange, which was crammed to excess. The Bishop of London gave one of his characteristically powerful addresses. His advocacy of total abstinence was very telling, and he appealed earnestly on behalf of work among children. The Diocesan Society report tells of decided growth and extension during the year.

The thanksgiving service at the close of Mr. Grubb's recent mission will not soon be forgotten. After a powerful address on "The joy of the Lord is your strength," Mr. Grubb referred to the many testimonies to blessing received during the mission which had been sent in, and he read a selection from them. They came from citizens and also from members of the University, and some of the testimonies from undergraduates were very striking and were proof positive of the blessing bestowed during the mission. Altogether, it was a fitting close to a season of great refreshment and power.

Now we are looking forward to a visit from Mr. Moody, who has complied with the earnest request of a large number, and is coming for four days, November 18 to 21 inclusive. A strong and representative committee is at work, a large choir is being formed, daily prayer meetings are being held, and every possible means used to bring together good numbers to hear the Word. It is a great pleasure to notice the hearty unanimity of the workers of various churches and the joyful anticipation in view of the mission. Will all old Oxford men and others, who are interested in God's work here, remember this effort in special daily prayer?

CAMBRIDGE.

A series of four Bible readings for members of the University was commenced last Sunday at 12.15 p.m., by Rev. H. C. G. Moule in the Henry Martyn Hall. The subject taken was that of "Acceptance," and the exposition was listened to with great interest by the large number of men present.

The speaker at the C.M.U. on Monday night was Rev. A. J. Shields, who brought before us the needs of the Santals and Ghonds of North India. He characterised these races as possessing, to a considerable degree, simplicity of mind and disposition, and remarked that they were ready to receive the Gospel message with gladness, but the messengers were comparatively few.

In the afternoon of the same day Rev. H. Dening, Rector of St. Werburgh's, Bristol, conducted a service in Sanger's circus which was much appreciated. In the evening he gave the address at the Alexandra Hall to a crowded audience. Taking the subject of the Exodus, the speaker applied the incidents in a spiritual sense with considerable point and power. The manliness of Christianity was particularly dwelt upon.

The annual two days' sale of work in connection with the Cambridge branch of the Missions to Seamen's Society, was opened at the Guildhall on Thursday afternoon by Rev. the Master of Corpus (Dr. Perowne) whose sympathetic remarks upon the aims and work of the society were supported by Rev. Bryant Salmon, one of the secretaries. It is hoped that the funds will be enriched by upwards of £100 by the sale, which was well attended.

BAPTIZING HERSELF.—The Church of Scotland Women's Association reports an interesting incident from India, showing the faith of a secret believer, of whom there are many, who hold back from baptism through fear of persecution. "A few months ago a woman at one of the stations, whose husband would not permit her to be baptized, asked him upon her deathbed to bring her water. When it was brought she dipped her fingers into it, and with great pain raised her arm to her head and said, 'I baptize myself in the name of the Lord Jesus.'"

THE CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATIONS.

Y.M.C.A.

A branch has been formed at Chester-le-Street.

The Hartford (Conn.) Association has erected a large and handsome building.

The Sydney Y.M.C.A. issues an interesting report, showing not a little genuine result.

Mr. T. S. Quackenbush, of Newburgh, U.S.A., has lately given 5000dols. to the Y.M.C.A.

Associations are in course of formation at Wells (Som.) and North Seaton, near Morpeth.

By the will of Mrs. Aliniron D. Francis, the Y.M.C.A. of Pittsburg falls heir to the sum of 5000dols.

The Providence Y.M.C.A. has just received a large legacy from the executor of the late John Wilson Smith's estate.

Sunday evening musical services for the people have been commenced at the Rye Coffee Tavern by the local Y.M.C.A.

In the Bible-training classes at Winnipeg (Mass.) special blessing has attended the study of the use of the Word in personal Christian work.

Mr. George Williams presided the other evening at the sixth annual meeting of the Camberwell branch of the Young Men's Christian Association.

The Belfast Association, which took an active part in Mr. Moody's recent mission, is now largely benefiting from the results of the remarkable revival witnessed in that city.

The membership of the Cape Town Association is shown by the last annual report to be 580. The association is in an excellent financial condition, and is doing a splendid work.

There are to-day over four thousand Young Men's Christian Associations in the world; about 1400 of these are in the United States and Canada, with a membership of over a quarter of a million.

Archdeacon Sinclair, at the annual meeting at Bradford, said he did not see why the headquarters of the Y.M.C.A. should not be the handsomest building in an English town, as was the case in America.

Following the opening of the new premises at Exeter, a series of addresses to young men has been delivered by Mr. Roberts, district secretary. The attendance was large, and the results of the most encouraging nature.

Several years ago Captain Samuel Ashton died, leaving the income of his property to his widow, but providing, among other requests, for one of 5000dols. to the Philadelphia Y.M.C.A. at her death, which has now taken place.

The next British Conference will be held by invitation at Sheffield, June 13 to 16, 1893. The invitation of the Plymouth Association has been accepted for the holding in that town of the next summer half-yearly meeting of the National Council.

The Southern District Union lately met at Blandford. A paper was read by Mr. Beer, dealing with the temptations to which young men are exposed. There are fifteen branches in the Union, which embraces Jersey and Guernsey, and they have 900 members, with 800 associates.

We notice that a bequest of 20,000dols. has been left to the Association of Norwich (Conn.), by the will of the late William W. Backus, and that Mr. Seth H. Butler, of Middleton (Conn.), has given a cheque of 20,000dols. towards the building fund of the Middletown Y.M.C.A.

Next week, November 13-19, is the "Week of Prayer" for young men observed throughout the world. It is desired to make this a season of special blessing and of special effort. We earnestly commend the observance of this season to our associations and meetings and to Christians generally.

On Wednesday, Nov. 2, Mr. F. A. Bevan held a reception for young men at Stafford Rooms Y.M.C.A., and gave an earnest practical address to those present. Rev. Gilbert Karney also spoke on the necessity of continuous personal effort on the part of every worker.

The Bradford Association has started a P.S.A. Society, which is said to be reaching a class not connected with any place of worship. An evangelistic service is also held every Sunday evening, at which there is an average attendance of 246. A foreign mission band has inaugurated several interesting missionary meetings.

Dr. Pentecost is giving a series of Friday evening addresses to young men at the Westbourne Grove Y.M.C.A., and great interest has been awakened, the hall on Friday last being crowded. His address on "The Reasonableness of Christianity" proved a masterly exposition of the three pillars on which our faith rests—history, doctrine, and life.

A capital gathering in connection with the Sheffield Y.M.C.A., was held on Thursday at the Montgomery Hall for men only. The large hall was packed, and representative men of all denominations were present. Rousing addresses were given by Mr. Joshua Nixon on "Intemperance," Archdeacon Sinclair on "Impurity," and Mr. J. Kennedy on "Gambling."

Twenty-five years ago, Y.M.C.A. work was started in Detroit, and to-day the Detroit young men can boast of possessing one of the finest Young Men's Christian Association buildings in the world, with two railway departments for railroad men and an east end branch which is now in process of organisation. It is estimated that there are in Detroit about forty thousand young men of the association age, from sixteen to forty, about two thousand of this number compose the present membership of these associations.

We intimated some time ago that Mr. Wm. McComas had given £5000 for the erection of a Christian institute in Kingstown, Ireland. Last week the building was formally opened by the Archbishop of Dublin, who, in the course of an interesting address, gave prominence to the pleasing fact that the institute was based upon thoroughly undenominational principles. Ministers and friends of various denominations, including Mr. McComas, also took part in the opening meetings, which were very largely attended. Already, it is stated, the institute numbers 300 members.

The Southwark Y.M.C.A. recently had a reunion meeting of old members to meet Mr. A. Knight, of Auckland, N.Z., who is now on a visit to this country, and who, prior to his leaving England fourteen years ago, was one of the most earnest workers in the old rooms at Trinity-street. A large number of friends gathered on the occasion, some dating their connection back twenty years, and many testimonies were given of benefit received through the Association. The present secretary, Mr. Chas. Woollard, is a link connecting the old days with the present work, which under his direction is vigorously carried on in the more spacious premises of Newington-causeway.

Y.W.C.A.

Four more Australian young women lately left to reinforce the C.I.M. in China.

The Brooklyn Y.W.C.A., which was organised four years ago, and now has a membership of over three thousand, has opened a new memorial building.

On Sunday, October 30th, special Y.W.C.A. services were held in most of the Protestant churches in Brooklyn. The association provides instruction in many useful industrial occupations, and has a fine library and reading-room and a boarding department which accommodates about thirty. The employment bureau of the association has found employment for more than one thousand one hundred young women.

IRISH NOTES.

Both the Irish Presbyterian Colleges have entered, under encouraging auspices, on the work of another session.

A Methodist Council, similar to that in London and most other large cities of the Empire, has been elected in Dublin.

A deputation of the Belfast Presbytery has waited upon the City Council to request that the tramway cars may not be run on the Sabbath.

It is only eighteen months since a branch of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children was established in Belfast, yet it has in that time investigated 405 cases, involving 967 children, and is doing a useful work.

The temperance hostelry at Coleraine, a description of which was given in our columns some months ago, was opened last week in the presence of a large and much interested company of townsfolk and others. Addresses were given by Mr. R. Huey, Lord Macnaghten, Rev. Dr. Wylie, etc.

During the last three weeks a Gospel mission has been conducted in a large wooden tabernacle, fitted up for the purpose, in Banbridge, by Rev. Henry Ball, Methodist Conference Evangelist. The attendance has been very large. Similar missions have been held in the parish of Corbally, by Rev. F. W. Gason, and in Ballygowan, co. Antrim, by Rev. W. B. Merrick.

The loss of the Roumania will long be remembered in Belfast and the North of Ireland, because it led to the death of two deeply beloved Presbyterian missionary ladies, Mrs. Beatty and Miss Mary McGeorge, M.D., both on their way to India. One good result of these sad deaths is that greater sympathy is felt with missionaries and their families, and greater interest in missions generally is not unlikely to be taken.

The poets fabulously fancied that the giants scaled heaven by heaping mountain upon mountain. What was their fancy is Gospel truth. If you would get to heaven, you must climb thither by putting Mount Sion upon Mount Sinai.—Bishop Hopkins.

Men are out of their right minds till they come, by faith and repentance, to Jesus Christ."—Bain.

The breath of prayer comes from the life of faith.

Scottish Notes.

November 20 is appointed as "Mission Sunday" by the Established Presbytery of Glasgow.

A friend in Ayr has given £2000 to Mr. W. Quarrier for a teachers' house at Bridge of Weir.

Mr. J. G. Wooley, the American temperance orator, gave an address in Aberdeen on Monday evening.

Rev. Dr. Anderson, of Bradford, has been inducted into the pastorate of the Ward Congregational Church, Dundee.

Dr. Macfarlane, the eminent L.M.S. missionary to New Guinea, has been telling in Scotland the thrilling story of his work.

The Baptist Union of Scotland have adopted a resolution calling for the disestablishment and disendowment of the State Church.

Six day-nurseries are kept up by the Glasgow Nursing Association. The total admissions for the past year were over 16,000.

On the invitation of the directors of Carrubbers' Close Mission, Rev. John McNeill will conduct evangelistic services in Edinburgh.

The adult free Sunday morning breakfast mission has been resumed in Dundee for the winter. Gospel addresses are given after the meals.

Dr. Stewart, of Lovedale, is to occupy the chair of Evangelistic Theology in the Free Church College, Edinburgh, during the present session.

At the anniversary of the West of Scotland Sabbath Protection Association, Lord Blythwood scandalised some of his hearers by an approval of Sunday cycling.

Six northern ministers attended a recent meeting in Inverness of the "Constitutional Party" in the Free Church. Mr. McAskill, of Dingwall, was not present, and sent no explanation.

One of the victims of the terrible railway collision near Thirsk last week was Mr. J. J. Anderson, of Dundee, an active Christian worker and Sabbath school superintendent at Carnoustie.

The Barony Free Church, Glasgow, has celebrated its semi-jubilee. Dr. Wells, of Pollokshields, one of the speakers, said that Livingstonia was really founded in the vestry of the Free Barony.

A conference on foreign missions in connection with the U.P. Church has been held in Edinburgh. Mr. Duncan McLaren urged the Church to send out at least six new missionaries every year.

Rev. John Robertson, of Free Gorbals Church, Glasgow, inaugurated the winter temperance work of his congregation by an immense tea meeting in the Gorbals Tabernacle on Saturday evening.

Six Glasgow F.C. ministers are combining to place before their congregations, at successive monthly meetings, pictures of missionary operations that will embrace the whole of the foreign field covered by that church.

In his opening lecture for the session, Professor Robertson, of the F.C. College, Aberdeen, strongly combated the Anglican theory of "Apostolic Succession," especially as it has been advocated by Rev. C. Gore, of "Lux Mundi" fame.

Professor G. A. Smith was last week inducted to the professorship of Hebrew and Old Testament Exegesis in the F.C. College, Glasgow. The professor delivered an inaugural address to the students on the preaching of the Old Testament to the present age.

At the opening of the winter session of the Congregational Theological Hall in Edinburgh, Principal Simon gave a lecture on "The idealistic remedy for religious doubt." He considered that men should be allowed to investigate as much as they liked, as it could only quicken spiritual life.

The late Mr. Thomas Nelson, of Edinburgh, has bequeathed nearly £100,000 to various religious and charitable objects. The Free Church of Scotland gets £10,000 for its Sustentation Fund and home and foreign missions. £50,000 is left for the establishment of free shelter halls in poor districts of Edinburgh to which working people can resort.

The Secretary of the Church of Scotland Young Men's Guild writes to say that in connection with the Guild there are 250 fellowship meetings, and twenty-five Bible-classes. The Guild maintains a foreign mission in India, embracing ten mission churches. The whole expenses of the Guild, about £1000 a year, are met by the members.

Some interesting items are given in the "Church Talk" of the Free Church of Scotland Monthly. We read that "nearly half the people of Renfrew never enter a place of worship." The pastor of St. Peter's F.C., Glasgow, is preaching to the young of his congregation a monthly sermon on "the arithmetic of Scripture," e.g., "So teach us to number our days." Mr. Wm. Campbell is resuming his evangelistic work in the East-end of Glasgow.

Seventy-five per cent. of the scholars in the Sunday School connected with Hare Court Chapel, Canonbury, are total abstainers.

THE CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

THIS institution continues its noble work among the poor and destitute. It carries on its operations in so quiet a way as not to captivate the world with novelty; yet these are of no ordinary character. The members are all volunteers doing their best, simply from love to the Master and to souls.

Workhouses and infirmaries are visited every week, so that the monotonous lives of the inmates are benefited and changed. Sunshine can be seen on many a face that once bore sorrowful gloom. It is wonderful to find how much the words of Jesus can light up the most desolate and darksome place. The lodging-house work is of deep interest; the services are heartily appreciated by the lodgers. This branch has been greatly blessed by God in the conversion of souls.

Open-air work in prominent and low thoroughfares has proved a success. In eight mission halls, all situated in the poorest localities, the society has carried on every kind of evangelistic and benevolent work amongst young and old, including the night shelter, free meals, etc.

A copy of the report will be gladly sent to anyone applying to the Secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, 28, Enfield-road, Kingsland, N.

Swansea Night Shelter.

AT the recent annual meeting of this mission Mr. Oscar Snelling stated that the object is to provide a shelter for homeless and friendless girls—a place where any young woman, finding herself without friends, without food, without home, and wandering about the streets of Swansea in danger of falling into evil courses, or who had already begun to tread that path which led to such terrible and fearful consequences, might always find an open door through which, either by day or night, they would be received and cared for. Their record was that in the past year eighty-seven young women had been received into the Night Shelter, at No. 25, Strand, and had been provided for. Many of them were afterwards sent home to their friends, while, in some cases, the friends had come, and with tears of gratitude for the care bestowed, had joyfully taken their girls back to their homes. In connection with the Shelter work, their helpers had also gone down to the prison on the mornings when women were to be discharged, to meet the prisoners at the gate, and offer to take them to the Shelter where breakfast was provided, after which they would see what could be done for them.

Open-air Mission.

THIS mission continues the highly important work of instructing and informing its preachers on matters of vital moment to those who have to meet the enemy in the open field, and to encounter the assaults of all sorts of errorists. A lecture by Dr. Guinness on "Rome: Pagan and Papal," was recently delivered in the library of the Baptist Mission House at the Quarterly Meeting of the Open-air Mission. Sir Douglas Fox, who presided, referred in tender and touching terms to the faces that would no more appear among them, those of Mr. John MacGregor, Mr. Joseph Weatherby, and Mr. Gawin Kirkham.

Dr. Guinness's address displayed his usual masterly grasp of the subject, and the information concerning Rome's true character and history, which he imparted to those present, must prove of great assistance to them when compelled to answer Romanist objections or attack Papal errors.

The important announcement was made that, beginning with the New Year, a series of monthly prayer meetings will be held to beseech the blessing of God upon all engaged in open-air work, and specially that directly undertaken under the auspices of the mission.

CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL, SHADWELL.—It is proposed to found a Convalescent Home in connection with this very valuable institution. £3500 will be required, of which an anonymous benefactor promises £1000 when the rest is forthcoming. Mr. Chas. Cheston, 1, Great Winchester-street, E.C., will receive contributions. Such a Home has long been greatly needed.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For special services to be held next week by Mr. Opie Rodway, at Acre-street, Bristol.—For a special mission in the West End.—For much blessing in a young woman's Bible class and mothers' meeting.—For blessing on missions at Pokesdown and Poole, by Mr. J. A. Vicary. For a senior scholars' service to be held at Bristol by Mr. Newton Jones.—For blessing on a mission at Manor Park for fourteen days, commencing Nov. 13.—For Mr. Warszawiak, that God may richly use him among his Jewish brethren.

Evangelistic Notes.

Hayling Island.—Mr. Wm. Forbes conducted a week's mission, commencing October 30, in the chapels at North and South Hayling. Much interest was shown in the services.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has conducted a second mission at Clifton Church, Peckham, of which Rev. H. J. Perkins is pastor. His next mission will be at Wood-street chapel, Walthamstow.

Mr. James Sprunt has during the past month been preaching the Gospel daily with much blessing in Gloucester and at Atworth and Corsham in Wiltshire. Bible lectures have also been delivered to Christians.

Wakefield.—During the past three weeks Mr. Joseph Clarke has been preaching the Gospel in Newton-lane Wesleyan Chapel, near Wakefield. A number profess to have been drawn to the Saviour. Mr. Clarke has gone to Batley for evangelistic work.

Mrs. Tanser Dawson has been conducting a week's mission at the Village Hall (Wesleyan), Crayford. A goodly number, both on Sunday and at each week-night meeting, sought and found the Saviour, Mrs. Dawson's singing, as well as her earnest pleading, having been accompanied by the power of the Holy Ghost.

Swansea.—Special missions have been going on in three parts of this busy town. Rev. Wm. Haslam has held a fruitful series of Bible readings and evangelistic meetings at St. Paul's, Sketty, while at the parish church and St. Gabriel's Rev. Dr. Morgan has been similarly working, and Rev. F. B. Meyer has been giving addresses on the Christian life in Mount Pleasant Chapel.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh has conducted a fifteen days' mission in the Independent Chapel, Narborough, near Leicester. Much blessing has attended the effort, especially among the young men. Ten years ago he had a mission at Enderby, two miles from here, and has been permitted to see much abiding fruit, some of the converts being workers in connection with the Narborough mission.

South Shields.—"Children's day" was a day of great blessing among South Shields Methodists. It has been followed by a twelve days' evangelistic mission at Chapter Row Chapel, conducted by Mr. Matthew Burnett. Some encouraging instances of direct answers to prayer are reported, and some remarkable cases of conversion have occurred. Mr. Burnett's intense earnestness and sympathy have been used to the great blessing of many officers and members of the church.

Mrs. Baeyertz has commenced a month of service at Dr. Barnardo's Edinburgh Castle Mission Church, Limehouse. On Sunday last the large hall was densely packed. The lady preacher held her huge audience from first to last, her theme being The Atonement. At the after meeting quite a number of anxious souls were dealt with. During November Mrs. Baeyertz will preach at the Edinburgh Castle on Sundays at eleven and seven, on Mondays and Thursdays at eight, and on Saturdays at half-past seven.

Mr. W. R. Lane has concluded a week of special services at Godmanchester with marked blessing. The meetings were largely attended, and owing to the increase of numbers it was found necessary to remove from the mission hall to a larger building. Much prayer had been offered beforehand, and the power of the Holy Spirit was realised as night after night the message went home to some hearts. Many, too, found it to be a time of help, and have had their faith strengthened and their souls refreshed.

Stokes Croft, Bristol.—A special mission, held by Mr. A. A. Harmer, closed on Lord's Day evening after a fortnight's services, during which time the interest was well sustained. Christians were cheered, and a considerable number confessed faith in Christ. The closing service was a season to be remembered. The evangelist passed on to Wellington-road Mission, where also much blessing followed the preaching. On Sunday hundreds were turned away from the doors, and an overflow meeting was conducted by Mr. Hill.

Mr. Newton Jones has concluded an eight days' mission at the West-end Baptist Chapel, Hammersmith (Rev. W. Page, B.A., Pastor), under the auspices of the West-end Guild, and the Y.W.C.A., two active branches of Christian activity amongst the young men and women in the neighbourhood. The meetings were all well attended and God's Spirit worked manifestly in the conversion of souls, and the building up of Christians in their faith. Mrs. Jones, Mrs. Arnold Lake, and Miss Guy assisted acceptably at the meetings for women only.

San Francisco.—The Christian Worker states that "the Mills meetings in San Francisco have thus far had no more characteristic result than the founding of the Rescue Mission Home. True evangelism and true philanthropy keep close company. Redemption ever brings in its hand benefactions for the needy. Of the 10,000 dols. needed to lay the foundation for the work about 9,000 dols. had been secured up to August 31, 4,000 dols. of this pledged the first evening. Of this amount C. N. Crittenton pledges 1,000 dols., and the Hon. W. H. H. Hart (the Attorney-General of California, himself a convert during the Mills meetings), 1,000 dols."

Personalia.

Rev. Edward White, who is the Merchants' Lecturer for this month, has as his subject "Man's Salvation Supernatural."

The Bishop of Chichester, who entered upon his ninety-first year on Thursday last, is in excellent health, and still discharges his episcopal duties with vigour.

Professor Godet, D.D., who celebrated, last week, his 80th birthday, received from 248 former pupils, now labouring in many lands, a touching address full of gratitude and love.

Rev. Charles Graham, we regret to hear, continues in a very critical state, and there is, it is feared, little hope of his recovery. Many, we feel sure, will pray earnestly for this beloved servant of Christ.

Rev. H. Andrews, of Hitchin, the chairman of the Herts Congregational Union, is suffering from a heart affection, for which Dr. Symes Thompson, who has been summoned from London to see him, prescribes three months' absolute rest.

Rev. J. S. Hill, Bishop-designate of the Niger, has reached Sierra Leone, on his way to the Niger, and preached with great acceptance. There is general confidence there that his mission is full of hope, and that the differences on the Niger Delta are in a fair way to settlement,

Mr. Herbert R. Francis, whose departure for India we noted last week, goes out as an agent of the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society. His centre will be Dehra Doon. The directors aim at sending several evangelists out before the end of the year to other parts of India.

Rev. J. G. Train, of Hull, has notified his acceptance of the call to the Presbyterian Church, Upper Norwood, as successor to Rev. Robert Taylor. Mr. Train is a very live and earnest evangelistic preacher, and his accession to the ranks of the London pastorate will be welcomed by many.

Rev. G. W. Abel, of New Guinea, who is at present in Sydney, speaks very hopefully of the mission work, the general outlook being very bright. He brought to Sydney two Lifuan teachers, with their wives and families; these have been working for ten years in Torres Straits locality. Mr. Abel hopes to return to his work in New Guinea before Christmas.

Dr. John G. Paton, the veteran missionary of the New Hebrides, has been preaching in New York. His recital of missionary experiences was as simple and thrilling as the Acts of the Apostles, and illustrated in a vivid and convincing manner the protecting power of God over those who love, trust, and serve Him. No one could hear him without bidding him God-speed in the most practical manner.

Rev. Peter Thompson, who has for many years been one of the most unflagging and practical missionaries in the East of London, has just put into actual form a long-meditated project. In connection with the Central Mission, he has established in Commercial-road East a labour bureau and registry office, with the object of providing employment for those out of work, both men and women. The bureau will be conducted on a thoroughly practical basis, and Mr. Thompson expects great things from it, especially with regard to young girls, many of whom he trusts to be able to place in situations in respectable households. He also hopes to get hold of a good class of boys and provide for them as messengers or apprentices, while those of maturer growth will not be uncared for.

ZENANA MEDICAL COLLEGE.—At the annual meeting on Friday last Rev. A. T. Edwards presided. Dr. Griffith read the report, pointing out the success that many of the old students had met with in the foreign mission field. Dr. Routh bore testimony to the splendid work some of the old students are doing. Revs. Sydenham Dixon and W. Frith also supported the claims of the College.

REV. OSCAR MICHELSEN has addressed hearty meetings at Malvern and Worcester, on behalf of his mission work on the island of Tongoa, New Hebrides. Friends have promised sums towards the support of native teachers in villages whose desire to have them has not so far been gratified. Other enterprises for the development of the very interesting work have been proposed, and will, it is hoped, be satisfactorily carried out.

Obituary.

MR. JOHN TAWSE, EDINBURGH.

In the death of Mr. Tawse, a prominent figure in the social and religious world of Edinburgh has passed away. As a successful member of the legal profession, and for some time a civic magistrate, he was well known; but better still as a warm friend of Sunday-school work and of the local Y.M.C.A., of which he was one of the founders. For forty years he held a weekly Bible-class for young men.

M. NUMA RECOLIN.

The death of Pasteur Recolin is a serious loss to the Reformed Church of Paris. Born in 1826, he laboured in several important spheres, latterly in Paris, during a period of over forty years. He was president of the Paris Committee of the Evangelical Alliance, and warmly interested in home missions and the education and care of the young. He was the author of several volumes which are held in high esteem among French-speaking Protestants.

MR. W. N. EVANS, F.C.S., BRISTOL.

On Sunday, October 23, this faithful servant of Christ fell peacefully asleep in Jesus. He became a Christian at sixteen years of age, and until his death at the age of sixty-six he was emphatically a follower of Christ. An earnest worker, whether as teacher, local preacher, or sick visitor, he was much loved by his workmen, as well as his family and friends. He was a deacon of Zion Chapel, Bedminster, for nearly twenty years. His example, even more than his words, has stimulated many a discouraged worker. A man of a patient spirit, he enjoyed a serenity of mind which was reflected from that peace of God which passeth all understanding.

REV. HIBBERT NEWTON, D.D.

We regret to hear of the death, on Thursday week, of the devoted vicar of St. Michael's, Southwark. He was a well-known as an active evangelical, and only the other day, in company with Mrs. Newton, was present at the National Protestant Congress, in Portsmouth, and attended almost all the meetings, which he greatly enjoyed. He returned home on Saturday, October 21, and, though suffering from a cold, was able to preach in his church on the following morning. He stayed at home during the remainder of Sunday week. On Monday morning alarming symptoms set in, and notwithstanding all that medical skill could accomplish, he died from acute bronchitis on Thursday, October 27. Dr. Newton was vicar of St. Michael's, Southwark, for about twenty-five years. He was well known as the author of several volumes of poetry, the most important of these being "The Triumph of Israel."

MRS. WALTER BRADBURY.

Many will hear with regret of the death of the wife of Rev. Walter Bradbury, who passed away on Monday week at Weston-super-Mare after a short illness. Of a sweet and sympathising disposition, and beloved by a large circle of friends, her special work was the visitation of invalids in different classes of society. She was always ready to help with her purse in every good work, and the poor lose a friend who took a personal interest in their spiritual and temporal welfare. Mrs. Bradbury was the author of several booklets of a spiritual character. Being well instructed in the Scriptures, she frequently assisted her husband in evangelistic work, and often gave help at the mission-room, at one time specially devoting herself to the teaching of the donkey boys at Weston-super-Mare. She was also much interested in the hospital, providing scrap-books for the sick made by herself, and some years ago went every week to the sanatorium to read to the patients.

REV. ANDREW INGLIS, DUNDEE.

The recent sudden death of this well-known and venerable Presbyterian minister has caused deep sorrow wherever he was known. For twenty-five years Mr. Inglis took an active share in all good movements in Dundee, especially those bearing on evangelistic or temperance work. Latterly he had become much interested, through attending the Keswick Convention, in the movement for the deepening of spiritual life, and largely helped to spread its influence in his own neighbourhood. He was a man of strong convictions, which he did not scruple strongly to express, while preserving a demeanour of brotherly charity to those whom he deemed less orthodox than himself. The circumstances of his death were pathetic. He had gone to rest in his usual health, and in the morning it was found he had passed away during the night. On his pillow lay the life of the saintly Henry Martyn, open. He had fallen asleep with his hands folded over his breast, and had evidently passed peacefully into the unseen world. His wife and daughter died last year, and he has now gone to rejoin them in the eternal world. He will be much missed in the community where he laboured so long and faithfully.

REV. J. EDGE MALKIN.

We mentioned in our last that this young missionary was amongst those lost in the Roumania. Having passed with honours the Wesleyan examinations, and served some time in country circuits, he felt drawn to the mission field, and, after much prayer and deliberation, offered his services to the Missionary Committee for work in India. He was, it is stated, thorough and earnest, with a quiet persistency which won its way to the heart of things. He much enjoyed a visit to Grindelwald in August last, and received much mental and spiritual stimulus there and at Interlaken. He was anticipating with deep joy his work in India, and his spiritual life seemed to have been enlarged and enriched after his offer for work abroad. In confidential talk with his mother he spoke of his intercourse with God, his sense of the reality of Divine things, and the preciousness of the love of God. His last message to his family was hurriedly written on a postcard and brought off by the pilot. In one corner was a suggestive reference (Josh. i. 9), well calculated to cheer a mother's heart: "Be strong and of a good courage; be not affrighted, neither be thou dismayed, for the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest." Doubtless God was with him in the appalling scenes on that awful Thursday night, when, mid darkness and tempest, the doomed ship bore onward to death on the rocky coast of Portugal one hundred and twenty-three helpless human beings. He offered himself for work, and God has said unto him, "Thou didst well that it was in thy heart."

MRS. BURGESS.

This devoted lady was among the passengers on board the Roumania. With her infant child and Indian nurse she was returning to her home in India. Much regret will be felt by many at the sad fate of this able and accomplished lady. Her father, Rev. John Hay, a minister of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, is now retired from active service, and in an honoured old age lives at the Grange, Edinburgh, of which city he is a native, his father having been at one time Lord Provost. Mrs. Burgess had been staying with him during her visit to this country, which accounts for her being described in the list of passengers as belonging to Edinburgh.

She was on her way back to Hyderabad, the native State in which, with her husband, Rev. William Burgess, she has been engaged in mission work for many years. Their home was at Secunderabad, but Mr. Burgess is general superintendent of the missions in that central district. In nearly every department of his work he had the most valuable aid from his wife, whose pen has often done good service in describing the incidents of Indian life for readers at home. She was active in Zenana work, in looking after the day-schools, in conducting a Bible-class for the British soldiers of the subsidiary force in cantonment at Secunderabad. She was a charming singer, and her knowledge of the three languages, Tamil, Telugu, and Hindustani, which are most in use among the mixed population of the Nizam's territory, was shown in the polyglot hymn-book which she compiled not long ago. A sister of Mrs. Burgess, who was also engaged in this sort of work, is the wife of an Indian officer, son of General Campbell, of the Indian Army.

FLOWER MISSION TEXTS.

Four lady workers were recently considering the unsuitable character of the texts sometimes attached to flowers for distribution in hospitals, and it was agreed that they should seek to select some samples suitable for the purpose. The following result of the search, sent us by Mr. Monro Collings, will be found suggestive by many who desire to serve their Lord in this direction:—

Heb. x. 39; Luke xii. 40—Psa. lxviii. 20; Isa. xii. 2—Deut. xxviii. 47, 48; Neh. ix. 36—Eph. ii. 12; Titus ii. 13—Eccl. iv. 9; Prov. xviii. 24—Psa. cxix. 176; Luke xix. 10—Jer. ii. 13; Rev. xxii. 17—Isa. i. 5; ix. 13; Ezek. xxxiii. 11—John iv. 10; Psa. cvii. 9—John iv. 13; Eccl. i. 14; John iv. 14—Matt. xiv. 27; Psa. cxix. 151—John viii. 34; 2 Kings xvii. 17; John viii. 36—John v. 6; Acts ix. 34—Psa. li. 7; Rev. vii. 14—Jer. xvii. 9, 10; Psa. cxxxix. 1—Luke xviii. 13; Micah vii. 18—Psa. lv. 6; Matt. xi. 28—Jer. viii. 20; Matt. iii. 12—Psa. iv. 6; Job xxii. 21—Matt. vi. 24; Josh. xxiv. 15—Jer. viii. 22; Matt. ix. 12, 13; Ezek. xviii. 4; Gen. iii. 4; Ezek. xxxiii. 11; Isa. lii, 3; Luke vii. 42; 1 Pet. i. 18, 19—Mark x. 45; Gal. ii. 20.

True grace will enable a man to step over the world's crown; and take up Christ's cross; to prefer the cross of Christ above the glory of this world. —Brooks.

Temperance Notes.

The number of licensed houses in Bristol has fallen from 1,350 to 1,178 in ten years.

The Hibernian Band of Hope Union, which was formed in 1873, has 144 Bands of Hope in affiliation, with a total membership of about 50,000.

The Order of the Lion has been conferred by the Queen of Holland on Mr. C. J. Adama van Scheltema, in recognition of his long and earnest services in the cause of temperance.

The Farnham magistrates last week refused the transfer of a public-house licence on the ground that the house was unnecessary, there being four licensed houses within 180 yards of it.

The Norwegian Total Abstinence Society comprises 853 local unions, with a total of about 100,000 members; 42,000 men, 43,000 women, and 15,000 children under sixteen years of age.

We may remind our readers that next Sunday, Nov. 13, has been selected as Temperance Sunday, when it is hoped that attention will be drawn to this most important subject by ministers.

Sir John Bridge, at Bow-street, last week, drew the attention of publicans to the great amount of drunkenness that exists in London, and their own share of responsibility with regard to it.

Under the existing system there are, it is stated, 1000 parishes in the country in which no public-houses exist, the landlords having declared that they will have no public-house on their estates.

At the anniversary meetings of the United Kingdom Alliance in Manchester the attendance was unprecedently large, and the enthusiasm unabated "More hopeful and enthusiastic than ever," says one who was there.

"If we had no intoxicating drink," says Mr. Thomas Burt, "all poverty and pauperism not self-inflicted would be manageable by the philanthropic and charitable agencies, that were never so active as they are at the present moment."

Mrs. Massingberd, of the British Women's Temperance Association, a well-known temperance reformer, has lately bought up a public-house, near Maidstone, called "The Shoulder of Mutton," in order to extinguish the licence.

The American Medical Temperance Association has offered two prizes of one hundred dollars each, one on "The physical action of alcohol, based on original research and experiment," and the other on "The non alcoholic treatment of disease."

Mrs. Gladstone recently opened a new home for inebriate women at West Derby, Liverpool, and alluding to her deep interest in the work, expressed the earnest hope that God might bless it and make it not a temporary but a permanent benefit.

The society called "The Temperance Friends," of Finland, has a membership of 10,217 persons, in nine districts, and 162 local unions. It has printed 82,000 copies of twenty-four different tracts and books, not including papers and periodicals.

Miss Margaret Wallace, of the Scottish Branch of the B.W.T.A., who has recently visited the Western Islands, succeeded, in spite of storms and exposure to severe weather, in stirring up great interest among the Lewis folk and in forming a branch, with sixty members.

A statement has been circulated that The White Ribbon, which will be the official organ of the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union for the British Empire, is already started. This is erroneous. It will be issued shortly after the return of Lady Henry Somerset from America. She will herself edit it.

Lady Henry Somerset sails from New York for England on November 16. Conferences have been arranged at which Lady Henry will speak, in Sunderland, Middlesboro,' Birmingham, Nottingham, and other large centres. At the invitation of Archdeacon Farrar, Lady Henry Somerset will speak in Westminster Town Hall on December 5.

The Lancashire and Cheshire Union of the British Women's Temperance Association held its autumnal meetings last week in Chester. Miss Docwra, president of B.W.T.A. Executive, presided at the afternoon conference, when a paper was read by Miss Balgarnie on "The Need for Matrons in our Police Stations," and an address given by Miss Hood on "Scientific Temperance Teaching in Day Schools."

A report on the work of the Liberia Mission says: "Drinking, which was a terrible curse all over Liberia ten and twenty years ago, seems to be decidedly decreasing. In all the up-country settlements no man can be a member of any church who sells intoxicating liquor or drinks openly. At Monrovia, the principal port of Liberia, the whole liquor business is in the hands of white men. All the coloured merchants are Christians and will not handle drink. England, Germany, and Norway all have their representatives engaged in a business which the despised Liberian Christians will not touch."

Letters to the Editor.

THE INNER LIFE OF POORER LONDON.

SIR,—For sixteen years it has been my fortune to strive to solve the unhappy problem of the inner life of poorer London. During these years new prophets have arisen, and many fresh schemes have been propounded. It is with diffidence, therefore, but not without reason, that I venture to submit to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN proposals, and a well-timed scheme, which I would fain hope may disclose the long-looked-for key of the situation. The real cause of non-success has, in every instance, been the same —the failure to grasp the facts of the case, and to deal with them according to knowledge. The scheme I now bring forward begins with this as a foundation —the acquisition and thorough comprehension of all the facts of the case in each separate locality.

The moment for such an attempt is opportune. Each metropolitan division has new Members of Parliament and new County Councillors. The addresses of these gentlemen gave great prominence to social questions. No doubt a majority of the constituents of these elected representatives of the people would be glad to put their sincerity to a practical test. The date and the present Lord Mayor, too, are excellent organisers. Further, all classes have had enough of politics for a while; and perhaps no more favourable opportunity than the present dull season is likely to offer for the study of this great problem.

The first step to its solution, then, is the exact ascertainment of the needs of London's poorer and unemployed population in detail and in bulk. What is suggested is an intelligent consideration of the North Kensington system by Members of Parliament, County Councillors, and public persons of every division and area into which it may be found advisable to divide each Parliamentary constituency. Some years ago The Pall Mall Gazette issued a commission which resulted in the publication of exact particulars of the inner life of the inhabitants of a portion of Westminster, which a high official of the Local Government Board declared to be more useful and helpful than anything that had preceded this inquiry. A special committee, under Lord Randolph Churchill's guidance, so handled the distress in North and South Paddington a few years later, that the condition of those districts has been permanently improved. In North Kensington the association known as the "Society of Friendly Workers amongst the Poor" has for two years successfully ministered to the necessities of a large population, and proved that it is possible, under the system there adopted, to provide adequately and inexpensively for the needs of poorer London, if sympathetic and friendly workers will identify themselves with its inner life.

Mr. Ruskin, in "Sesame and Lilies," exhorts Churches to "give up your carburetted hydrogen at in one health expiration, and look after Jesus on the doorstep; for there is a true Church wherever one hand meets another helpfully, and that the only holy 'Mother Church' which ever was or ever shall be." We have practically experienced the truth of this in North Kensington, where a committee of friendly workers, embracing the clergy and pastors of all denominations, has, to all intents and purposes, actually solved the problem of poorer London. The same machinery exists in every district of London, and can be promptly put in action if the Christian men will take up the subject.

What above, and altogether outside, the local committees of friendly workers, I suggest that the Lord Mayor shall take a conspicuous lead. My proposal is that he invite the chief head of each of the great religious organisations to join with him in acting as trustees of any funds that may be locally or generally raised for the promotion of the work of the Friendly Workers' Committees. These "joint committees," sitting at the Mansion House, would stand between the giving public on the one hand, and the employed and outcast population of poorer London on the other. A published pamphlet, by Mrs. Barnett Smith, gives an account of the actual work carried on under the North Kensington system during the last two years. I need not therefore give further details of the system in this letter; but Mr. Donald Mackenzie, 28, Colville-square, W., who acted as secretary to the committee, will be glad to send a copy of the pamphlet to anyone who will send him a stamped addressed wrapper. The only serious difficulty met with in North Kensington was in the remuneration of the chief official, i.e., the secretary, who has hitherto been provided with a small honorarium by two friends of the movement. There is, however, a vacancy in the office at the present time, which we would like to see filled by some Christian of independent means interested in the work, and the committee earnestly invite the co-operation of some capable organiser, who has leisure, and feels called to the work.

The desire of those who have witnessed the success of North Kensington is to see the scheme applied to the whole metropolis. To this end, the obvious means are that the Lord Mayor shall call a Mansion House Conference of all the religious leaders of the people. If the scheme here outlined should commend itself—as I have little doubt it will—to their favourable consideration, then the Metropolitan Members and County Councillors should be invited to initiate a movement each in his own district, and so to organise a complete metropolitan system of friendly workers on the North Kensington model. The cost of such an organisation would not be material, whilst the results would be momentous for good to the whole population. This cost would be greatly lessened if the Charity Organisation Society were to agree to dissolve itself; the services of the able and intelligent officials of that organisation, with its offices, could be advantageously utilised by the new association.

In any case, the first thing London needs is organisation, and that through the great "Mother Church" of Mr. Ruskin. Then not only money, but a great army of friendly workers, would be forthcoming, and the "Inner Life of Poorer London" would at length be understood, and scientifically and sympathetically provided for.

If, as I hope, these proposals prove fruitful in provoking discussion, I shall be prepared to show that the remedy suggested will be as easy of application as it is likely to prove efficacious in its results.—Your obedient servant,

HENRY C. BURDETT.

"THE FEVER OF DOING."

DEAR SIR,—In reply to Lord Kinnard's esteemed remarks and desire to know how the line is to be drawn as regards the amount of work to be done, I think his own definition is a complete answer to his question. "I should be inclined to think it my duty to respond to a call to work if I were not already engaged at the time, and provided I thought it would not be overtaxing my strength." That is just the point at issue. The fever of doing does not apply to those who have any time disengaged, but to the over-burdened, over-weighted worker, whose health has already expressed its opinion by a thorough "breakdown," and who has not the moral courage to say "no" to the next burden offered.

No doubt it is better to wear out than to rust out, but is there no middle course where common sense comes in? I fancy the disciples had got into this feverish condition when the Lord prescribed so wisely, "Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place and rest awhile; for there were many coming and going, and they had no leisure, so much as to eat" (Mark vi. 31). An impaired digestion may hinder our service as much as most things, and this is very often the condition described in the latter part of the verse; the hastily-snatched meals at irregular hours; the violence done to the physical frame and organisation, which are our Master's property, equally with our souls.

As regards the husbandman's pruning of the fruit-bearing trees, the more general rule is to deal with the branches, not the root (Jno. xv. 2).

Yours faithfully, ESCULAPIA.

THE CHURCHES AND MISSIONS

A speaker at a recent meeting said that the world could be evangelised if one Christian in five hundred became a missionary. But the five-hundredth man will not appear if we only talk about him. It must be felt as an individual responsibility. Every church should surely be adequately represented in the mission field. May God inspire every evangelist, every pastor, every teacher, with this conception, and as the churches pray and wait on Him, He will surely hear from many purged and willing lips: "Here am I; send me."—THE CHRISTIAN, May 19, 1892.

SIR,—On reading in THE CHRISTIAN of October 27 the reports of meetings held within the last fortnight to bid farewell to missionaries going to various parts of the world, I am induced to ask why the year 1893 should not be made a memorable year among God's people, if churches of all denominations would make a united effort to provide the necessary means to equip and send out 1000 missionaries. Why not 2000 missionaries?

How much is required to send forth each missionary? and how many Christian churches have we got in England and Scotland?

Surely in these two Christian countries there are 1000 churches to be found whose members would cheerfully contribute to provide and support a missionary of their own, and another 1000 or 2000 churches whose members would join—say two churches join—in making up what would be required to equip and send out a missionary between them, and by adopting such a course 1500 or 2000 missionaries might be provided for.

If members of all churches would be up and doing, as well as in praying to God for his blessing, I believe we would see such a year of missionary effort and burning earnestness to spread the Gospel as has not been witnessed in the world before.

Christian clergymen and ministers, be earnest and true in your work, and wake up your people from your pulpits, and ask God unceasingly to bless you and grant success to your efforts to induce all to give in proportion as God has blessed them.

Christian young men and women, decide to offer yourselves to God at once as labourers in the noble work of evangelising the heathen, and you will experience a happiness beyond words to express, and compared with which all the pleasures of the world fade into insignificance.

I am in my sixty-eighth year, and too old to go out myself, I am sorry to say; but I am ready to do anything in my power to assist in accomplishing what I have humbly and feebly ventured to suggest.

SUNDAY TRAVELLING.

DEAR SIR,—Having a pecuniary interest in certain English railways, I made it my business to obtain as much information as possible relative to the Lord's day observance by those companies, and I am grieved to say that the desecration of the Sabbath is deplorable. In addition to an extensive passenger traffic, a quantity of merchandise is being carried over the lines on Sundays. A very important question arises as to the duty of the Christian shareholders, and, doubtless, many will say: "Sell out." But I believe it would be much better if all of them would use their influence to try and remedy all of the existing evils, and then those companies would be an example for good to the community. If all of the Christian shareholders sold out, their influence would be lost, and the management would be solely in the hands of worldly people. Certainly none of us would wish to see railways abolished, and, therefore, it is our duty to make every effort in our power to have them conducted on Christian principles.

I attended a public meeting of the Midland shareholders, held at Derby on August 12th. I raised my voice against Sunday traffic, and gave as my reasons for doing so that I considered it a direct violation of one of the Commandments of the Decalogue. Subsequently I had a conversation with several of the shareholders, and, judging from their remarks, I am satisfied that if a few Christians would exert themselves in the matter, much more might be accomplished in the direction of remedying those evils than is generally supposed.

PRAYER FOR THE OPPRESSED.

DEAR SIR,—On reading in this week's issue of the oppressed Stundists, I felt that we ought to offer special prayer on their behalf. I purpose asking for this to be done at our weekly prayer meeting.

It seems to me that we might very largely increase the interest in our congregational prayer meetings by having a monthly or fortnightly meeting devoted to reading such reports as this, and seeking the Divine blessing for all in the furnace of affliction.

Yours sincerely,

M. G. ASTBURY.

Birmingham, Nov. 4.

THE SUNNY SOUTH.

SIR,—At this season of the year when invalids are thinking of flitting to "The Sunny South," may I be allowed to mention a place on the Riviera hitherto little known?

Ospedaletti is situated halfway between Bordighera and San Remo, two and-a-half miles from each. It has a railway station at which all trains stop on the railway between Ventimigilia and Genoa. There are also omnibuses constantly running through between Bordighera and San Remo.

It is a lovely spot, quite as sheltered as Mentone, but not at all relaxing. Though quite in the country, it has a splendid hotel, Hotel de la Renie, pension 8 francs to 15 francs a day. It has also two smaller hotels.

It is a perfect garden of flowers and palms and orange and lemon trees, and groves of olive. You have the advantage of being in the country instead of having to go some distance out of a town to get a country walk.

English Church services are held in a nicely-fitted little church. The ministry is evangelical. Bible readings and conferences on the Christian life will be held during the season.

Let me say through your columns how glad I shall be to hold meetings and give addresses, evangelistic or on spiritual life, in union with any Christians while I am in Italy.

Yours faithfully,

S. C. MORGAN, D.D.

Leamington. Chaplain at Ospedaletti, Italy.

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The directors have decided to appeal to the Congregational churches and the friends of the Society everywhere to observe a week of prayer and self-denial on behalf of the Society's work, from January 22 to 29, 1893.

CHRISTIAN LIFEBOAT CREW.—There was a crowded muster at Miss Child's Welcome Home for sailors in Ratcliff Highway last week Miss Child announced the text for the month—Isa. xxiv. 3. Addresses were given by Messrs. J. Benson, C. Jay, Colonel Macgregor, the Misses Tuck, and Williams, Mr. Roberts, and several seafaring men. During the meeting praise was offered for the opening up of three new branches throughout last month, and for blessing in nine different mission centres, which have been visited last month, and where meetings had been held by detachments from the crew.

THE POWER OF CHRIST'S RESURRECTION.

THE GOSPEL OF A RISEN SAVIOUR is a study of remarkable freshness and force, by Rev. R. McCheyne Edgar, A.M. (7s. 6d. Edinburgh: T. T. Clark.) The pages show their author to be a clear thinker as well as a prodigious reader. The evidence regarding the resurrection of our Lord is set forth with strength and cogency; but the design of the book is not so much to establish the certainty of the Christian faith, as to maintain an important theological position, having some very practical bearings. In a word, Mr. Edgar emphasises the momentous and far-reaching effects of the resurrection of Christ from the dead, even holding this to be the great proof of his possession of, and his ability to bestow, immortality. Christ's resurrection, the supreme Christian miracle, was avowedly the defeat of death, as man's enemy. "If Jesus did not rise to an immortal existence. He cannot be said to have defeated death. Being raised from the dead, He dieth no more; death, as St. Paul assures us, hath no more dominion over Him (Rom. vi. 9, 10). Assuming, then, the reality of Christ's resurrection, we see in it the one possible demonstration of immortality." Others have seen this, and contended for it, as regards those who are "planted together in the likeness of Christ's resurrection"; but Mr. Edgar holds that the resurrection bodies of the ungodly will, through Christ's redemptive work, be so endowed as to check their persistent sin in the eternal state. The testimony of Scripture to a risen Lord is grandly stated, but some parts of the subsequent argument are weaker than others. Christ's headship of the new creation, physical as well as spiritual, is lucidly shown. The author's criticism of premillennial views is smartly worded, but not fair in statement or sound in argument.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

EARLY DAYS (1s. 6d. C. H. Kelly) fully sustains its well-known high reputation. The little ones who go through the annual volume, will find profit as well as pleasure. The contents include stories, peeps into natural history and physical science, as well as a great variety of wholesome reading matter.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER, the Band of Hope organ of the Church of England Temperance Society, is a bright halfpenny monthly. The annual volume, in coloured boards (1s. 4d.), forms a good reward book for children. Mrs. Brightwen contributes charming "Teachings from Nature." (C.E.T.S. Depôt, 4, The Sanctuary, Westminster.)

Among the high-class publications of the Religious Tract Society are the two popular magazines known to youth as the "B. O. P." and "G. O. P." THE BOY'S OWN PAPER, in volume form, is a treasure-house of information and entertainment, stories and sketches being provided in rich abundance. THE GIRL'S OWN PAPER is "the same, only different." Domestic occupations and interests are given alongside tales and articles of a lighter order. Both volumes (8s. each) are fully illustrated, and will be welcome gifts at Christmas time.

Messrs. Partridge & Co.'s annual volumes are select in contents and excellent in exterior form. THE CHILDREN'S FRIEND and THE INFANTS' MAGAZINE hold their own in every way, and are grand presents for little folks. THE MOTHER'S COMPANION is good reading for a quiet hour; THE FRIENDLY VISITOR is full of pointed Gospel teaching; and THE FAMILY FRIEND will help to sustain many a weary member of the home circle. All these five volumes cost 1s. 6d., 2s., or 2s. 6d., according to the class of binding. THE BRITISH WORKMAN (1s. 6d. and 2s. 6d.) is an old acquaintance, as bright and wholesome as ever; and THE BAND OF HOPE REVIEW (1s. and 2s.) is a deservedly popular serial. These are all very handsome and useful volumes.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.

Amongst Teachers' Requisites for the New Year, prepared by the S.S.U., are the S.S. TEACHER'S POCKET BOOK AND DIARY 1893 (2s.), a handy companion for business while presenting lesson lists and other things useful to the teacher. The familiar S.S. TEACHER'S CLASS REGISTER (4d.) is well adapted for its purpose; while the INTERNATIONAL DAILY TEXT BOOK (4d.) gives a message all the year round, ever connected with the Sunday subject.

The children's books, stories, and annual volumes peculiar to the coming season are now making their appearance on all hands. The S.S.U. issue quite a large selection by well-known authors, nicely bound, and thoroughly wholesome in tone and tendency. These include WAIF AND GIPSY, by Mrs. A. D. Philps, (2s. 6d.), and THE MYSTERY OF HALL-IN-THE-WOOD, by Rose Mulholland (2s. 6d.). The first will find favour with girls, who will be charmed with the story of Nancy, who has some stirring adventures for a girl, but is at length restored to her friends, wiser and happier than before. Protestants will find real interest in the book. The second-named is for boys; the mystery is at length unravelled, and the "ghosts," as usual, find a natural explanation. It is graphically written and full of interest. THE LIGHTSHIP HAND, by Henry Frith (2s.). The story of a roving and adventurous sailor lad, by turns a sailor and lightship hand, run away with by mutineers, captured by smugglers, and at length rescued by a British ship of war! IN THE DAYS OF '54, by F. M. Wootton (1s. 6d.). A tale of the Crimean War, which will be read with interest by all our young folks. ELF ISLAND, by Captain T. P. Battersby (1s.), and WRECKED OFF SCILLY, by Mary Onley (1s.), Hilda, in the first-named, sees many "wonders" and learns some deep lessons; while Olaf in the second has some thrilling escapes, which are well narrated. CHOOSING HER WAY (9d.) is a capital girls' story by M. R. Stone; while DICK OF THE "PARADISE," by A. Colbeck (9d.) gives interesting glimpses of barge life. MOVED BY EXAMPLE, by M. H. M. Capes, is a pleasing sixpenny girls' book. MOTHER'S MONEY (for boys) and MARION'S REVENGE (for girls) are admirable little stories at the price (4d.).

CHRISTMAS CARDS AND BOOKLETS.

Some attractive specimens of this popular and seasonable literature come to us from Messrs. J. E. Hawkins and Co., Limited. Text, poem, and picture are artistically blended. Among the authors of the booklets are M. S. Haycraft, Cecilia Havergal, Laura Barter, M. Fraser, Eleanor Grant, J. Crewdson, and others. Pictorial calendars for 1893 are plentiful and of varied styles and sizes. "The Faithful Promise" Calendar (2s.), 10in. by 8½in., would adorn alike the palace and the cottage. "Light and Love" (2s.), same size, is a packet of twelve texts printed in choice colours, with landscapes and flowers. The "Golden Grain" almanacks, in varied bindings, retain their usual valued features.

APOSTOLIC SPEECHES: A STUDY FOR THOUGHTFUL MINDS. The papers, by Mr. James Van Sommer, which recently appeared in our columns, have been published in the form of a neat booklet (2d.), which may be had by addressing the author, Cuffnells, Wimbledon Common.

PENTECOSTAL PRAISE is a collection of 187 hymns concerning the Holy Spirit, edited by Revs. H. L. Harkness and Philip Norton. In addition to some of our choicest melodies on the Paraclete, there are many pieces written by members of the Daily Prayer Union. (1s. Nisbet.)

PREMI is the title of a little book in which Miss Fallon, Zenana missionary at Faizabad, tells the story of a girl who recently confessed Christ, after having for ten years been a Hindu devotee. Sir Monier Monier-Williams writes an introduction to this deeply-interesting little book. (1s. Nisbet.)

THE PEEP OF DAY.—A new edition of this popular book, with coloured illustrations of a high order, has been issued by Messrs. Longmans. (5s.) Poems for youthful readers, admirably selected, are added to each chapter. This handsome volume, with its illuminated daisy cover, is specially appropriate for presentation.

THE VEIL UPLIFTED; OR, THE BIBLE ITS OWN INTERPRETER: A series of Bible readings by Hannah Whitall Smith. (3s. 6d. F. E. Longley.) This is a revised edition of a very useful book. Scripture is so largely quoted that the textual index at the end exceeds a thousand references. Some of the studies will serve mission workers as seed thoughts for a number of useful and edifying addresses.

THE CHURCH AND CATHEDRAL CHORISTERS' SINGING METHOD. (3s. net. Robert Cocks and Co.) Dr. H. Keeton, the organist of Peterborough Cathedral, has placed within reach of the public his experience in the training of boys' voices. This manual contains exercises calculated to teach boys how to read music at sight quickly; hints on the management of the breath; and other kindred subjects. Altogether, this is a very good "method" for a choir-trainer.

THE PLACE OF MUSIC IN PUBLIC WORSHIP, by Prof. H. C. Shuttleworth (Elliot Stock), is a brief treatise, containing many good and excellent things on this subject, from the High Church and ceremonial point of view: not by any means the highest point of view in our judgment. The method favoured by the author tends to exalt art worship above heart worship, and that too often means no worship at all. The line may be difficult to draw, but we would rather fix it too low than too high.

THE HERALD OF MERCY holds on its way. It claims to be "a monthly messenger for humble homes," and many a Christian worker can testify to its useful ministry. The monthly issue (at one halfpenny) has a large circulation, not only as integral numbers, but also cut up into leaflets and tracts. To facilitate this division, every leaf is complete in itself. In volume form (1s.) the HERALD is a very popular home friend. The illustrations are numerous, and the articles varied in character. There are many beautiful poetical selections; short biographical sketches, at once entertaining and instructive; also Gospel appeals and spiritual meditations. Purposeful and evangelical, the parts and the whole alike will be welcome to tract distributors and district visitors. (Morgan & Scott.)

THE MILLENNIUM; OR, THE THOUSAND YEARS' REIGN OF CHRIST AND HIS SAINTS, by Silas Henn, is a very thoughtful pamphlet on an outstanding topic in the prophetic Scriptures. (3d. The Author, Himley-road, Dudley.)

SATAN: THE PRINCE OF THE POWER OF THE AIR, is a sermon published anonymously. It calls attention to some teachings of Scripture which are largely overlooked today. (1d. R. J. Masters, 32, Wilton-road, Victoria Station.)

Two penny almanacs, designed to promote Bible reading and study, are: THE SEEKING AND FINDING ALMANAC (Partridge) and THE BIBLE ACROSTIC SEARCHING ALMANAC (Taunton: Hammett). In both compilations the initial letters of the monthly selections form acrostics.

Dr. John Moir, of Edinburgh, has published, through Messrs. Nelson and Sons, a revised edition of his tractate on Christian giving, entitled CHRIST'S STEWARDS (1d., or 5s. per 100), in which he forcibly expounds the view that money is not the absolute possession of the holder, but is put in trust to be used as God directs.

Pastor H. E. Stone's recent discourse on SPIRITUALISM: A WORD OF WARNING, has been issued as a number of the "Abbey-road Chapel Pulpit." The warning is kindly and important, and we trust many will assist in circulating it. 1d., or 6d. per dozen for free distribution. Baines and Scarsbrook, 14 to 20, Fairfax-place, South Hampstead.

MAY A CHRISTIAN GO TO THE THEATRE? This Question answered by several Friends of Young Men and Women. (Rochdale: "Joyful News" Book Depot.) Revs. Dr. Stephenson, Charles Garrett, and Thomas Champness are among the contributors to this very useful envelope booklet. We trust it will be circulated broadcast, for it is full of information, as well as pointed and safe in its counsels.

The Church of England Temperance Society has issued several useful tracts against strong drink. Two fourpenny books, which will prove of service to workers, are:—BAND OF HOPE OUTLINE ADDRESSES for one quarter, by Rev. B. T. Barnes and others; and BLACKBOARD ADDRESSES, edited by H. F. Clarke. Another handbook is EASY LESSONS ON ALCOHOL AND ITS EFFECTS ON BODY AND MIND (6d.), by W Taylor (4, The Sanctuary, Westminster).

ARE HARVEST FESTIVALS A REALITY IN 1892? This sermon, preached at Ipswich by Canon Garratt, exposes a species of religious formality. The preacher says: "There seems to me something unreal in complaints by agriculturists of ruined harvests outside the church, and hymns of thankfulness for harvests 'safely gathered in' inside the church." Especially in towns, the Canon would have thanksgiving services to partake of a more general character. He aims, in his sermon, to show where the soul's wants may find satisfaction. (1d. Ipswich: Pawsey and Hayes, Ancient House, Butter Market.)

Rev. Dr. Bullinger has issued in pamphlet form three Bible studies of great value:—"THE MAN OF GOD;" THE NEW CREATION AND THE OLD, OR THE WAYS OF GOD IN GRACE; and "THE KINGDOM" AND "THE CHURCH," OR THE SEVEN PARABLES OF MATTHEW XIII. The three contain a wealth of instruction and suggestion on Scripture doctrines in their relation to the Christian's faith and hope, as well as to his daily life and conversation. A fourth booklet is "THINGS TO COME": AN EPITOME OF PROPHETIC TRUTH. Here is something for all students of Scripture, and much light for those who have so far neglected "the sure word of prophecy." (1d. each. Published by the Author, 7, St. Paul's-churchyard, E.C.)

Mr. E. Kaufmann, 30, Paternoster-square, has brought out some very pretty Christmas, New Year, and reward cards, at a price which will make them specially popular among Sunday-school and Mission workers. "Faith, Hope, and Charity," is a three-fold screen card with verses by W. Luff, and Christmas and New Year mottoes (6d. each). Packets of twelve, costing 1s., are: "Messages of Grace," "On the King's Service," "Palms of Victory," "Faithful Branches," and "Unsearchable Riches." Some of these are cut out and embossed, and all are beautified with floral, landscape, and other designs. Cheaper packets are: "The King's Servants," likely to charm the children; "Treasures of Gold," and "Songs of Gladness" (6d. per packet). Descriptive catalogues may be had from Mr. Kaufmann of these, and also of Mrs. Grimké's text cards, which, in many languages, have been largely used in evangelistic work.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 13.—JOSHUA XXI.

After the cities of refuge had been provided, those that were to be set apart for the priests, members of the house of Aaron, and for the Levites were next allotted, according to the Divine command to Moses (Numb. xxxv. 1—8). The six cities of refuge were also assigned to the Levites, in addition to these forty-two, so that in all there were forty-eight. It is noteworthy that thirteen of these cities were appointed to the priests by lot in the tribes of Judah, Benjamin, and Simeon—the tribes nearest to Jerusalem, where their services would ultimately be required. This is a striking testimony to the whole disposing of the lot being of God (Prov. xvi. 33).

The Levites and priests (4) were not the sole possessors of the towns allotted to them, but received the number of dwelling-houses they actually needed, with the pasture land required for their cattle, the rest of the space still belonging to the different tribes. God was very careful to see to the material interests of those who, by reason of their devotion to His cause, could not provide for themselves.

The concluding verses represent generally the state of things about the period of Joshua's death (xiii. 14). So far as God's promises went, there was no failure on his part to make them good. What failure there was arose entirely from their lack of faith and courage.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 14.—JOSHUA XXII.

There was dignity and a generous appreciation of services rendered, as Joshua dismissed the two and a half tribes to their inheritance beyond Jordan. Something like the "Well done, good and faithful servant," rings through his parting words. But he took care to remind them of the condition of obedience on which the tenure of their inheritance depended. The mention of Moses (5) as the one from whom they received the law accords with Gal. iii. 19, 20. It was by the hand of a mediator, but the existence of a mediator involves two parties and implies conditions, so that the failure of one of the parties to comply with those conditions would nullify all claim to promised blessing. And we must never forget that the enjoyment of the heavenly blessing depends entirely on our obedience.

The words "heard say" show Israel's mistake in acting on hearsay evidence. An accusation of wilful rebellion and disobedience (16) should not have been hastily preferred. Before making it they should have been sure that it was warranted by the facts. Many an unseemly strife between Christians would have been avoided if the rights of the matter had been seriously inquired into. The Lord's rule is always to be followed, speak to your brother first and, by him-

But at the same time this eagerness to keep the land from idolatry at any cost was a thoroughly commendable trait (17, 19). The one altar bearing witness to the unity of Israel reminds us of the cross by which we are reconciled to God and to each other (Eph. ii. 11—22).

TUESDAY NOVEMBER 15.—JOSHUA XXIII.

Joshua's anxiety for Israel's future welfare after his approaching death has New Testament parallels in the case of the Apostles Paul and Peter (Acts xx. 2 Pet. i. 13—15), but above all in our Lord's earnest solicitude for his people, as shown in the last interview with his disciples (John xii.—xvi.), and in the prayer of intercession on their behalf (John xvii.). How constant is Joshua's ascription of all the glory and glory of the campaign to the Lord! "It is the Lord that hath fought for you" (3); "The Lord your God He shall thrust out" (5); "The Lord shall drive them out" (9). Not one ray of glory is stolen from himself, all is reckoned as Jehovah's. And since Jehovah was the champion of their cause, their strength was to be shown rather in obedience than in fighting; "Be ye therefore very courageous to keep and to do all that is written," etc. (6).

There is a cleavage for each of us: we must either cleave to the Lord, or to the remnant of the nations (ver. 12). But the essence of all religion is to cleave to the personal living Jesus, grafted into his wounded side in death, and sharing in his glorious life (Acts xi. 23).

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 16.—JOSHUA XXIV.

The previous chapter contains Joshua's own last parting words to Israel; but here he appears as God's mouthpiece to convey his message to his people. Hence, in ver. 2, he prefaces what follows with "Thus saith the Lord God of Israel."

In his opening words (2) we gather that Abraham was called out from an idolatrous family; from the closing words of the brief recital of their history (12, 13) we are taught that all their possessions and victories were due, not to anything of merit or strength in them (15), but wholly to the Divine love and grace. "I have given you a land for which ye did not labour." How true is this of our inheritance in Jesus! It is a matter of the unmerited grace of God to be simply received.

The old impetuosity which flamed out at Sinai here repeats itself (16). The human heart is so self-confident and so weak. It boasts so much and fails so terribly. Joshua did well to discourage such proud vauntings, and to show the people that they could not of themselves and in their own might realise God's ideal (Ps. cv. 4). The Book of Judges is a sad commentary on these lofty words.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 17.—JUDGES I.

There should be more of this holy alliance between Christian brethren—Judah asking Simeon to go with him, and then going with Simeon (3 and 17). We should beckon to our partners in the other ship to come and help us; if we did we should lose nothing. We cannot have more than what our boat can carry, and it is an additional pleasure if their boat is also full to the water's edge. We must never fail to go up against our foes, though we know and are sure that our going up is useless, unless the Lord deliver.

It is the men, who, like Caleb, wholly follow the Lord, they who are entirely consecrated to his service, who are able to give a blessing to others. It is the privilege of those who have received the fulness and anointing of the Holy Ghost to open up that blessing to others, teaching them how to receive it. Alas for these repetitions of "could not." Of course they could not, but the Lord could have done it for them, if only they had obeyed and trusted Him. It is not our strength or weakness that is in question, but our faith in God's ability.

And it is a mistake simply to render our strong passions tributary, because they are always liable to regain the upper hand. By resolutions, by pledges, by great watchfulness, we may curtail and limit them, but it is better far to entrust them to the grace of the Holy Ghost, to render them as still as a stone (Gal. v. 22-25, R.V.).

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 18.—JUDGES II.

God's warning angels still come to men. Let us be on the outlook for them. But how bitter sometimes is their reproof! Have not we entered into covenant with forbidden things, avoiding His altar, and disobeying his voice. And this is the reason why we are hindered and injured by the thorn in our side and the snare for our foot. It cannot be too clearly or constantly repeated that failure in consecration and obedience always means defeat. When we follow other gods, and bow ourselves down to them, we can no longer stand against our enemies. Then the hand of the Lord is against us, and we become sore distressed. But even under such circumstances He does not forget his covenant. Though we believe not, He remaineth faithful, He cannot deny himself. He therefore raises up judges, and saves us from the full measure of his wrath.

How grateful is the respite! But there are some who are so set on their evil ways that, as soon as the respite, obtained in answer to their bitter groanings, is over, they turn back again to sin. "They cease not from their doings, nor from their stubborn way." Many times is this process repeated. The infidelity on the part of the soul; the Lord's gracious interposition to avert the threatened evils its disobedience has incurred; the brief spell of renewed vows and holy living; but the sad return to the old bad past. There comes a limit to all this. And after a while, we who have dallied with the evils that have grieved God are left to suffer from their terrible results. Thus, as by fire, God proceeds to burn out inveterate evil.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 19.—JUDGES III.

Difficulty and temptation, though due to our own failure and sin, may be used for blessed purposes, overruled by the providence of God, to teach us priceless lessons. The presence of the Canaanites was due to the disobedience and unbelief of Israel, and yet it proved them and taught them to be strong in war, and revealed to them many a trait in the Divine character to which otherwise they had been oblivious. Where sin abounds grace much more abounds. Out of the eater, meat; out of the strong, sweetness. God brings us through difficulty and danger that, having come to an end of ourselves, we may be compelled to turn to his fulness, to claim from it what we most require.

It is a bitter record which here begins. The Holy Ghost says the Lord sold them; it is also true that they sold themselves. But let backsliders and those that are reaping a bitter harvest from the results of their wrong-doing, take heart from the next record, that when the people cried, "the Lord raised them up a saviour." Twice over that statement is made in this chapter. Throughout this book we shall have occasion to notice the kind of instruments which God selected for his work. All of them to be classed among the things that are not, but which bring to nought the things that are. Here a left-handed man. Let us take courage from this. Out of weakness He makes strong. To those that have no might He increases strength.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 20.

PAUL'S FIRST MISSIONARY SERMON.

Acts xiii. 26—43.

GOLDEN TEXT: Luke verse 26.

PAUL'S first missionary sermon was delivered in Antioch, in Pisidia, about 115 miles north of Perga, in Pamphylia (14). Like the Antioch in Syria from which the apostles were sent forth, this city was built by Seleucus Nicanor, who had a weakness for calling cities by the names of his family. The sermon was delivered on the Jewish Sabbath in a Jewish synagogue (14), and to a congregation composed of Jews and Jewish proselytes (23). Perhaps these two are referred to by Paul in verses 16 and 26. The sermon was delivered by invitation of rulers of the synagogue (15), probably as an act of courtesy to the two strangers, or because they had already, by intercourse with the people, given evidence of intimate acquaintance with Scripture. Other authorities see in the fact that the apostles "sat down" (14), an intimation of their desire to address the congregation.

The brief epitome of Jewish history, from the time of the patriarchs down to David (17-22), with which the sermon begins, is not without a purpose. (1) It attributes all the blessing which the Jewish nation enjoyed to God alone. Note how in every verse Paul emphasises what God did. All that they have enjoyed is due, not to any merit of theirs, but to the undeserved favour of God. And (2) it excites the hope of something more. God's favour did not stop with David, the promises made to him concerning his seed remained long unfulfilled, but Paul announces their fulfilment now (23). Better than the patriarchs, than Moses, than the Judges, and even than David, is the Saviour Jesus. This is the last and the greatest act of grace from God to whose favour they already owe so much.

"The word of salvation" to which the golden text refers (26) includes facts (27-31); prophetic testimony (32-37); and proclamation (38-41).

The death of Christ is the great fact of the Gospel. But this was a stumbling block to the Jews (1 Cor. i. 23), all the more so since it was brought about by the rulers of Jerusalem (27). Paul aims to remove the stumbling block by showing (1) that the innocence of Jesus was established (verse 28); (2) that his death was itself a fulfilment of Scriptural prophecy (verse 29); and (3), that he was raised from the dead (verse 30). The fact that God fulfilled his own purpose in the death of Christ does not make the guilt of those who crucified Him any less. Their ignorance of the prophecies they read (27) was guilty; much more so their crucifying One in whom they could find no sin. These are the Gospel facts (1 Cor. xv. 3, 4), upon which our justification depends (Rom. iv. 25). Every man must either bear his own sin and its just punishment, or be saved through the death and resurrection of Jesus.

The prophetic testimony to which Paul refers is especially that spoken concerning David (32-37), probably because he had introduced Christ particularly as David's Seed (23). Two of the promises are in the Psalms (ii. 7, xvi. 10); a third is in Isa. (lv. 3). The sure mercies promised in connection with David were never fulfilled to him personally, nor to his son Solomon. They required One who, though He died, should not see corruption, and who by resurrection from the dead, was manifestly declared to be the Son of God (see Rom. i. 3, 4). Scripture would be incomplete if it did not tell of the coming of Jesus. Compare the event with the prophecy. To reject Christ in spite of such evidence is guilt as great as that of the Jewish rulers who, in spite of his miracles, put Him to death.

The proclamation has two sides, one of salvation (38-39), the other of judgment (40-41). The first need of man is forgiveness. His sin deserves death—not only physical, but eternal. Nothing is important to a man exposed to such a sentence in comparison with pardon. This the Gospel freely offers. It is preached—proclaimed, requiring only man's acceptance of it. Justification is more than pardon. It declares that God bestows forgiveness on a righteous basis, and that the sinner is accepted before God as righteous.

The warning (40, 41) is not less a part of the Gospel proclamation. It is a solemn thing to hear the Gospel. Increased light makes great blessing possible to us, but also involves great responsibility. Gospel threatenings are more terrible than those under the Law (Heb. x. 28, 29).

See the result of the first missionary sermon. Some went out (42), probably despising and rejecting the message. Others were arrested, and desired to hear more (42). And others were led to faith in Christ (43). To which of these three classes do we belong?

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Dr. Sullivan, who has been Bishop of Algoma for the last ten years, has arrived in England.

The mid-day open-air services in St. Botolph Churchyard, in the City, have now been suspended for the winter.

A Reuter telegram from Sydney states that Canon Chalmers has been consecrated Bishop of Goulburn.

It is stated that Rev. J. H. Best, formerly Congregational minister at Mirfield, has entered the Church of England.

Canon Temple, rector of Oswaldkirk, formerly vicar of St. John's, Leeds, has been seriously ill for the past month at Grange-over-Sands.

Sunday next is being widely observed as East London Church Fund Sunday; special sermons are to be preached in many churches on behalf of the fund.

Rev. Russell Wakefield, vicar of Sandgate, has been appointed editorial secretary of the Church of England Temperance Society, vice Rev. B. T. Barnes, resigned.

Canon Henry Twells, formerly rector of Waltham-in-the-Wolds, Leicestershire, has erected at his own cost (some £6000) the new church of St. Augustine's, Bournemouth.

The Bishop of Truro determined some months ago to preach in every parish in Cornwall one Sunday in the year. On each Sunday throughout the summer he occupied pulpits in three different churches.

The Hannington-Parker memorial church will be built at Mombasa; but Bishop Tucker has undertaken to raise £500 to erect a church at Frere Town, where it was at first proposed to raise the memorial.

Intelligence from Archdeacon Wolfe seems to show that he has satisfactorily arranged the question of the recent attack upon Mr. and Mrs. Phillips at Kien-Yang. Compensation is to be given, and the missionaries are to settle in any city they may choose.

Sermons were preached in the church of St. Andrew-by-the-Wardrobe, Queen Victoria-street, on Sunday week, in aid of the Bible Society. The preacher in the morning was Rev. Ernest J. Towne, who delivered a sermon from the words, "Search the Scriptures."

It is announced that, on Sunday week, Rev. W. T. McCormick, vicar of St. Matthew's, Brighton, moved his communion-table from the East wall, as sanctioned by the Rubric. Other Evangelical clergymen in different parts of the country intend to do likewise.

Intelligence from China shows (says the Record) that Archdeacon Wolfe has satisfactorily arranged the question of the recent attack upon the Rev. Hugh Stowell Phillips and his wife at Kien-Yang. Compensation is to be given, and the missionaries are to settle in any city they may choose.

The annual conference of clergy and laity in the Archdeaconry of Stafford has just been held at West Bromwich, under the presidency of Archdeacon Scott. Papers were read on "The Church in Her Relation to the World," "The Church and Nonconformity," and "The Church and Her Schools."

The Ripon Diocesan Conference had a distinguishing feature worth imitation. On the evening preceding the opening of the conference a working-men's meeting was held in St. George's Hall, Bradford. A vast congregation of 4000 attended, and addresses were given by the Bishop of Ripon, Archdeacon Farrar, Canon Fleming, and others.

Princess Christian visited the Borough on Wednesday week for the purpose of laying the foundation-stone of the handsome new building which is being erected by the Charterhouse Mission. The building is to comprise a church on the ground floor and a series of rooms above for the use of various organisations connected with the mission.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has consented to open a series of short sermons in the pages of Lloyd's News. His paper will be followed by the Bishops of Bath and Wells, Ely, Ripon, Southwell, Wakefield, Sodor and Man, Lichfield, Peterborough, Rochester, Worcester, Bedford, Dover, Beverley, Southwark, Derby, and Barrow-in-Furness, who have already sent or promised sermons.

At the Autumnal Conference of the Church Association, held last week at Folkestone, the Lincoln judgment was seriously considered. Mr. E. C. Boville said: "That judgment destroyed all former decisions of the Privy Council, and also all sense of finality. It might lead to disestablishment, or to the Church going over bodily to Rome. The struggle was between Protestanism and Romanism. He thought the Church had a great deal of vitality in it yet, and would in the end triumph over Ritualism and Rome."

CONGREGATIONAL.

The 168th anniversary of the Church at Chesham has just been celebrated.

Rev. S. King has concluded an eight days' mission at Westgate-on-Sea.

Special services were held last week in Queen's Park Church, Harrow-road, for the deepening of spiritual life.

Rev. J. J. Williams, late of Horwich, who has spent forty years in the ministry, has entered on a new pastorate at Garstang.

Wycliffe Chapel, Philpot-street, Commercial-road (Rev. C. James), reports 575 scholars and sixty-three teachers in the Sunday-schools.

Uxbridge Sunday-school (Rev. H. E. Bennett) reports 493 scholars and forty-six teachers. The branch school at Ickenham has seventy-three scholars and eight teachers.

The ordination services in connection with the settlement of Rev. Hugh P. Young, at West Kensington, took place on Sunday and Monday. Rev. Dr. Falding delivered an eloquent charge on Sunday morning.

Rev. J. A. Joyce, pastor of Loughborough Park Congregational Church, Brixton, has been appointed by the London Missionary Society to Berhampur, North India, and expects to sail for his new sphere of labour during the present month.

At the annual meetings of the Nottingham Institute, held last week, Rev. Dr. Clemance said so far from the Institute flooding the ministry with uneducated men, as was feared by some when it was commenced, the effect had been precisely in the opposite direction. When the Institute was started the proportion of untrained men entering the ministry was from 40 to 50 per cent.; it was now only from 14 to 16 per cent.

The old scholars' meeting at New-court Chapel, Tollington Park (Rev. W. Pierce), to celebrate the twenty-first anniversary of the Sunday-school, drew together a large gathering. Mr. Watmore, who has been secretary for over twenty years, said 3000 children had passed through the schools, and there were now about 880 on the books, about 150 were in senior classes, and more than a hundred are church members.

Rev. W. H. Lewis, who resigned the pastorate of Whitefield Memorial Church, Ashley-road, Bristol, from illness, in March last, and went to Australia for the benefit of the sea voyage and a warmer climate, has written from Melbourne saying, "My health, I am happy to believe, is getting thoroughly re-established, as instanced by the fact that I almost every Sunday since I landed in the colonies I have preached without any ill effects."

A meeting was held on Wednesday week, at Islington Chapel (Rev. R. Berry), to bid farewell to Mrs. M'Kittrick, Miss Moxam, and Miss Lanceley, who are going out as missionaries to the Balolo district of the Congo Mission, under the auspices of Dr. Grattan Guinness. Dr. H. G. Guinness, who had with him Lofanza and Molly, a boy and girl convert from Balolo-land, gave an account of the sphere of labour. Miss Lanceley (formerly a teacher in Islington Sunday-school) and Miss Moxam delivered addresses.

BAPTIST.

We hear that Rev. G. W. Thomas, of Tring, has accepted the pastorate at Derby-road, Watford.

A room has been secured in Queen's-terrace, Church End, Finchley, for services in connection with the Strict Baptists.

Zion Church Sunday-school, Greenwich, reports 396 scholars (eighteen of whom are members of the church) and forty teachers.

Toxteth Tabernacle, Liverpool, has just celebrated its twenty-first anniversary. Mr. W. P. Lockhart (the pastor) reported great cause for encouragement and thankfulness.

Queen's-road Sunday-school, Barking, reports 233 scholars and nineteen teachers. Out of fifty members of young men's Bible-class, fourteen have joined the church during the year.

The day and Sunday-schools at Scapegoat-hill, a straggling little village hard by Golcar, which have been enlarged by the addition of an infant school and two class-rooms, were reopened on Saturday.

Mr. J. J. L. Cooler has, for the sake of his health, resigned the secretaryship of the London Strict Baptist Ministers' Association. Mr. John Kingston has undertaken the position until Mr. Cooler is able to resume the duties or a successor is appointed.

Services in connection with the chapel anniversary, and the recognition of the newly-settled pastor, Rev. W. G. Branch, were held at Oadby, Leicester, on Sunday and Monday last. On Sunday sermons were preached by the pastor, and on Monday afternoon Rev. J. Fletcher, of London, preached.

The Missionary Herald reports the Centenary Fund as having reached £98,497 14s. 9d. The collections on Centenary Sunday, October 2, had yielded up to date of going to press the sum of £2241. The fund is to be kept open in the hope that the contemplated amount of £100,000 may be exceeded, so as to meet the existing debts on the Society's accounts.

The eighty-eighth anniversary of the chapel at Poole, Dorset, was celebrated on Sunday and Monday last. Special sermons were preached by Rev. J. P. Williams, of Southsea, and a public tea and meeting were held, when addresses were delivered. The monthly meetings for Christian fellowship have been seasons of great blessing. The young men's Bible class is encouraging.

The fourth anniversary of the Raleigh Park Baptist Chapel, Brixton, was held on Sunday week, when Rev. W. C. Minifie preached, and on Wednesday, when a tea and public meeting was held. Mr. William Olney presided, and addresses were delivered by Prof. A. McCaig, B.A., LL.B., Rev. J. Wilson, and the pastor, Rev. Frederic Carter. Encouraging reports were read by the secretary and treasurer.

METHODIST.

A new Rescue Home has been opened in connection with Mr. Garrett's work in Liverpool.

An important and hopeful forward movement is going on at the Wesleyan Chapel, Broad-street, Nottingham.

Revs. C. Garrett and T. Champness have each received legacies for their work of £500 left by the late Mr. Illingworth.

An impetus to missionary enthusiasm throughout Wales was imparted by an inspiring Central China Missionary convention at Cardiff.

The Ambleside circuit has raised the income of its foreign missionary auxiliary over 80 per cent. this year, chiefly by use of the lantern at the missionary meetings.

The Coffee Concerts at Cleveland Hall have now become a most successful feature in the work of the West London Mission. This is their fourth session. Last winter they were crowded for thirty nights.

The new chapel at Ilfracombe was opened on Thursday, when the service was conducted by Rev. J. S. Jones. At the public meeting the principal speakers were Rev. J. S. Jones, J. Harding, and other ministers of the district.

It is reckoned that about one thousand Wesleyan Methodist foreign missionary meetings will be held in the course of the present month. The receipts at the mission-house are several thousand pounds in advance of the amount received at the same time last year.

The Salisbury Times gives an excellent report of recent meetings in that cathedral city on behalf of the London Mission, and follows up by suggesting that the principles of the Forward Movement should be carried out in Salisbury, where a large proportion of the people never enter a place of worship.

The Eastney Soldiers' Home Anniversary was the most successful ever held. Captain Riley, a valued friend of the institution, presided, and after the report, read by the chaplain, Rev. A. E. Sharpley, at once called for the collection, which was followed by some capital anthem singing by the Eastney Temperance Choir, and speeches by Major Fawkes, R.A., and Rev. H. J. Cundy.

At the recent meeting of the missionary committee of the United Methodist Free Churches, Rev. William Vivian fulfilled a purpose cherished for some months, and offered himself for the newly-formed mission to the interior from Sierra Leone. The offer was cordially accepted, but with al regretfully, as it will involve Mr. Vivian's resignation of the superintendency of the Sierra Leone Mission.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Arthur's-hill Church, Newcastle, has called Rev. J. Conway, of Wooler.

Rev. G. T. Murray has opened his ministry at Bermondsey with good promise of success.

Rev. J. C. Scott, of College Park, has been conducting mission services in New Barnet Church.

Rev. J. Gillies, of Hampstead, conducted last week a special mission in South Hackney Church.

Rev. J. D. Watters, of Cardiff, held last week an eight days' mission in Prince's-road Church, Liverpool.

Rev. A. Macrae, of Airdrie, has been elected minister of the Scottish Church, Crown-court, Covent Garden, London.

Rev. Dr. MacEwan delivered, on Monday week, a lecture at Trinity Church, Clapham, on his recent visit to America.

Mr. Robert Wales lectured at Highbury, the other night, on his visit to Toronto and the Council of the Presbyterian Alliance.

A new iron church is being opened this evening at Tulse-hill. Rev. R. Taylor, of Upper Norwood, is to take charge of the mission.

Good work is being done by Rev. D. Buchanan at Smethwick. The Sunday afternoon class merits special notice, as it has gradually grown till it now numbers between four and five hundred members. The class is composed almost entirely of those outside the church.

Two clergymen preached on Sunday week in the Presbyterian Church, Doncaster, in the absence of the minister. The services were conducted in the morning by Rev. H. W. Bowker, and in the evening by Rev. Townend Storrs, both of whom preached earnest Gospel sermons.

SALVATION ARMY.

The Farm Colony Corps raised £30 for Self-Denial.

A new citadel, in an admirable position, was opened last week at Norwich.

The members of the Inquiry Committee inspected last week the Shelters, Rescue Home, and Elevators or Workshops.

Intelligence has been received of the passing away of Capt. Barrington in India, an old and trusted Salvation Army officer.

General Booth is, it is stated, going to visit the Canadian North-West to see if he cannot establish a "Darkest England" colony there.

A man now making mats in one of the Army Elevators once had a granary, where his turnover amounted to £75,000 yearly. He says, although he could do with a little more, he is far happier now than he was when he had plenty.

Col. Clibborn and his wife (La Maréchale), who have been making a tour visiting the stations of the Army in Switzerland, were arrested on Thursday last in Geneva, and after one night's detention were conveyed to the frontier and afresh expelled from Genevan territory.

THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

American Friends are nobly helping to dispel the gross darkness in Jamaica by the missionaries at work there. They deserve at once our sympathy and great success.

The idea is ventilated in the Christian Worker of a home—the Parke Home—for Friends in Chicago next year during the Centennial Exhibition. Unquestionably the thought is a happy one, and its realisation would be an unmixed boon to thousands of Friends—American and English—there. It only needs encouragement to be carried out.

The need of a history of Friends is being felt in America as well as in England. A year ago Western yearly meeting appointed a committee on the subject, and the recent yearly meeting referred it to the General Conference of Yearly Meetings. Some years ago the need was ably pressed at a reunion of writers of the Friends' Quarterly Examiner in London.

On the 24th ult., two lady missionaries, who are going to India, attended a farewell meeting at Devonshire House, Albert J. Crosfield, of Reigate, in the chair. Only recently two other missionaries left for China, and are now on the way to Chung King. Thus the Friends' wing of the great army keeps increasing, and the home Church must also be blessed.

At the "meeting for sufferings," on the 4th inst., an extremely interesting letter of thanks, signed by nearly 300 names, was read from Russia, conveying the heartiest gratitude for relief during the dire calamity of famine there, and a prominent merchant in St. Petersburg expressed his belief, in the same communication, that for many years to come, maybe generations to come, such totally unexpected kindness would be remembered to the credit of England and America.

The minute proposed by a committee appointed for the purpose, endorsing A. M. Kenworthy in his visit to England was read and approved.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Liss, Hants, on Oct. 23, Mrs. Carpenter, for thirty years a consistent and devoted helper of many.—At Southport on Oct. 26, Rev. W. B. Wilshaw, for forty-five years a faithful minister of the Gospel.—At Islington, on 30th ult., Miss H. Gurr, who for twenty years has been known and loved by the students as matron at the C.M.S. College.—At Brighton, on 30th ult., Rev. F. S. Batchelor, aged seventy-four.—At Teddington, on 30th ult., Rev. G. Brewster, for many years Rector of Trinity Church, Tottenham.—At Hexham, on 29th ult., Mr. John Ridley, aged seventy-five, for many years a leading Christian worker.—At Glasgow, Rev. James Gage, B.D., of Great Hamilton-street Free Church, Glasgow, who in February was laid down by a serious attack of influenza, and was just recovering from its effects when one day in Argyle-street he attempted to stop a runaway thief, and was knocked down. The injuries he received through this mishap had such an effect upon his system, already greatly weakened, that he was never again able to undertake his duties.—On 28th ult., at Hastings, Mrs. F. E. Duff, after a painful illness, greatly beloved by the boys of her husband's large High School, and by the poor of the district.—At Leicester, Mr. G. R. Searson, a faithful preacher of the Gospel.

The Recent Mission to East End Jews

The London City Mission Magazine, writing of the recent eight days' mission to the Jews of the East End, says: "The attendance was very fair, some fifty or sixty Jewish men and youths being present at the afternoon meetings, and about two hundred at those in the evenings. Most of these gatherings were of a stormy character, several attending solely for the purpose of causing a disturbance. Yet, as of old, 'there was a division amongst them,' and many evidently came with a desire to hear and learn. Some of these latter have expressed their sorrow at the conduct of their brethren according to the flesh, and a few have placed themselves under Christian instruction. Two who brought New Testaments with them on one occasion, to read for themselves, encountered much opposition, and had finally to be rescued from the violence of the more bigoted. On the whole, we cannot but believe that inquiry had been aroused in some Jewish hearts, which we trust will bear good fruit in days to come."

So far the Secretaries (3, Bridewell-place, E.C.) have only received one donation towards the expenses of the mission. About £10 is still owing in connection with the undertaking.

Appointed by Special Royal Warrant

Soap Makers to Her Majesty The Queen.

UPHELD

by public opinion, SUNLIGHT SOAP continues to rank FIRST among the laundry and household soaps. Used according to directions it does away with all the old-fashioned drudgery of wash-day. Try it on your next wash, and convince yourself that we are right. One tablet of will do twice the work, and in half the time, of two tablets of ordinary soap.

— A BOON TO ALL. —

HARNESS' ELECTROPATHIC BELTS.

THESE GENUINE APPLIANCES are delightfully comfortable in wear, invigorate the debilitated constitution, assist digestion, give strength to every nerve and muscle of the body, and effectually prevent chills and rheumatic pains. Electricity is a simple remedy; but it is, nevertheless, a most reliable one; and the number of unsolicited testimonials we have received amply prove that we do not exaggerate when we say HARNESS' ELECTROPATHIC BELTS have alleviated the sufferings of thousands of men and women in all parts of the world. It speedily overcomes Rheumatism, Gout, Sciatica, Lumbago, Nervous Exhaustion, Impaired Vitality, Weak Back, Sleeplessness, Neuralgia, Ladies' Ailments, Indigestion, Constipation, Loss of Appetite, Kidney Troubles, and all Muscular and Nervous Disorders.

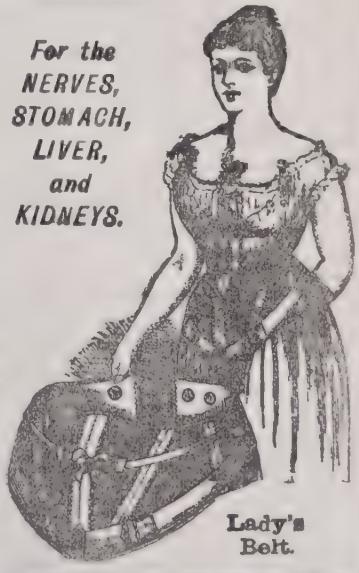
Acting directly on the system, they sustain and assist its various functions, and thus promote the health and vigour of the entire frame.

Besides these benefits, the mind is maintained in a buoyant, cheerful state, and every faculty is stimulated to the highest condition of intellectual strength.

LETTER FROM A CLERGYMAN.

The Rev. WILLIAM JOHN EDGE, late Vicar of Holy Trinity, Upper Tooting, S.W., writes:—"Having for some three years or more suffered from Sciatica, which at length became almost intolerable, I was advised to purchase one of Mr. HARNESS' full-power ELECTROPATHIC BELTS on August 16 last, which from that day forward I have persistently worn without intermission except at night. After three or four weeks the Sciatica left me, and not only has never returned but I may say with truth that, as far as my feelings are concerned, I am not conscious of the existence of a sciatica nerve. This deliverance from almost perpetual pain, which at times amounted to torture, I cannot but ascribe to your Electropathic Belt, and I feel bound thus to give public expression to my gratitude."

MR. C. B. HARNESS,



THE PRESIDENT and the other officers of the Institute, may be consulted, either personally or by letter, Free of Charge, on all matters relating to Health and the application of Curative Electricity.

Appeals.

Mauritius.—Q.M.-Sergt. Dale, Asiatic Artillery, Port Louis, Mauritius, appeals for a supply of Gospel tracts in Hindi, for distribution among Mohammedans and others.

Cow Cross Mission.—Mrs. Catlin, 17, Claremont-square, Pentonville, N., who intends closing the Cow Cross Mission in March, asks for about £60 to carry on the work through the winter.

Hamilton Soldiers' Home.—Miss Barton, writing from the Soldiers' Home, Hamilton, N.B., urges the need of help for this work, both pecuniary gifts and magazines and other suitable reading for the men.

Relief of Distress.—The Ragged School Union make a special plea on behalf of the starving and shivering children of the poor. The pressure of want is beginning to be sorely felt, both in the East End and South Side. Address, Mr. John Kirk, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

Free Breakfasts.—A committee, formed in St. Luke's Parish, Victoria Docks, E., to organise free breakfasts for starving dock labourers, appeals for help on behalf of the suffering men and their families. Communications should be addressed to Mr. C. H. Wehausen, 314, Victoria Dock-road, E.

Greenwich Marshes.—A few friends are moving towards the erection of a mission-room in connection with the labours of a London City missionary, there being great spiritual destitution among the poor of the district. Friends willing to help should communicate with Mr. A. W. Cornish, Banchory-road, Blackheath.

Y.M.C.A., Lydd, Kent.—The Hon. Sec. pleads for increased help. Unless a guarantee of £25 per annum can be raised by January he fears the work must close. There is all the more need for the work as the Roman Catholics are making special efforts in the district. Address Mr. F. E. Wootton, Ness Villa, Lydd, Kent.

The Thames Church Mission asks for books, magazines, tracts, cards, etc., for free distribution amongst the constantly changing population (300,000) on the river. At no time since the mission was instituted (1844) has there been such a demand for "something to read," and never was there less in stock to go on with—in fact, the shelves are empty. The secretary is Mr. F. Penfold, 31, New Bridge-street, E.C.

College, Talgarth, R.S.O.—There are in this village about 800 inhabitants. For the so-called "wants of the people" there are twelve low grogshops. Through long years temperance has been preached with little result. Now we mean to try the establishment of a cosy reading room and library. If some of your readers have had experience in similar effort, we shall be pleased to receive suggestions.—Mr. R. Burges, Trevecca College.

Schwifat School, Beyrout, Syria.—Miss Procter writes:—"The landlord compels me either to turn out of the boys' school or to purchase. The freehold property may be had for £300, and as it is the most suitable house for the purpose, I should like to secure it So far £150 has been promised. I am anxious to get the remainder by the end of the year, and so save £12 on the purchase money." Donations may be sent to Miss Davis, 28, Clarence-square, Cheltenham.

Soldiers' Home, Woolwich.—The trustees appeal for more liberal help towards the support of this Home. Miss Shubrick is, in particular, anxious that a Bible-woman should be employed to work amongst the soldiers' families. This urgently needed agency was discontinued about four and a-half years ago, owing to a lack of funds. To provide the salary of a Bible-woman, about £40, the usual sum allowed when their entire services are given, will be needed. Communications should be addressed to Miss Shubrick, The Soldiers' Home, Woolwich.

Brunswick Institute Extension.—The work which is comprised under the title of Institute was started in 1878 in a small back room in a back street in Marylebone, and was then the only effort of the kind among boys. It now occupies large premises centrally situated at 85, High-street, Marylebone, and is the home of three distinct and complete groups of Protestant, Christian, and Gospel work, one among the children of the well-to-do, one among those of the striving poor, and the third among the ragged, debased, and destitute. The work has grown steadily during the fifteen years of its existence, and has numbered amongst its friends and supporters the late Lords Shaftesbury and Cairns, Mr. Samuel Morley, and many well-known Christians. The president is Rev. E. W. Bullinger, D.D., and the superintendent, who initiated the work, and has from the first devoted his life to it, is Mr. Arthur Jepson. Mr. Jepson has now the offer of the lease of large premises adjoining the Institute, comprising the Artillery Drill Shed and Spiritual Hall, and appeals for £1000 to cover purchase-money, premium for new lease, and expense of necessary building. Towards this sum £50 has been promised by Colonel T. M. Sandys, M.P., a vice-president, and promises of sums not yet paid have been received from Mr. James Inskip, and several other friends of Christian Protestant work. The raising of the sum of £1000 will enable the premises to be doubled in extent without any increase to the expenses. Friends willing to assist may send donations to Mr. Arthur Jepson, 12, Mandeville-place, London, W.

FOR THE

ANNUAL SALE

ON BEHALF OF

"Dr. Barnardo's Homes" for Orphan and Waif Children,

NOW SHELTERING, EDUCATING, AND TRAINING OVER 4,500 LITTLE WAIFS AND STRAYS.

Will all who are preparing gifts for the ANNUAL SALE on behalf of these Homes

KINDLY SEND THEM IN AT ONCE?

Will those whose busy fingers are at work for the Sale remember that crochet shawls, really fine underclothing for ladies and children, shirts for boys and men, suits for little boys, aprons and pinafores for girls, and sets of baby clothing, are particularly valuable additions, being much asked for and readily sold? Well-made woollen shawls are frequently asked for, and indeed, women's garments of all kinds would be especially useful. Besides these, jewellery, old coins, old china, bric-a-brac, curios, musical instruments, fancy work, trinkets, articles of vertu, drawings, &c., &c., will be gratefully received and acknowledged. Valuable help would be afforded if donors of gifts of old china, foreign goods, articles of vertu, &c., would kindly mark on them their value, or indicate the price which is likely to be obtained.

The SALE will this year be of the SAME CHARACTER as for the LAST FEW YEARS; that is to say, instead of holding a Public Bazaar at the West End of London, during the month of December, as formerly, all the goods received will be made up into

£5 AND £10 BOXES.

These Boxes will contain a very excellent selection, of the value of at least £6 and £12 respectively, and these will be sent to any part of the country on receipt of P.O. Order or Cheque, made payable to Mr. JOHN T. PAGE.

Ladies who order these Boxes will confer a great benefit upon the Homes; for by this easy method all the articles received may be disposed of without any loss in the way of such expenses as are usually incurred by holding a Bazaar at the West-End.

Many kind-hearted sympathisers have repeatedly expressed warm approval of this plan, and have promised to purchase boxes, with the contents of which they propose to hold

in their own houses, to which their personal friends can be invited during the winter months.

Dr. BARNARDO earnestly invites all who love poor children to co-operate with him in this plan to increase the funds of the Homes, by which, too, all the wearying, disappointing and expensive drawbacks of a public Bazaar are effectually avoided.

The Boxes, carefully lined and packed ready for transmission, will be dispatched on receipt of remittance to any railway station in the Kingdom. Applications (PREPAID), with full instructions as to conveyance, &c., should be sent in as soon as possible, addressed to

THE SECRETARY,

18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

Prayer for the Chinese Emperor.

REV. J. SADLER, of Amoy, writes to the Missionary Review of the World:—"Multitudes of Chinese Christians are praying for the conversion of the Emperor. Whatever views may be held in the West as to the good or evil of rulers being mixed up with the spread of the faith of Christ, here it seems to be generally felt among Chinese Christians that the will of God cannot be fully accomplished while the leaders of the country are unaffected by the truth. At present Christianity is not even regarded as a legal system of faith and conduct, much less understood. It is time for the Lord to work to discountenance heathen and immoral proceedings, which are often tolerated all round by the great of this world, if not even engaged in. Christ was weak as regards the things of this world, but He never lacked the power of the Spirit.

"Individual conversions are ever taking place. Prayer is constantly going up for such work of the Holy Spirit. There is nothing too hard for God in regard to turning the tremendous forces of heathenism to His service; and, in answer to prayer, ever being offered, raising up such effective native apostles as may, like Moses and Paul, lead multitudes into the Kingdom of kingdoms."

SERMON-LANE MISSION.—The twenty-fifth anniversary was very happily observed on Tuesday, October 25. After tea the chair was taken by the president, Mr. J. Dix Lewis, and brief addresses were given by Messrs. D. Cooksey, W. F. Edwards, T. Nixon, A. Caesar, W. West, and J. H. Lewis. In response to a call from the chair, Mr. Southey, the oldest member of the mission, gave testimony to the great blessing he and others had derived from the services at Sermon-lane during the last quarter of a century. The meeting was closed by Mr. W. H. Dawe, of Exeter, who earnestly invited all to a series of Gospel services which he conducted in the hall during the ensuing week.

JEWS IN PERSIA.—Among the interesting items in the November issue of The Messenger, the quarterly paper of the Emmanuel Missionary Union, Wimbledon, is a letter from Rev. C. H. Stileman, C.M.S. missionary, Julfa, Ispahan, who says: "Since Rev. H. Carless returned to Ispahan, on June 30, he has been three times to hold a little Saturday service in the Jewish quarter of the city, from fifteen to twenty were present the first time, and about thirty or forty on the other two occasions. Dr. Bruce has baptized another adult Jew since I last wrote, and though Mr. Norollah (the Missionary of the London Jews Society) was expelled by the Prince Governor in January, God is carrying on his own work amongst them."

THE FORTY-FIRST SERIES OF CASES.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CONSUMPTION—CASE OF A LADY AT ATHLONE.

Who writes me:—"I feel it my duty to tell of the benefit I have received from your medicine. It has been the means of saving my life."

The patient wrote me in November last. A miscarriage had been followed by inflammation of the lungs (pneumonia). All the symptoms of decline had set in—flesh and strength were rapidly wasting. She could not walk across the room.

I sent her medicine, and corresponded with her until May last. She slowly but surely progressed to recovery.

Writing me at the end of May she says:—"I have become quite strong and stouter than I ever was in my life. I shall not fail to recommend your treatment all that I can. Two doctors had given me up and everyone that saw me said I should never recover. I am sure that I should not if I had not consulted you. You are at liberty to make any use you please of my case.—(MRS.) EMILY HEATON, Northgate-street, ATHLONE."

THE GIFT OF GOD,

A SERIES OF ADDRESSES.

By Pastor THEODORE MONOD.

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"To the anxious inquirer, the new convert, the seeker after holiness, and the mature believer, we heartily recommend this book."—Wesleyan Methodist Magazine.

"These addresses are clear as a sunbeam, and full of spiritual force. The source, nature, reception, and consequence of the gift of God are treated, and the last chapters relate to its purpose and how to use it. Our counsel is, by all means get the book."—King's Highway.

CALLS TO CHRIST,

A SERIES OF GOSPEL ADDRESSES.

By Rev. W. R. NICOLL, M.A., LL.D.

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"The addresses are marked by much freshness and vigour, as well as earnestness and warmth. The writer has the gift of putting familiar truths in new aspects, and of making admonitions strike and tell which, coming even from earnest lips, are sometimes pointless and unimpressive. We heartily commend the book."—Presbyterian Messenger.

"Force and freshness are eminently the characteristics of these 'Calls to Christ'; they are also brief to a proverb, and hence they may be of great service to an earnest evangelist who knows how to use another man's thoughts. . . . But for all readers this collection of addresses contains admirable instruction, counsel, and stimulus."—Rev. C. H. SPURGEON in The Sword and Trowel.

THE PRINCE OF PREACHERS:

A SKETCH, A PORTRAITURE, & A TRIBUTE

By Rev. JAS. DOUGLAS, M.A.

C. H. Spurgeon WITH LIFE-LIKE PORTRAIT.

The Rev. THOMAS SPURGEON says of this book:—

"I have been happily conscious that the book is not a mere narration of oft-told facts (with some fiction) and worn-out anecdotes. The 'Sketch' is good; the 'Portraiture' is better; the 'Tribute' is best of all. Right glad am I that Mr. Douglas has succeeded so eminently in his difficult but congenial task."

From "The Sword and Trowel":—

"Since the 'Prince of Preachers' has been promoted to glory, many tributes of love and esteem have been rendered to his memory; but the one before us far excels all others that we have seen at present."

From "Word and Work":—

"In its own way it is quite unique, as it deals with Mr. Spurgeon not from the outside, but is a keen, loving, sympathetic analysis and exposition of the powers, purposes, and achievements of the great modern apostle."

From "The Rock":—

"The information is original, the author having exceptional opportunities of 'a personal and private' nature of knowing Mr. Spurgeon. We have no doubt the book will command a wide popularity."

From "The King's Own":—

"It is far and away the very best presentation of Mr. Spurgeon that has yet appeared. This book should become THE gift book of the season from all Spurgeon-lovers to their friends."

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

GOLD PENS: MABIE, TODD & BARD'S

...nufacture, are 14 carat tempered gold, very handsome, and positively unaffected by any kind of ink. They are pointed with selected polished iridium. The "Encyclo. Brit." says: "Iridium is a nearly white metal of high ...cific gravity, it is almost indestructible, a beautifully polished surface can be obtained upon it." They will not penetrate the paper. Writer's cramp is unknown among users of Gold Pens. One will outwear 20 gross of steel ...s. A choice is offered from 250 various shapes and points. They are a perfect revelation to those who have never used Gold Pens.
DR. OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES has used one of Mabie, Todd & Co.'s Gold Pens since 1857, and is using the same one (his "old friend") to-day; it cost him only 9s. 6d., it would have cost him, in money alone, over £10 to have ...e the same work with steel pens.

"SWAN" FOUNTAIN PEN, 10/6, Broad, Medium, or Fine Point. Unrivalled and Incomparable.

The "Swan" is a Mabie, Todd & Co. Gold Pen joined to a rubber reservoir to hold any kind of ink, which it supplies to the writing point in a continuous flow. It will hold ink enough for two days' constant work, or a week ...rdinary writing, and can be refilled with as little trouble as winding a watch. With the cover over the gold nib it is carried in the pocket like a pencil, to be used anywhere. A purchaser may try a pen a few days, and, if the ...ing point does not suit the hand, exchange it for another without charge, or have the money returned. THE MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.

PATRON: Admiral H.R.H. THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH, K.G.

LORD BRASSEY has, with great munificence, promised £5,000 towards the £30,000 needed for a carefully elaborated scheme to cope with the evils afflicting seamen in the Port of London; including a MISSIONS TO SEAMEN Church, Institute, Gymnasium, Officers' Rooms, Class Rooms, Adult Schools, and Coffee Bar, etc., in one block, with four smaller branch Seamen's Institutes, to be worked by two chaplains and five experienced readers. Besides the above £30,000, about £3,000 a-year additional will be needed for maintenance of staff and buildings in East of London.

COMMANDER H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, R.N., K.G., is president of the London Funds Committee of the Missions to Seamen to raise the necessary moneys. It includes, amongst others, the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Mayor, the Prime Warden of the Fishmongers, the First Lord of the Admiralty, and many leading shipowners and merchants, etc. Offertories and drawing-room meetings, etc., are solicited. Subscriptions and contributions for the General Fund, and for the Special "London Fund of the Mission to Seamen," should be sent to Messrs. Barclay, Ransom, and Co., Bankers, 1, Pall Mall East, or 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or to the General Secretary, Commander William Dawson, R.N., the Missions to Seamen, 11, Buckingham-street, Strand, London, W.C.

SORROWFUL SUFFERING.

Acute suffering is just now being silently borne by large numbers of deserving poor under the notice of the North-East London Gospel Mission. Afflicted creatures lying on the floor without a fire, and others are parting with their already scant furniture and clothing for food.

The Factory Girls and other branches are in full activity. Contributions would be most gratefully received, and may be sent to Mrs. F. A. BEVAN, 59, Prince's Gate, South Kensington, S.W., or to the Director, Mr. WM. CHORLEY, 6, Clephane-road, Canonbury, N. Parcels should be sent to Canonbury.

LONDON CITY MISSION.

500 MISSIONARIES now employed in beseeching the masses in the Metropolis to be reconciled to God through Jesus Christ our Lord. House-to-house visitation. Personal dealing. Work purely undenominational.

THE NEED IS URGENT.

THE YŌST TYPEWRITER.

The Typewriter is a necessity of the Age.

THE YŌST is the PERFECT MACHINE

IT HAS NO RIBBON,

and is in many other respects the BEST MACHINE on the Market. Innumerable users of the Yost testify to this. Its success during the first year's business has been unprecedented. The Yost is used and recommended by:—

DR. STEPHENSON, ex-President of the Wesleyan Methodist Church.
REV. N. CURNOCK, Editor of the Methodist Recorder.
REV. L. H. HALLOCK, and many other Ministers of Religion, Professional Men and Authors.

DOUBLES THE CAPACITY FOR WORK.

The REV. L. H. HALLOCK writes:—"Nothing could make me return to the slow drudgery of the pen. I have fully doubled my capacity for professional work by the use of the Yost Typewriter."

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving a portrait and sketch of Rev. Dr. C. W. WALLER, Principal of the London College of Divinity.

Mr. Moody's stay in our midst at this time is now very near its close; he hopes to sail for America on Wednesday next, Nov. 23, after the close of the four days' mission in Oxford. A year and a fortnight have elapsed since he and Mr. Sankey opened their third British campaign. It has been different in some respects from those that preceded it, but in the matter of widespread and sustained interest, and in the adaptation of the old Gospel to meet the manifold wants of the human soul, there has been the same blessed story to record. Mr. Moody will return to his own land wafted by numberless prayers and grateful good wishes. Many will note with thankfulness, from his letter to the London Committee, that there is a prospect of his return at no very distant date.

The special Gospel campaign in Ireland is not to be allowed to terminate with Mr. Moody's departure. Major Whittle and Mr. Stebbins will continue the work in the South, and Mr. Merton Smith, with Mr. Ritchie Bell as singing companion, will keep the flame alight in the North. Mr. McNeill's visit to Dublin of course terminates at the end of this week, and he returns to Scotland; but the Dublin effort it is hoped will be kept alive. The church and congregation in Belfast of which Rev. H. Montgomery is pastor, have been requested to release him for six months for evangelistic work. If this arrangement is completed, Mr. Montgomery will prove an added tower of strength to the Gospel forces now in operation throughout Ireland.

It is an old adage that "circumstances alter cases," and no human rule is of universal application. Hence we are not surprised to find that while remarks recently made in our columns as to the "inexpediency of paid native agency, except on the very smallest scale," appears to have met with general acceptance in the mission field, there are exceptional cases. For example, our esteemed friend, Rev. H. M. Dyke, of Morija, Basutoland, writes that while these "views may be correct with regard to China and other fields, it would be impossible for us to act upon them in our endeavours to evangelise heathen people such as surround us." We trust the desire for unpaid native agency will not diminish the support accorded to the noble French society represented by our venerable correspondent.

Not a little false and unhealthy sentiment is current under the guise of loyalty; loyalty to the denomination, loyalty to the church, loyalty to the institution, loyalty to the army, loyalty to the mission, loyalty to the profession, loyalty to the firm—all this may mean a necessary and praiseworthy attitude towards the body of which we may be members, but it may also mean an unrighteous demand of the strong upon the allegiance of the weak; of the leaders upon the led; of vested interests upon those who sustain them.

The only loyalty we owe is loyalty to God, which includes loyalty to conscience, loyalty to our own well-being, loyalty to those who have claims upon us, in church, or family, or social, or business relationships. Loyalty to God produces and defines all other loyalty. Recognition of this will set many minds and hearts free from a subtle and oppressive bondage.

While the representatives of the Free Churches, in conference in Manchester, have been denouncing the evil of overlapping, the evil itself continues to exist in many villages, to the serious hindrance of the work of God. The following facts were received from one of the oldest inhabitants of the village to which the facts refer:—For a population of a few hundred people, there are in this village two chapels—a Congregational and a Primitive Methodist. The former is the older and larger building, and possesses ample accommodation for both congregations. There is now a proposal to enlarge the Primitive Methodist chapel. To prevent this needless undertaking an offer has been made to the Primitive Methodists to put the Congregational chapel at their disposal for the circuit minister when he pays his monthly visit to the village, and to give a collection on that Sunday to the Connexional funds. To this proposal many would agree; but they are powerless to decide without the authority of the Connexion. What will the Connexional authorities do? Is not this an opportunity to sink denominational self-assertion in order that the cause of Christ may gain?

The pity of it is that work is usually started in village places on strictly denominational lines. The aim is not solely, or even chiefly, to do the work of God, but to extend the influence of the denomination, and secure another sectional interest. The effect of this is that the representatives of another denomination find in the village a promising field for labour, and they set up a rival cause, with the result that as there is no room for both, one decreases as the other increases. Is this to do the work of God? But alas! the people love to have it so. Have they not been trained to stick to their own cause? "I was born in it, and I will die in it," they say with great vigour, but often with scant intelligence. One feels disposed to hope that the process of dying may be speedy and effectual, not to the individual, but to the spirit which speaks thus, and which has so long hindered the work of Christ. "He must increase, but I must decrease," said the great forerunner. Will our denominational leaders say the same? Untold blessing would result if all would agree that every denominational hindrance to Christ's progress should be removed.

Complaint is sometimes heard—unjustly, we would fain believe—that in our courts there is "one law for the rich, another for the poor." The Lord Chief Justice has at any rate laid down the principle of one law for the West End and another for the East. In the action for libel brought against The Daily Chronicle by the late keeper of an East End dancing saloon, Lord Coleridge, in his summing-up, declared that what might be indecent in the West End must not be so considered in the vicinity of Tower Hill:—

> He should think that neither the dancing, nor the singing, nor the talking was of such a character as would commend itself to the jury or to himself. But they must not apply their principles or judgment to these places on Tower-hill or to people like the frequenters of Tower-hill. They could not expect that in places of this sort there would not be things of which sound morality would disapprove, and they could not apply those strict principles which were no doubt the right and true principles for people to act upon.

We cannot help expressing great regret that his Lordship paid so little heed to the testimony of the devoted ladies who have for years been combating the evils so rampant in this district:—

> He had no doubt they came there intending to speak strictly the truth, and he had no doubt to a certain extent—he did not impugn their veracity—they did speak the truth. He dared say they saw many things they could not approve of. It was another thing whether you could trust the conclusions they drew.

As one of them declared, she had "no motive to distort the truth," and their evidence was certainly such as most Christian workers could endorse from sad experience. The Governor of Her Majesty's prison in one of our large centres of population remarked to us not long ago: "Yes, drunkenness and crime are very prevalent in this city; but, bad as things are, if you were to shut up the Christian missions, I should require 900 to 1000 more cells." Such a testimony may well encourage those who plod along with very little in their surroundings to cheer them in their noble endeavours.

We observe that The Weekly Times, a newspaper which circulates largely amongst the working classes, announces that in an early issue will be commenced a series of articles on "The Gospel of the Poor," in which an endeavour will be made to show "the true democratic basis of real Christianity and the preceding dispensation of Moses and the patriarchs." The announcement continues:

> Now, as ever, it is reverently believed, is the Divine utterance fraught with truth and power. "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me." Now, as of old, it is the faith of Christian societies with St. Cyril that if the Church of Christ worked but for one day, as she ought, the world would be converted ere nightfall. . . The aim of the series of papers is to induce thoughtful men and women of all sects to examine carefully the true claims of Christianity on their allegiance, and to unite in one grand effort to bring the world within its influence.

The prospect in regard to the probable condition of large numbers of the industrious poor during the coming winter is fast becoming a very alarming one, and however the quoted figures as to the number of the unemployed may be qualified, there can be no doubt that already there is a vast amount of distress in our large cities and towns. No doubt there will by and by be a great strain upon our charitable associations; and it is to be hoped that those who have been in the habit of contributing to the various good movements for the alleviation of distress will this year send their gifts early, and that many of those who hitherto have not regarded the numberless appeals for help may be led to do so in the present painful condition of things in our midst.

The Local Government Board's annual report, recently issued, is not an altogether satisfactory one in regard to the somewhat difficult problem of the boarding out of "pauper" children, and it would seem that in many cases the little boarders are both ill-fed and neglected in many ways by those to whose care they have been entrusted. This unhappy result is not, however, the fault of the system, but probably rather of the want of wise selection in the first instance, and it is to be hoped that steps will be taken to prevent these drawbacks, and to ensure, as far as possible, the humane treatment of the poor waifs whose misfortune it is to have come at so early an age within the regulations affecting the various classes which are grouped under the somewhat too comprehensive term of "paupers."

In an article written five days before the Presidential election in the United States, The Independent of New York expressed a strong hope and conviction that the Republican candidates would be elected, as best representing American manhood, American statesmanship, and American interests. Says our contemporary :—

The Democratic policy means ruin to all the vast industrial and manufacturing interests which have been developed under Protection and to the outlook of labour. It involves an unsettling of business conditions, an exposure to the evils of a State bank currency of uncertain and fluctuating values, an overthrow of reciprocity, a perpetuation of the crimes against the ballot in the south, an interruption in the progress of Civil Service Reform, the loss of all that has been gained in the treatment of the Indians, and the triumph of the lower elements of our civilisation.

Many of the points noted in this indictment are such as Christian people in this country are not qualified to adjudicate upon, but if the Democratic victory recorded at the polls on Tuesday week be indeed "the triumph of the lower elements" of American civilisation, the Christian Churches of the country are sincerely to be commiserated. We can but trust that they will rise to the measure of their responsibility, and see to it that this defeat is made the stepping-stone to future victory. No nation of freeborn men and women can tamely submit to the tyranny of Rum and Romanism.

A strange lesson in Central Africa polity is to be read in the startling intelligence conveyed in the latest letters from Garenganze to the effect that Msidi (a name familiar enough to every reader of Mr. Arnot's book) having been killed, the Garenganze kingdom, held together by force and terror, has dissolved into its original elements, while the populous capital became within a few weeks a wilderness. The question now is, What as to the future of the Garenganze mission? The present answer is that the scattering thousands who dared not under Msidi confess Christ, carry with them the good seed of the Word to spring up here and there into precious fruit. As to the missionaries, their field of service will now be found among the Luba tribes, whither the mass of the Garenganze people have gone.

The history of the world gives abundant proof that racial hatred is a noxious plant that is native to every clime. Sad to say, South Africa sends us reports of its evil harvesting. Public feeling throughout Cape Colony has been much excited by the trial of five farmers charged with tying up natives and cruelly flogging them. Two were so badly injured that they died. A jury found them guilty of common assault under great provocation, and acquitted them altogether from the charge of culpable homicide. The judge spoke out plainly. He said the finding of the jury was a disgrace to the community, and he marked his sense of the outrage by punishing the chief offender with a fine of £125, or fifteen months, and the others in proportion. Happily, all the Press has not partaken of the evil fruit. The Cape Times advocates the abandonment of trial by jury and the establishment of a special Court, as on the diamond fields, for the adjudication of cases subject to the influence of racial prejudice.

An influential deputation, comprising representatives of many anti-opium and missionary societies, waited upon the Secretary of State for India on Thursday last, and presented memorials and made speeches in favour of the suppression of the traffic. Lord Kimberley's reply was of the same character as those which have been so frequently made in the past by statesmen. China has a free hand, but in India the revenue raised on the drug cannot be dispensed with! His Lordship's address was deplorably lacking in compassion for the demoralised millions of the East, but The Times, which has of late strained every nerve to defend the traffic, styled it "very sensible and statesmanlike." It concluded an article, disfigured by many undignified allusions, by imposing upon anti-opium agitators the duty of "preparing a Bill of ways and means" for the suppression of the evil. This, of course, is by no means the duty of advocates of a moral reform. Those who think of India and China when praying "Thy kingdom come" must continue to cry out against that which is God-dishonouring on the part of Great Britain, alike in her home and foreign relations, assured that as soon as statesmen are willing to see their duty in regard to this wickedness, they will find it possible to adjust financial arrangements to new and righteous conditions.

A missionary writes to us from Central China :—"We rejoice in the prominence you give to the anti-opium movement. Let those Christian men who oppose themselves to God in this matter come and live in a Chinese inland city. Here, with an estimated population of 40,000, there are 1300 opium dens, beside the vast number of private pipes used."

Only a few weeks ago the daily press described the terrible destruction wrought among the natives of Dahomey by a certain deadly gun in the hands of French soldiers, hundreds being literally mown down at once. And now it is stated that a still more mischievous engine of slaughter has been devised by an Austrian who has already been knighted for a previous invention of a kindred nature. The results of the recent trial of this "new automatic repeating rifle" at Vienna are described as "simply appalling," bullets are poured out like a hailstorm, and it is claimed that those who use it in the battle-field "will sweep away like flies" the opposing ranks which are not armed with it. Truly, with the Continental powers thus vying with each other in producing the deadliest weapons and most ponderous ships, with nearly twenty millions of men in arms, with all the elements of an immense conflagration only awaiting a spark to ignite them. with the political air of Europe quivering with unrest, suspicion, and apprehension, the outlook is a sad one. To the human eye, the time when men shall "beat their swords into plowshares" is far distant, but we may remember Him who "doeth according to his will in the army of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth."

The principal item in the Ritualistic programme is the exaltation of the sacrament as the chief act of worship; or, in plain words, its assimilation to the Mass. At a recent meeting of a leading branch of the English Church Union, previous to which "the Eucharist was celebrated with all the points known as the Catholic [Roman ?] adjuncts," an address was given by a clergyman well known for his Romanising practices, in the course of which he is reported to have said :—

There are many most faithful clergymen who preach continually about the Real Presence, but who, if they were to put in plain words their belief, would shock their communicants; and, more so, if they clothed their services with such practical, outward, and visible signs as would express their belief, they would make quite a revolution in their parishes. Even among English Church people many are now living and dying without a true belief in the blessed sacraments.

The speaker also described how in his church at Portsmouth he had introduced "the Eucharistic service, the Mass, and the confessional." Verily, this is glorifying in his shame. Such men are traitors to that Church whose orders they hold, and are every whit as much to be abhorred as the soldier who boasts of having betrayed a fortress into the enemy's hands.

Miss Cusack certainly has got her eyes fully cleansed from the glamour of Romanism. With all the ardour of the young convert, she is exposing the hollow shams by which that false system and its Ritualistic imitators seek to deceive unthinking people. A small volume she has lately published (A Remarkable Book, 1s. 6d., Marshall Bros.) contains a thorough-going exposure of a Ritualistic "Guide to Low Mass, according to the ancient customs of the Church of England," a copy of which she succeeded in obtaining, but which, she says is not now available for the general public. Assuredly if the sentiments expressed in this "remarkable book" are held to any large extent in the prevalent section of the English Established Church, we may as well cease to grieve over dreaded Romish supremacy, for it has already come.

In the second part of her startling pamphlet, in which she discusses Romish relics, Miss Cusack makes some notable statements as to the stealthy but rapid progress that the Papal system is making in the United States. "A Holy Bone" taken from the wrist of St. Ann, grandmother of our Lord, has been exhibited in New York this year so successfully that the priest in charge of the supposed relic admits that he has cleared £4000 by the transaction. That would seem to show a more widespread gullibility on the part of the New York public than we could have supposed. But worse still are two facts which Miss Cusack asserts with all confidence. She says, "The Press in America is well known to be under the direct control of the Church of Rome, with a very few exceptions." And again :—

The next step will be the establishment of the Inquisition openly, as it is already established secretly in America, so that anyone who dared, Lutherlike, to protest against this outrageous idolatry might be punished for his sin against the Church by imprisonment or death.

We are glad to know from the author that "England is not ready for such exhibitions yet." The implication, however, is that before long she may be.

Dear Mr. Editor,—Referring to the case of the impotent man at the pool of Bethesda (last week. page 9), we are not told that he had been thirty-eight years at the pool, but that he had been diseased thirty-eight years.

Yours faithfully,

D. M.

The writer thanks "D. M." for the correction. It does not, however, affect the purpose of the note.

"Measure the Pattern."

Again and again Moses was commanded to make the Tabernacle and all things connected with it according to the pattern showed him in the Mount. In the last chapter of Exodus, after recounting the work, it is added, "Thus did Moses: according to all that the Lord commanded him, so did he." Then the chief particulars are rehearsed, with the refrain eight times repeated, "as the Lord commanded Moses."

The Temple was but the Tabernacle translated into stone, with such additions as befitted the settled life in the land. Yet it also was built according to Divine pattern: "All this, said David, the Lord made me understand in writing, by his hand upon me, even all the works of this pattern."

In Cologne Cathedral are preserved the architect's plans of that magnificent structure. No greater indignity could be offered to an architect than that the builder should depart from his design, and obtrude his own devices. And God speaks thus indignantly to Israel by Ezekiel (xliii. 7—12):

> Son of man, the place of my throne, and the place of the soles of my feet, where I will dwell in the midst of the children of Israel for ever. . . . . Thou, son of man, show the house to the house of Israel, that they may be ashamed of their iniquities, and let them measure the pattern.

Their God was aggrieved that his people had departed from the pattern which He had given them; as e.g., when Ahaz sent the pattern of a heathen altar from Damascus, to supplant the altar of burnt offering. Yet this was but an example of what the kings and the people had habitually done, substituting their own will for the will of God, "in their setting of their thresholds by my thresholds, and their posts by my posts, for a wall between Me and them." And God would only restore to them his presence on condition that they returned to his pattern:

> And if they be ashamed of all that they have done, show them the form of the house, and the fashion thereof, and the goings out thereof, and the comings in thereof, and all the forms thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, and all the laws thereof; and write it in their sight, that they may keep the whole form thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, and do them.

The Tabernacle and the Temple were but foreshadowing emblems of Christ Jesus and his Church—of Jesus Himself: for when He said, "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up," He spake of the temple of his Body. Of his Church: for when "God raised Him from the dead, and set Him at his own right hand," He "gave Him to be Head over all things to the Church, which is his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all." And this body is a temple composed of living stones, "built upon the foundation of the Apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner stone, in whom all the building, fitly framed together, groweth unto a holy temple in the Lord."

However flagrantly the kings and people of Israel departed from the pattern of God's house, the Gentile Church has done far worse, considering her greater light. The Epistles may be described as a definition, in every minute particular, of the pattern of the Church of God, and of his plan of its life on earth.

The Tabernacle was a temporary structure; the Temple was more permanent; they were alike in this, however, that both were made of things without life. But the New Testament Temple is a living organism, and the human body is its breathing and moving pattern. The New Testament itself contains all the doctrine, instruction, counsel, exhortation, correction, needful, that the man of God, that every member of this body, should be thoroughly furnished unto all good works.

Therefore, the Apostle says to his beloved Timothy, his own son in the faith: "These things write I unto thee, that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God, which is the Church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth." And again, "Hold fast the form," or rather, "Keep the pattern of wholesome words which thou hast heard of me, in faith and love, which is in Christ Jesus."

The wholesome words of the Apostle are all in order to "the edifying of the body of Christ." It may safely be asserted that every doctrine or direction in the New Testament is based upon and in keeping with the fundamental idea of a building of God, composed of living stones; of a body of which Christ is the Head, and his people the individual members.

The members of our bodies are guided by the will: we are, therefore, exhorted to yield our members as instruments of righteousness unto God; to present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, our reasonable worship; and not to be conformed to this age, but to be transfigured by the renewing of our mind (by the Word of God and prayer), that we may prove the will of God holy, acceptable, and perfect.

This is a command to be individually obeyed by every member of the Church. But it cannot be fully obeyed independently of the other members, for "only with all saints can we comprehend the love of Christ, and be filled unto all the fulness of God." The Spirit of God, when we are all absolutely yielded to Him, will enable the whole body, fitly joined together, and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, to make increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love. (Eph iv.)

The measure in which we have failed of this ideal indicates the extent of our departure from the Divine pattern, setting our thresholds by God's thresholds and our posts by his posts, for a wall between us and Him. And if He resented this with regard to the decayed and vanished dispensation of the law, He will certainly not consent to it with regard to the dispensation of the everlasting Gospel.

A hundred ways might be mentioned in which we have departed from God's pattern, some in one way and some in another, but all in this, that love has waned; that there is schism in the body; that it is so largely true that we all seek our own and not the things that are Jesus Christ's; that we seek every man his own and not everyone another's welfare. Consequently we judge one another and are judged with the same judgment; whereas if we judged ourselves we should not be judged.

In the early centuries of this age departure from God's pattern began and continued until the Romish apostasy, which is painted Paganism, built her Babel in the name of a Church, having, like her prototype, brick for stone and slime for mortar. The Jachin and Boaz of this false Temple are Sacerdotalism and Sacramentarianism. We may enter our protest against Romanism, but may it not be said to ourselves: "Thou that judgest doest the same things?" The weakness of our protest will lie in the Sacramentarian leaven inhering in it. The substitution of Sacraments for Christ as the way to God is a counterpart of the sin of Ahaz in setting up a great altar after the Damascus pattern in the stead of the altar that Moses made according to the pattern which God showed him in the Mount: "Thou son of man shew the house to the house of Israel, that they may be ashamed of their iniquities, and let them measure the pattern."

Mr. Moody and London.

The following letter has been sent to Messrs. George Williams and T. A. Denny, on behalf of the London Evangelistic Committee, formed at the recent meeting in the Holborn Restaurant:—

Dear Friends,

I have given my earnest consideration to the wish, expressed by yourselves and other brethren, that I should conduct another mission in London before returning to America. Inclination would prompt me to comply with your kind request, but there are several strong reasons that have impelled me to come to a contrary decision.

I have now been absent from America more than a year, which was the period I had fixed for my contemplated journey round the world. There are many matters connected with my schools at Northfield and in Chicago, which at this time require my presence and personal attention. My family returned to Northfield some months ago, and I am unwilling, on that score also, to prolong my absence from home.

My fellow-labourer, Mr. Sankey, had to return to the United States in June in order to fulfil engagements there which he had made previous to our coming to this country. For that reason he has not been able to help me in the work in England and Ireland. His absence is another reason why I should not enter on a prolonged London mission at this juncture.

Lastly, I feel that there ought to be a much longer period of preparation for such a mission as you propose, than there could possibly be if I were now to accede to your request. The difficulties of a united and effective evangelistic campaign in London, on an extensive scale, are such that ample time should be given for the preparatory arrangements that are essential in order to secure lasting results.

I highly appreciate the kindness and hearty co-operation shown by many friends in London in connection with the recent mission at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. To myself the work there was a privilege I shall ever greatly prize, and I am thankful to know that the ascertained results of the week's effort have been so satisfactory. If God spares us and preserves us in health, Mr. Sankey and myself would be glad to consider the advisability of helping your London committee in an earnest, aggressive endeavour, at some period after the closing of the Chicago World's Fair, to reach the great industrial masses in your city, so many of whom are still uninfluenced by the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The spiritual condition of these portions of society in all our large cities, on both sides of the Atlantic, is one which I think demands the most serious, prayerful, and practical consideration of all the evangelical churches.

With every good wish, and asking your prayers on behalf of my contemplated work in Chicago next year,

I am, yours, very sincerely,

D. L. Moody.

GREAT FIRE IN JAPAN.—A telegram dated Yokohama, November 14, announces that a most destructive fire has occurred at Tokio. Six hundred houses were burned.

Modern Oxford Theology.

Sixty years ago, priestly and sacramentarian theories, supposed to have perished with Laud, entered on a new lease of life at Oxford. Discarding all traditions of evangelical faith and fervour, a new generation arose in whose eyes robes and rites appeared the more important elements of worship. Salvation, they taught, was secured, not by the sinner's personal faith in the Gospel, but by the priestly conveyance of the Holy Ghost in baptism, and by the ministration of the "Bread of life" in the Lord's Supper.

At the close of these six decades of growing superstition, and within the ranks in which priesthood is most highly prized, rationalism of a marked type has suddenly risen into prominence. Readers of Lux Mundi, many to their horror, all to their amazement, discovered that its accomplished editor, Principal Gore, of Pusey House, is inclined to admit without reserve the alleged results of the most daring criticism. The late Canon Liddon and the Archdeacon of Taunton, both of the older and better High Church party, protested in vain. To believe that the Old Testament Scriptures have neither the character nor the authority claimed for them by our Holy Redeemer Himself is freely allowed within the New School, whose seat and centre is Oxford. The influence of Canons Cheyne and Driver (the latter more cautious and prudent than the former) in the rise and growth of this modern "phase of faith" is not difficult to trace.

Within the Church of England the danger of this departure from the faith has not been fully recognised. Attempts have been made to bring the matter before certain of its assemblies, but hitherto without success. As the Church of Rome is not careful to defend the Bible against Rationalistic attacks because of the living authority of the Pope, so the English communion seems confident of security because of the available testimony of the Church. Criticism may invalidate the Book, but it is supposed to be powerless against the organised community. Nevertheless the danger to faith threatened by this antagonism to its records issuing from a University so influential is real, and cannot be recognised too soon. Whether the nation can adopt any measure to protect itself against the weakening of our belief in Scripture is a question which cannot be considered too wisely or too well. As we have always maintained, there can be no objection to fair and honest criticism—in the long run it can only be productive of the best results; yet there is good reason to doubt the propriety of countenancing rash suppositions and speculations which at the best are only tentative and unsettling.

A SOLDIERS' CONFERENCE.—The first Soldiers' Christian Conference was held at Dagshai, on the Himalaya Mountains, on October 11. Christian men from the out-stations assembled in encouraging numbers, and took part in the proceedings. The topics were:—"Witnesses for Christ," dealt with by the 93rd Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders; "Walking with Christ," by men of the Derbyshire regiment; "Working for Christ," by the Gordon Highlanders; and "Waiting for Christ," by Kasuli brethren. Several ministerial friends also took part. Rev. J. Nelson, Presbyterian chaplain, writes: "Special work among the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders has raised the number of men in the Soldiers' Christian Association from six to thirty."

MISSION TO FISHERMEN.—The hospital ship Albert, belonging to the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, has sailed from St. John's for Yarmouth. Both the Government and the Newfoundland merchants are willing to co-operate in the philanthropic work of the mission, and if the latter decides to continue its ministrations they will build the necessary hospitals in Labrador.

"Revelation and the Bible."*

Modern apologists of the new Oxford School are content to surrender the infallibility of Scripture in the hope of conserving Christ in his present and permanent influence. They appear to forget that all our knowledge of the Saviour on which our real communion with Him must ever depend is communicated to us by the record whose trustworthiness they are so ready to impugn. Certainty can ultimately and only be assured by sufficient authority. Unless we have reason to believe that a direct message from heaven reaches us through a specially-prepared channel, our faith can never be either fixed or firm. Vainly do we affect to dispense with a revelation implicit and accurate in the very terms of its conveyance; for without a clear and complete clothing in fit language it would both disappoint and deceive.

To an individual God may speak immediately, and if the communication be purely private and personal, there it ends. But if the revelation thus given is intended to be transmitted to others throughout all time, the exactness of its embodiment in words is essential. Theories as to how this can be best accomplished are here out of place. We are only concerned with the recognition of the fact. It is vain to tell us that the Bible makes no such claim to accuracy. Every serious student knows it does over and over again from beginning to end. Yet Mr. Horton in his recent volume endeavours to persuade us that this is a huge and harmful mistake. While apparently anxious to conserve the facts and doctrines of the Christian faith, and while even willing to allow inspiration to a certain extent in a modified form, his whole argument tends to discredit the Book we have all been taught to love and reverence. In chapter after chapter he adduces instances in which he professes to find proof of ignorance and of mistake on the part of the writers. His statements are neither novel nor serious; though, coming as they do from a minister of the Word who often writes with even passionate evangelical fervour, they are likely to prove all the more misleading to the unwary.

We cannot pretend in the brief space at our disposal to criticise his assertions in detail. We content ourselves with a few specimens which, for the present, may suffice. Speaking of chronological errors Mr. Horton says:—

> If you add together the dates given in the Book of Judges it would seem that the book covers 410 years, but in 1 Kings vi. 1, the whole period from the Exodus to the fourth year of Solomon is given as 480 years, which would leave for the book of Judges not 410, but 349 years.

We venture to place beside this the suggestion of one who has a much keener insight into the significance of Scripture than the assailant of the chronology:—

> If we follow the history of Israel as detailed in the book of Judges we shall find that for five several periods their national existence as Jehovah's people was in abeyance. In punishment for their idolatry God gave them up again and again, and sold them into the hands of their enemies. They became slaves to the King of Mesopotamia for eight years, to the King of Moab for eighteen years, to the King of Canaan for twenty years, to the Midianites for seven years, and finally to the Philistines for forty years. But the sum of 8+18+20+7+40 years is 93 years; and if 93 years be deducted from 573 years the result is 480 years. It is obvious, therefore, that the 480 years of the book of Kings, from the Exodus to the Temple, is a mystic era formed by eliminating every period during which the people were cast off by God.†

Striking and singular facts of this sort ought to give us pause before charging the writers of the Book with mistakes which are only apparent because of our own ignorance of the whole facts of the case. Nine-tenths of Bible difficulties would disappear if this were duly and always remembered.

What are we to think of the expository sagacity of an author who discovers in Deut. iv. 19 Jehovah "allotting the various objects of false worship unto all nations"; and who finds in these words of Micah, "All the people will walk every one in the name of his god, and we will walk in the name of the Lord our God for ever and ever" (iv. 5) evidence "that this prophet had not yet risen to the conception which we call monotheism"?

Mr. Horton's view of the limits of inspiration appears in the following statement which may be taken also as an additional illustration of his lack of skill in the interpretation of Scripture:—"In his [the apostle Paul's] first letter which has come down to us, referring to that great event (the second coming of the Lord), he implies that he himself would be living when it happened (1 Thess. iv. 15-17—we which are alive), and though in his second to Thessalonica he sought to remove the erroneous impression that the day of which he had spoken was actually upon them, yet at the end of his life he dwelt still fondly on the belief that the Lord was near (Phil. iv. 6)."

We need not carry criticism further. According to our author the Bible contains Divine revelations which each one must discover for himself, not without the aid of the Divine Spirit. But what if the searchers arrive at conflicting, and even contradictory results?

MR. CAIRNS IN MANCHESTER.

Mr. G. R. Cairns has concluded an eight days mission at the Wilmott-street Hall, Hulme, Manchester. This hall with its galleries will accommodate 750 persons; and attached to it are numerous class-rooms. The mission has been in existence for about twenty-two years: it is purely evangelistic but attached to it is a large Sunday-school in connection with Union Chapel, and principally worked by members of the congregation of Dr. A. Maclaren.

Mr. Cairns has been at Wilmott-street on two previous occasions. He came for the first time just three years ago, and paid a second visit after one year. There were very good results on both these occasions, and many of the best workers at present labouring at Wilmott-street, were brought in at one or other of his visits.

This time a great blessing was asked for, and expected; nor were the expectations disappointed. Over 200 have professed to decide for Christ, and their names and addresses have been carefully noted that they may be visited and watched over. The testimony of all at Wilmott-street is that the results of all Mr. Cairns's meetings have been most satisfactory, he leaves behind him many thankful hearts, who bless God for the simple and forcible Gospel teaching they have received at these meetings.

THE CITY OF LONDON TOTAL ABSTAINERS UNION held on Friday evening the opening meeting of the winter session. The gathering took place at the warehouse of Messrs. Smith and Lister, Cannon street. Mr. Robert Burn presided. After an experience of twenty years, he said he could most strongly advise all before him to become total abstainers. Mr. J. H. Raper (U.K.A.) followed in a humorous and stirring speech. There were peculiar difficulties, he said, to be confronted in City warehouses, as the employés had the drink set before them gratis; that made no difference, however, for even then it was dear.

PLYMOUTH.—Mr. John H. L. Christien, organising superintendent of the London Midnight Meeting Movement, has been holding midnight and other meetings of the fallen at Plymouth, Stonehouse, and Devonport. Considerable numbers attended, and it was sad to see so many very young women given up to a life of sin. They listened attentively to very earnest appeals and some were moved.

Joshua and His Life-Work.*

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.,
CHRIST CHURCH, WESTMINSTER BRIDGE ROAD.

THREE DAYS' PAUSE.—Joshua i. 11.

THE whole land of Canaan was Israel's by deed of ft. As soon as Lot had separated from Abraham, oosing all the plain of Jordan, and pitching his nt toward Sodom, the Lord drew near his faithful rvant, assuring him that He would not suffer him lose by his magnanimity. "Arise," said the vine Voice, "walk through the land in the length it, and in the breadth of it, for unto thee will I ve it." But after that, when Melchizedek had essed him, and he had watched through the long urs with God, beneath the horror of the great rkness, "the Lord made a covenant with him, ying, Unto thy seed have I given this land, from river of Egypt unto the great river, the river phrates."

But though this was so, each square mile of it d to be claimed from the hand of the peoples at possessed it. "The sole of the foot" had to be t down to claim and take. The cities were theirs, t they must enter them; the houses, which they d not built, were theirs, but they must inhabit em; the cornfields in the rich vales and the vineds on the terraced slopes were theirs, but they ust possess them. It is not difficult for us to realise ese things, for spiritually we occupy precisely a nilar position. God our Father hath blessed us th all spiritual blessings in Christ Jesus, but they not ours to enjoy, until we have claimed and propriated them by a living faith. They are only rs as we avail ourselves of them. Hence the need be strong and very courageous.

But now a new and unexpected delay took place. three days' pause was called. The officers inrmed the people that three days must pass before ey could go in to possess the land, which the rd their God was giving them to possess.

I. WHAT THIS PAUSE MEANT.—"Three days" is recognised period in Scripture for Death and surrection. "As Jonah was three days and three ghts in the belly of the sea-monster (R.V.), so all the Son of Man be three days and three nights the heart of the earth." "On the third day He l raise us up, and we shall live before Him." And was, therefore, appropriate that this period should pse ere the people could pass through symbolic ath over to resurrection ground.

But there was another and deeper reason for the ay, which closely touches one of the greatest nciples of the inner life. When Israel reached banks, the Jordan was in flood, and overflowing low-lying lands on either side of its bed. It the time of "the swellings of Jordan," which in r days was employed as an expression for overlming trouble. Before the gaze of the assem-d hosts, the turbid floods rushed on, swollen by ing snows far away on Hermon, and carrying nks of trees and other débris torn from the banks their impetuous descent. Its force and velocity, t poured down from its upper basins to the mense depression of the Dead Sea, had gained for the name of "Descender!" and this title was cially appropriate at such seasons as that at ch Israel first beheld it.

Across the river stood Jericho, embosomed in ms and tamarisks, in a very paradise of exquisite tation, its aromatic shrubs and gardens scent the air. But as the people beheld it, all their ished hopes of taking it by their own energy or rage must have been utterly dissipated. What d they do in face of that broad expanse of rush-, foaming, turbulent waters? The Jordan, on page of Scripture, is constantly associated with th. This indeed is its common characteristic. the death of the body, but that baptism into h which signifies a pause in the energies of nature and an entrance through faith on a higher and nobler level. So John baptized there, and there the Lord entered into his first identification with sins not his own. But never in all its history did the Jordan more effectually pronounce the sentence of death, than on that day when it taught the people that by no strength or energy of their own could they prevail.

Multitudes have come to the brink of that river, and have been left there, waiting on its banks, that they might consider the meaning of those impassable waters, and carry away the sentence of death in themselves. Abraham waited there for more than twenty years face to face with the apparent impossibility of ever having a son. David waited there for almost as long, and it must have seemed that the kingdom foretold to him as a youth lay on the other side of insurmountable difficulties. The sisters of Bethany waited there, and the stone, rolled heavily to the door of the tomb where Lazarus lay, must have been to them all that the Jordan was to Israel —the knell of hope.

Many a saint since then has been brought down to these same banks, and has stood to witness these flowing streams. What though the promise of God has offered all manner of blessedness and delight! That river! Always that river! That flooded, fordless, bridgeless, boatless river! Are you there now, my reader? Do not hasten from it. Stand still and consider it until the energy and impetuosity of your self-life dies down. You can never reach the Blessed Life by resolutions, or pledges, or forms of covenant; your good self is as powerless now as your bad self was formerly; you must learn that your strength is to sit still, and that the rich blessings of God stored in Christ for you are an absolute gift to be received by the outstretched hand of faith.

What a marvellous expression that is concerning the faith of Abraham. "Without being weakened in faith, he considered his own body as good as dead, and the deadness of Sarah's womb" (Rom. iv. 19). Not many could have stood such considerations long without losing all the faith they ever possessed. There was one secret, however, that sustained him. "He looked unto the promise of God." Turning from the one to the other he wavered not. These are the only conditions on which the vision of the river will not hurt us, if only we turn from it to the Presence of the Captain of the Lord's Host, and to the covenant which is ordered in all things and sure. Then we shall wax strong through faith, and be full assured that what God had promised he would be able also to perform.

II. HOW THIS PAUSE WAS SPENT. During this space of three days events transpired which are both interesting and typical. Amongst other things Jericho was entered by the two spies.

(1) Jericho may fitly stand for the world of men over which judgment is impending, but which goes on its way unheeding. The blue sky spread its canopy overhead, the sun rose and set, the fields ripened for harvest, the vintage was preparing, youth and beauty with linked hands pursued a flower-strewn path, but within a fortnight a blow would fall from which the city would not rally for centuries.

The great majority of the people were either bent on stubborn resistance, or boasted themselves on their river and their walls. Their iniquity was full. And no proclamation was made to them, no terms proposed, no embassy sent. But there was one soul in their midst who was capable of faith, and was already exercising it. And He who had nurtured her and led her to the point which she had reached was bent on perfecting what He had commenced, and on leading her into the fullest light which that age possessed. This is ever God's way. If there is but one righteous man in Sodom, He cannot destroy it till his angels have brought him forth. If there is but one doubter among the Apostles, He will not leave him comfortless, but will come to him with unmistakeable tokens. Wherever there is a Rahab who, amid much sin and ignorance, is living up to the truth she has and longing for more, God will take her hand and lead her to Himself. He discerns a touch on his robe, and stays his footsteps till He has fully healed. A Nathanael beneath the fig tree, a Eunuch in his chariot, a Cornelius praying beside the sea, are not overlooked amid the crowds of careless souls around. They are as jewels on a heap of cinders, which are eagerly espied and taken up and polished and placed amid the Divine regalia.

Two references are made in the New Testament to Rahab's faith (Heb. xi. 31; Jas. ii. 25). It was true faith, though exercised only towards a fragment of the truth. But it is not the amount of truth that a man holds that saves him, but the grasp with which he holds it. All that Rahab knew was that God had delivered his people from Pharaoh, and had promised to give them that land, and she believed it, and it was accounted to her for righteousness. And the evidences of her faith were quick to follow. She came into antagonism with the world-spirit as represented in the King of Jericho; she sent the spies out by another way; she identified herself with Israel by the scarlet thread; she gathered her kinsfolk under her roof; her window looked toward Israel, whilst her roof sheltered many a fugitive; and though her faith was not as yet sufficiently strong to deliver her entirely from the fear of man which brought the snare of lying, yet she was commended to the care of Israel, and became a link in the ancestry of the Son of Man.

Rahab, the poor outcast of Jericho, who had this strange faith in God, entered in with the people to possess the land that flowed with milk and honey. She is thus the type of Gentile-sinners who are permitted to share in the unsearchable riches of Christ, to sit with Him in the heavenlies, to form part of that new race which is gathering around the true Joshua, the Lord from heaven. We were not a people, but are now the people of God. We had not obtained mercy, but have now obtained it. We were far off, but are now made nigh by the blood of Christ. So then we are no more strangers or sojourners, but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God. Only let us avail ourselves of our heritage!

(2) During this brief pause Joshua also had an opportunity of ascertaining the feelings of the two tribes and a half. He discovered that they were fully prepared to discharge the obligation into which they had entered with Joshua, and to march with the other tribes to the conquest of Canaan. But they were equally set on returning to the rich pasturelands of Gilead and Bashan, which Moses, the servant of the Lord, gave them beyond Jordan, toward the sunrising. They had "much cattle" (Num. xxxii. 2, 4, 19).

Are not these the type of Christians, to whom the Land of Promise is as freely open as to others, and who make an incursion into it with no thought of remaining? They are willing to meet and measure their strength with the seven nations of Canaan, but they are not prepared to abandon the strong fascinations of the world, and to settle down to a life hidden with Christ in God. Are there not those among us who have spent seven years in the Land of Promise, and have had blessed experiences of blessedness, rest, and power; but they have been swept off their feet and back by the receding tide of worldliness?

The end of such is but too clearly suggested by the fate of those Eastern tribes. They had their much grass, but they became gradually cut off from the corporate life of Israel. They gave few great names to the roll of saints and heroes emblazoned on Israel's story. They fell first beneath the invasions of Assyria, and were swept into captivity, from which they never returned.

From such a lot may we all be saved! Rather be it our happy portion to be employed on the Lord's embassies in seeking souls: shown where to find them: taught how to deal with them, and enabled to lead them out into complete identification with the people of God.

III. HOW THE PAUSE ENDED.—On the third day the hosts seem to have come nearer the river's brink, and their tents were pitched for the night within close proximity to the hurrying waters. It was then that Joshua said unto the people, "Sanctify yourselves, for to-morrow the Lord will do wonders amongst you." From which it would seem that the wonder-working power of God is dependent upon the sanctification of his people. "Why art Thou as a mighty man that cannot save?" "He could do no mighty works there, because of their unbelief."

We all want to see wonders wrought by God—in our own characters, that the fir-tree may replace the thorn and the myrtle the briar; in our homes that the desert places may blossom with roses; in our churches, that they may arise and put on their beautiful garments. Oh for another Pentecost! Oh for a widespread revival of true godliness! Oh for the making bare of the right hand of the Most High! Oh to see converts fly as doves to their windows! And why is it that we strain our eyes for them in vain? Is it not because we have not sanctified ourselves? Sanctification means the cleansing of the soul, and the putting on of the white robes of purity and humility. We are not clean enough for God to use us. We are not humble enough to bear a great success.

It is perfectly true that we can only be wholly sanctified 'by the God of Peace. Holiness on its positive side is his indwelling and filling, but on its negative side it involves the putting away of known sin, or the being willing that He should cleanse it away from us by blood, or water, or fire.

Is this our condition? Have we laid aside our weights as well as our sins? Are we cleansed from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit? Are we able to say with the Apostle that we do not condemn ourselves in anything that we allow? If not, let us no longer complain that the days of wonders are over. We are ourselves accountable for their having vanished, like peace from the criminal and purity from the fallen. No wonder we are always dreading to-morrow. To-morrow without God, and without the wonders of his mighty arm, is indeed a dismal outlook.

But if only each one of us sanctified himself, putting off the old man with his deeds, and putting on the new man, renewed daily in the image of Christ; forsaking every form of evil, and hating even the garment spotted by the flesh; yielding ourselves to the two-edged sword of the great High-Priest; we should find that wonders would begin and never cease, that the to-morrows would only unfold greater and better things than ever before, that Jordans would cleave, and Jerichos would fall. Then the Land of Promise would lie open with its immeasurable plenty, its oil and wine, its corn and honey, its precious priceless stores.

THE McALL MISSION.

Dear Sir,—I observe in your issue of Nov. 3, a statement, taken from Evangelical Christendom, that Mrs. McAll and I are leaving Paris and our mission. To prevent mistake, let me say that the impression is quite incorrect. We love the work, in which we have been permitted to spend twenty-one years, too much for that, so long as strength is given us to pursue it.

We have, indeed, felt that, to maintain the 140 stations throughout France, our personal presence in England during part of each year has become necessary, in order to seek new supporters in the place of the very many whom our Lord has called to Himself. But I remain at the head of the mission as before. We retain our domicile in Paris, 28, Villa Molitor, Auteuil, and hope to spend there many months in the year, taking the same active part in the evangelistic meetings as hitherto.

We are arranging to have also a domicile in London at the address beneath, where we shall spend the remaining months, and hold ourselves ready to conduct drawing-room and other meetings in and around the metropolis and elsewhere throughout the kingdom. We shall be most grateful to friends who will correspond with us, or with Col. Finch-White, 4, Trafalgar-square, respecting these. During my absence from Paris, Rev. C. E. Greig will act as director, with Rev. D. Thurber, pastor of the American Union Church, Paris, and Monsieur Louis Sautter as vice-presidents. Grateful for all the help afforded us through your columns, I am, dear Sir, sincerely yours,

R. W. McAll.

MANCHESTER.—On Thursday afternoon a meeting was held at the Strangeways Institute to take farewell of Miss Cream, a missionary who is going out to China as a representative of the Christian Convention which meets annually at the institution in Strangeways. Miss Cream will work in connection with the China Inland Mission, but the cost of her maintenance will be borne by the Convention, of which she is the first representative. The meeting was presided over by Mr. L. K. Shaw, and addresses were also given by Miss Cream, Mr. J. W. MacGill, and Rev. Prebendary Macdonald.

SACRED MEMORIES.

Into a very pretty booklet, with richly-coloured covers, Mrs. A. R. Simpson, of Edinburgh, has gathered many delightful and helpful memories of her departed mother, Mrs. Barbour. The little volume is entitled, "Awakenings; or Butterfly Chrysalids" (6d., Oliphant, Anderson, and Ferrier), and the gifted compiler has impressed into her service some beautiful illustrations drawn from God's great gardens of nature and human life. Incidentally, too, there are vivid sketches of northern character from the pen of Mrs. Barbour. Our readers will welcome a transcript of the closing paragraphs of the booklet, especially those who were privileged to know her of whom they speak:—

"As one wrote of her [Mrs. Barbour], her kindness was 'loving kindness,' it was so lavish. Like the negro woman, she 'loved' her way out of every difficulty. If any extra thing were needed—fringe for a table-cover, train for a missionary, bridesmaid's dress, cab for a stranger—her ready hand and readier heart supplied the want. When a friend was leaving for a long voyage, she wrote cheering words and put dates outside the envelopes for them to be opened far at sea. To another she gave adhesive labels to be gummed on books for distribution, with the words printed, 'In remembrance of the voyage.' A minister recovering from a bad illness got this text on a visiting card, 'The angel of the Lord encampeth,' and was about to burn the envelope when her cheque for £100 fell out! She left a store of poems, booklets, letters, journals (of which we may make later use); but we feel just now as if we must catch the crowding memories ere they leave us. Her favourite lines of hymns in French or English were always characteristic; as also the texts she loved to quote, such as: "He that made him can make his sword to approach him,' 'He knoweth what is in the darkness, and the light dwelleth with Him,' 'His going forth is prepared as the morning.'

"Her life seems well described in John xviii. 1 (R.V., margin), 'When Jesus had spoken these words, He went forth with his disciples over the winter torrent of the cedron, where was a garden.' In impulsive energy her spirit was like a winter torrent in a rocky bed; and, again, her mind was like a garden, the imagery so beautiful, the odours so refreshing. On all 'bare heights' she not only found pasture for herself, but for others too. How often have we sat with her on the banks of the Tummel, and as she told of the years lived with Lady Nairns, or the more prosaic though not less useful time spent in Manchester, of her school in the Tower at Springland, or the changing histories of Bonskeid, we saw in her narratives the calm reflections of the lake, the rushing waterfalls, the deep quiet salmon pools; and the course was ever straight on towards the sea—Eternity.

"Her life seemed to deepen and widen during the last winter; she let all the sunlight fall on the Bonskeid picture, making her room in the old house at George-square, Edinburgh, attractive to the little ones; and gathered up and cemented by letter and otherwise friendships of bygone years. Her interest in particular souls increased; students were ever welcome; she kept up her lively interest in the McAll Mission and in her dear Italy; she sent newspapers to all quarters of the world with records of the work of Messrs. Moody, Sankey, and John M'Neill; above all, the China mail was never missed. Her son and daughter were visiting the mission stations there, and sending letters and telegrams which were her great delight. When a telegram came telling that the Chinese Christians were sending to her a scroll with the words in gold letters on green silk, 'She loves the Middle Kingdom,' we were inclined to think, 'To what purpose is this waste?' little dreaming that it had come just in time to be as an anointing for her burial.

"Not beside the rushing Tummel, but in the old home in the Square, came the missive. The buds were taking shape on the trees; underneath the soil the life of the snowdrop had burst its bulb, and soon for her the birth-hour would be over. 'So the post presented her with a letter . . . . The token was an arrow with a point sharpened with love let easily into her heart, which by degrees wrought so effectually with her that at the time appointed she must be gone.'

"I break my pilgrim staff, I lay
Aside the toiling oar;
The angel sought so far away
I welcome at my door.

"Enough that blessings undeserved
Have marked my erring track;
That wheresoe'er my feet have swerved,
His chastening turned me back;

"That death seems but a covered way
Which opens into light,
Wherein no blinded child can stray
Beyond the Father's sight;

"That care and trial seem at last,
Through Memory's sunset air,
Like mountain ranges overpast,
In purple distance fair;

"That all the jarring notes of life
Seem blending in a psalm,
And all the angles of its strife
Slow rounding into calm.

"And so the shadows fall apart,
And so the west winds play;
And all the windows of my heart
I open to the day."

"And so our butterflies and their cast-off ca ments leave us with God. He who daily calls myriad forms of life on which we tread and ma them be, will surely bring again our meanti sleeping saints. 'For our citizenship is in heav
from whence also we wait for a Saviour, the L
Jesus Christ; who shall fashion anew the body our humiliation, that it may be conformed to body of his glory, according to the working wher
He is able even to subject all things unto Hi self.'"

ON SOUL-WINNING.

Dear Sir,—I notice in The Christian of Nov that you would like to hear from anyone ab their experience in winning souls for the Lord.
would like to send you a little account of a bi my life, in the hope that it may encourage ot mothers who may feel as weak as I have of done.

I must first say that more than thirty years a when Mr. Reginald Radcliffe was preaching Edinburgh, he asked at the close of meeting if those who knew they w Christians would rise to their feet. I was jus school-girl then, but the arrow of conviction ente my soul, and, although no one spoke to me, a for some months I still remained without Chr
I had no rest until, one bright starry evening walking home from school, the verse came home my heart, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ a thou shalt be saved." Glory be to his name, saved me. Once at Keswick, a few years ago waited at the tent door hoping to thank Mr. R cliffe, but he had left the meeting. I shall tha him one day in heaven.

Now I have to tell you of a quiet Sunday af noon when sitting by the fire in the gloaming mothers will do with their bairns round them, I a my boys were having one of our Sunday talks.
overwhelming longing came over me that my eld boy, then fourteen years old, would come to Jes but I was so shy of speaking. At last I mana to say, "Jack! darling! have you settled t question for yourself?" and rising, I went off to own room thinking, "Oh dear! what a stupid, si way I took, the Lord can never use me!"

Three years passed, and my boy was getting v near the Glory Land—three years in which I h watched and marvelled at his rapid growth in Christian life, and at the marvellous grace a patience given to him in all his suffering, and gradual laying down all the bright hopes and pla of his dawning manhood. Just about a week bef we parted, he said to me, "Mother, dear! do y know when I came to Jesus first? I want to you, for it will comfort you when I am gone. J that night by the nursery fire three years ag don't you remember it?"

In the early morning of a July day, about a we later, his weary eyes saw the King in his beau and that very night, when I was lying down a resting with a little brother of Jack's bes me, about whom he was very anxious, t boy whispered to me, amidst a flood tears, "Mother! I've given my heart to Jesu
He is still with us, spared to be an increasing as the days go by. I have told you this becaus may help some one to speak a word for Jesus, e though they feel so weak. God takes the foo things, and uses them for his glory, and He

Free Church Congress.

A CONGRESS of representatives of the Evangelical Free Churches of the United Kingdom was held last week at Manchester. In consisted of about 350 members, including the presidents of several unions, conferences, and assemblies. There was a meeting of welcome on Monday evening, followed by a sermon, preached by Principal EDWARDS, of Bala, from the words, "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever." Though we may not understand the harmony of one doctrine and another, and may fail to make a complete system, we can run away from our little systems to Christ, who is always the same because He is full orbed and complete.

Tuesday morning's session was devoted to the consideration of topics of supreme importance in Church life and work. The first paper was by Professor RANDLES, of Didsbury, and the subject was "The Church." On the nature of the Church the test authority is Holy Scripture. In its widest sense, the community consists of all who believe in Christ, whether still in the probation of this life or beyond it; all men in vital union with the Redeemer, and consequently in spiritual affinity with each other, are members; the Holy Spirit is its life-giving agent, and it is destined to embody a redeemed humanity in and to the eternal glory of God. The catholicity of the Church visible admits of some minor differences. If it were asked by what means the continuity of the Church throughout all ages is secured, he replied, "By the continuation of the Divine causes to which it owes its existence." The officers of the Church are its creatures rather than its creators, and to say that the Church depends upon its officers is to say that the substance depends upon its shadow. No present-day church can prove its organisation in all respects the same as that of the primitive Church on its inception, and if it could, that would not suffice to warrant its validity. It is enough if it could show it has the same vital relation to Christ. The true Church, he declared, rests on a common acceptance of its faith once delivered to the saints, loyalty and allegiance to Christ, love of Christ, and devotion to his cause.

Several members took part in a discussion which ensued. Dr. MACKENNAL thought it by no means an impossible thing, not to formulate, but to work distinctly towards, an organisation that should more and more tend to unity. Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES believed it to be practicable within the lifetime of the present generation, so far as the evangelical churches were concerned—to return at least to the unity of the Apostolic Church. This might be done without sacrificing any theological or ecclesiastical conviction.

Principal CULROSS, of Bristol, read a paper on enforcing the New Testament idea, that the minister is not a priest, except as all believers are priests. The man who claims such a priesthood disinherits his brethren, invades the prerogative of Christ, and is guilty of presumption like that of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. The minister is not a dictator; he has no dominion over faith. He is a man under authority, which forbids him to lord it over God's heritage. Neither is he a proxy paid to do other men's work, nor a hireling, entering the sacred office for a piece of bread or as a profession in which distinction may be gained. He was described by Dr. Culross as a man whom the Holy Ghost has qualified for and called to leadership, and in whom the brotherhood has discovered grace and fitness. He must have a deep and intimate acquaintance with the Word of God, not in letter only, but in spirit. Gathering up all in one, he must have that "unction from the Holy One" of which the Apostle John spoke. Under such a ministry the humblest conventicle may become the gate of heaven.

The chairman, Dr. GEORGE JOHNSTONE, of Liverpool, invited laymen, as well as ministers, to speak. Rev. S. PEARSON, in responding, objected to the distinction, which, though in common use, is only of ecclesiastical origin. He remarked that the sooner the distinction passes away the better it will be for the churches and for the ministers. "We shall never," he said, "get the world converted to Christ, so long as you leave it to us ministers. We must have the conception brought home to the hearts of the churches that every member of the Church of Jesus Christ is to be a servant of Jesus Christ." Rev. JOHN SMITH, of Luton, held the priestly theory of the ministry to be the root from which springs the sacerdotalism of Romanism and Ritualism. Principal CULROSS, in reply, explained that the ministry which had been referred to was not intended to suppress all other ministries, but to perfect them, and make the best use of them.

On Tuesday afternoon Principal REYNOLDS, of Cheshunt, delivered an address on

"THE SACRAMENTS,"

Although they are, in themselves, prescribed as links of holy fellowship, yet nothing violates so much the unity of the Church and so much accentuates the separation of those who are living the life of faith in Christ, as the estimate put upon them as means of grace, and the prescriptive rights asserted by a priesthood to celebrate them. Together with the historic churches, the Free Churches maintain that the symbols of the Lord's Supper focus the chief momenta of their common faith; a devout celebration constitutes an act of surrender as well as an idea, and by it Christians are carried into the deepest and sweetest places of experience. The Eucharist is a communion, in which believers confess a genuine brotherhood, with all its claims. In it are gathered up the ideas of a kingdom and a king, and so its celebration is a constantly renewed pledge of the real presence of the Lord.

In the course of some discussion, Rev. H. PRICE HUGHES thought there was danger of the Free Churches treating the ordinance as a mere commemorative rite. He also urged that the Lord's Supper was kept too much in the background, and advocated the weekly communion as carried out by the late Mr. Spurgeon.

Rev. THOMAS SHERWOOD, of Leeds, read a paper on in which he dealt chiefly with the necessity of a practical and hearty recognition of the spirituality of the Church, and an intelligent apprehension of what it involves. Inordinate individualism he characterised as the "curse of humanity and of the churches," and as the cause of all human sin and trouble. The Church is the body of Christ, a human fellowship governed by the love of Christ. Those who are connected with the fellowship should see to it that, as St. Paul said, they were "members one of another"; not only ideally, but practically.

Dr. MACKENNAL, in the discussion, said that, in proportion as Christians cherish a high idea of, and attach a high value to, the Church of God, as instituted by Christ, and not by themselves, would they be ready to recognise and yield freedom to one another; and the fellowship would be broad and large until at last it came to fellowship, and not fellowships, which in the meantime must be tolerated.

A public meeting was held in the evening, presided over by Mr. R. W. PERKS, M.P., who advocated EVANGELICAL FEDERATION.

Rev. Dr. MONRO GIBSON, of London, pointed out that unity is not to be reached through uniformity. One faith does not mean one creed. The faith which works by love and trust towards God and towards each other, is not that which works by logic, and instead of uniting is warranted to split—to split hairs even; if it stopped there they would not mind, but it splits the churches too. The unity of the Spirit is the ruling idea in the Scriptures. The hand, the eye, the mouth, do not act independently, but all act together. Dr. Gibson concluded as follows: "Here we are like ships of the line, each in its different creek or channel. The water which fills these creeks is from the same great sea, but there are between us ridges of sand and ledges of rock. We see each other, we hail each other, we send deputations across the intervening space, but we float each in our several creek. What is wanted? The rising of the great tide of the Divine Love, until every keel is lifted above the level of the sand and the rocks, and then we can fall into line, we can fight together, and the old forces, which were far too much for any of us separately, will go down before the united advance, and it will not be long till the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea."

Rev. CHARLES BERRY, of Wolverhampton, propounded a dream of a federated Free Evangelical Church. He did not expect it to be brought about all at once. But it will come as the morning comes, as answers to prayers come—silently. The time has come, said Mr. Berry, for prayer that Christians may be one, as Christ and the Father are one. Let us pray for it, and it will come as sure as in the morning the sun will shine and drive away the darkness, and all nature will live again in the light of God's smile.

Rev. Dr. CLIFFORD, referring to a statement by Cardinal Manning that Oliver Cromwell was not dead but sleeping, concluded a powerful address by saying: "Wake up, Oliver Cromwell, in the churches of this land! Wake up, grand old Puritan, and come now, and lead us in the great fight against everything that opposes Christ, and Christ Himself shall give us the light of a glorious victory."

Wednesday was devoted to the consideration of some very practical questions. Mr. PERCY ILLINGWORTH opened a consideration of "Town Problems"; the overlapping of agencies and the condition of the lower classes, were among the topics. He declared that if the churches are to win the great mass of the artisans and labourers of the towns, they must take a Christian stand with respect to capital and labour. Was it too much to say that the Christian principle of the brotherhood of mankind, tended distinctly to a greater equality of conditions, and was opposed to a system of compulsion under which the good things of this life are for those who are strong or clever enough to seize them or bargain for them, and the weaker go to the wall, or at all events put up with a very small share?

Rev. THOMAS LAW, Methodist Free Church minister, gave an account of Nonconformist at Bradford. As a result of a conference held in the town eighteen months ago, a scheme was drawn up, and practically a new burgess roll was made for the 200,000 people of Bradford. Then came the allocation of these districts to the churches for the purposes of visitation. From 200 to 1000 houses were given to each church. The ninety Nonconformist churches of the town cordially accepted the proposal, and many hundreds of people enrolled themselves as visitors. The four following questions were put:—1. Do you attend any place of worship? 2. Are you connected with any religious denomination; if so, which, and what particular church? 3. Would you welcome a visit from the minister or members of any church? 4. Are your children in the habit of attending any Sunday-school; and, if so, which? Some 1500 visitors went forth to the work, the picked men and women of the churches. All classes of the people of the borough were visited, including those living in villas, mansions, back streets, and public-houses. There were scarcely any cases of rudeness, the most abandoned classes receiving the visitors heartily. From the tabulated returns they found that 53,688 houses were visited, that the regular attenders numbered 22,266, the occasional attenders 3,578, and the non-attenders 7,064, while 781 cases were described as "unknown." It was made clear by the visitation that the current statement to the effect that the churches had practically no hold on the masses was not true. The proportion of working men and women who attended the places of worship in Bradford was larger than that of the middle and upper classes.

In the course of a discussion, Rev. H. J. POPE told of the good work done in connection with the Central Hall, Manchester, where there is a living town church of 800 or 900 members. Dr. RANDLES remarked that one of the great secrets of the success of the work was that the preachers, instead of airing their opinions on various subjects, had preached the Gospel. They might do what they liked with coffee-taverns, with organisation, and with visitation, but unless they kept to that central power they would never accomplish their object. Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES called upon the churches to abolish seat rents, and the class distinctions which they produce.

At the afternoon meeting Dr. HERBER EVANS introduced the subject of the Rural Districts, describing their condition, and setting forth their needs. Revs. J. E. CLAPHAM and CHARLES WILLIAMS enlarged upon different aspects of the same question. Naturally, the over-lapping and clashing of agencies was again brought to the front, the last-named speaker submitting that members of Nonconformist bodies resident in any one village should, without ceasing to be Methodists or Baptists, worship together in the same house of prayer and unite in Sunday-school work. They could still hold separate and sectional meetings (though in the buildings common to all) for denominational purposes. The difficulty in regard to the pulpit is more apparent than real. Uniformity is not essential to unity. The devout of all denominations are one in praise and prayer, and, when they preach, the points of agreement are more in number and of infinitely greater importance than the points of divergence.

During the discussion, Mr. Noall, of Oldham, declared his belief that the problem of overlapping in the villages could not be solved without Methodist reunion. A priestly element in the Wesleyan ministry prevents the union, for the Primitives, Free Methodists, and New Connexionists, are willing to combine with them on the condition of "laymen" being admitted into all the courts.

In the evening Mr. A. Spicer, M.P., read a paper on Foreign Missions. He held that one of the results of the Congress should be that, in returning to their individual societies, they should go determined that the commencement of the second century of Christian missions should see the adoption of a strong resolution that there should be no overlapping in the future. Rev. Dr. Townsend, Methodist New Connexion, advocated the formation of a missionary board on which all the different denominations should be represented.

The final sittings of the Congress were held on Thursday, when the general subject was the on national life. In the morning Rev. John Smith, Primitive Methodist, dealt with intemperance. We must, he said, continue to proclaim that total abstinence is the only safety for the individual, and to demand and insist on total prohibition for and by the State. The fact that public opinion is not yet ripe for the adoption and application of a law of general suppression of the trade, is no reason why temperance people should abate their demands. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes read a paper on social morality. Referring to gambling, once an aristocratic vice, but now become democratic, he said: Gambling has precisely the same relation to stealing that duelling has to murder. Every gambler is a mean and despicable thief, who in the better days that are coming will be allowed neither to hold any public office in England nor to move in respectable society. Speaking on impurity, he said: We ought never to rest till the daughters of the poor, who are in the greater peril, are as carefully protected as the daughters of the rich. Solicitation by men should also be made a criminal offence. A blow might be given to social vice by refusing intoxicating liquor licences to places of public amusement.

In the afternoon, Mr. Thomas Snape, M.P., read a paper on

"PEACE AND ARBITRATION."

He said that such gigantic armies as are at present maintained, and such colossal preparations for war as are now made, were never organised throughout Christendom at any previous period. It will be time enough to declare that international arbitration is a failure when a case has arisen where it has to be confessed that the dispute cannot be adjudicated by its application. Some forty cases or more were now matters of history, and in every one of them the adjudication of the arbitrators had been honourably obeyed.

Rev. J. Guinness Rogers, speaking on industrial questions, expressed himself as afraid that in the common daily affairs of life, in the relations of employers and employed, in the accumulation of wealth, the preaching of righteousness had not had its fullest and most prominent place in the ministrations of the pulpit. Many of the churches have been crushed by the spirit of what calls itself respectability, but what is after all the mere pride of wealth. They were agreed that the fearful contrasts presented in our great cities between wealth and poverty in their extremes, are a discredit to Christianity and a peril to civilisation. Civilisation must take care of itself; we have to deal with Christianity.

In the evening, the members of the Congress attended a Communion service in Union Chapel, Oxford-road, Rev. Dr. Maclaren presiding.

A CONVENTION for the deepening of spiritual life was held in Shaftesbury Hall, Ealing, November 8, 9, and 10. Captain Tottenham presided throughout. Searching and helpful addresses were given by Rev. J. P. Mantle, E. H. Hopkins, C. A. Fox, E. W. Moore, and W. Haslam. The meetings were largely attended.

THE MILDMAY HOSPITALS at Bethnal Green and Mildmay, are doing grand service amongst the poorest, but being specially Christian, do not participate in the Hospital Sunday Fund. Hence many, it is hoped, will co-operate in the annual sale, to be held December 13 and 15, at the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park. Gifts should be addressed to Miss Cooke, 68, Mildmay Park, N.

MRS. HILTON'S CRÈCHE.

In her new Crèche Annual, Mrs. Hilton gives many striking facts and anecdotes about the excellent work at Stepney which engages her active life and sympathies. By making extracts, we will let her speak for herself:—

"Financially we are not in a better position than we were last year, for although several friends sent special donations which cleared off the debt, we wind up with a similar deficiency (£307), in spite of having reduced our expenditure. We have also lost a large number of our subscribers by death, many of whom had been liberal supporters from the commencement of the institution. It is now twenty-two years since I first commenced caring for the dear babies and their mothers, but the work is still needed. For many years we have lived in hope that the great foe of the people—the drink traffic—would be removed, or its power to hurt and destroy limited, but the time is not yet. In spite of all adverse circumstances, we have much to encourage and remind us that He that is with us is mightier than all they that are against us.

"The attendance at the Crèche has been under 20,000. We have been obliged to close three times during the year for epidemics of measles and whooping-cough, and the periods of closing were of longer duration than usual, as the disease spread so rapidly in the large blocks of buildings, and it is almost impossible to teach the people the importance of isolation. These times of closing are some of our saddest experiences, as the dear children need our care more than when in health. But we do our best by providing for them in their homes as far as is possible.

"The applications for admission to the Crèche have been of the usual character—widows, deserted wives, wives of invalids, and others whose husbands never seem to be in any regular employment. The scarcity of work for the willing to do has sadly increased, so that on women the chief burden for providing for the family rests. Beyond these are men who are both drunken and brutal, whom I have known to lie in wait to wrest the hard-earned money from the dear mothers. Yet these work on bravely, sustained by the God-given feeling of motherhood, which enables them to bear anything rather than forsake their little ones. They are slow to complain, and we have learned not to inquire about the marks of ill-usage too often visible, as we find that they are led to account for them in some other way.

"We have had several little lodgers during the year—children brought to us for short periods while their mothers are in hospitals. We have been unable to admit many fresh cases to the home this year on account of illness. It has also been impossible to send our little people to Feltham at the usual time for change of air on account of the outbreak of scarlet fever there.

"To those unacquainted with the arrangements of the institution we would explain that our home is of a temporary character, intended to help mothers, especially widows, by taking charge of their children in times of difficulty, and restoring them at once when they are able to receive them. Rebecca and Frances, little sisters, aged five years and three years, were brought to the Crèche in 1887 by a brother aged seventeen years, by whom they were lovingly cared for. On his health failing we admitted them to the home, where they remained until this year, when their father, who has made a second marriage, was able to remove them. Little Harry was brought to us by his widowed mother, and by the time he was four years old she was again able to take charge of him. Harold, aged one year and nine months, was received, in 1887, from his mother, who was a widow. She has since deserted him, and he was removed last December by his uncle, who obtained admission for him to Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

"The Home visiting-day is the first Wednesday in each quarter, and we are often most interested in conversing with the visitors and children on these occasions. Our infirmary has been a very haven of rest to the weary little ones, and nurse's heart is always ready to receive them. Some of them are such poor little creatures that they seem hardly alive, but in a few weeks they improve wonderfully. We have as in former years, received a large number of parcels, representing so much loving interest and patient labour, beside various most interesting presents."

For further details we refer our readers to the report, which may be obtained by addressing Mrs. Hilton, 18, Shore-road, South Hackney, N.E.

THE RUSSIAN STUNDISTS.

Sir,—I was deeply interested in the letter from four Russian Stundists, published in The Christian of November 3. It is indeed a mystery why the sufferings of the honest and noble-minded Christian Stundists in Russia have attracted so little attention in England, Germany, and America. It is true that they differ from us in blood, that they have no racial connection with the financial kings of Europe, and that they are scattered, desolate, and oppressed with impunity. If there be any kinship in simple Christianity, surely the time has come to help these good men and women, who are not only the flower of the Russian peasantry, but are the salt of the earth. The question is how can they best be helped?

Your correspondent suggests a deputation to Ministers in Russia. Will you allow me to state that in my humble judgment any deputation not supported by overwhelming physical force would only lead to an exchange of whips for scorpions? Indeed, I cannot protest too strongly in the interests of the Stundists against any idea of the sort.

The first thing to do in a serious affair of this kind, where a first-class military monarchy is bent on extirpating heresy, as in the old time before us, is to get at the facts. The newspapers, as a rule, record news that will sell. The accuracy of that news is not always a primary consideration. There are, of course, exceptions, but it will not serve the Stundists to approach Monsieur Pobedonostszeff on the strength of a case founded on journalistic enterprise. A strong case is destroyed by exaggeration. To prepare a case, then, two solid and competent Englishmen should go to Russia quietly, without a flourish of trumpets or a Guildhall meeting, and thoroughly investigate the facts bearing on the present position and treatment of the godly Lutheran and Protestant farmers and cultivators of the Volga, and in the south of Russia.

A committee should be formed to receive and publish these reports until the public opinion of the civilised world is sufficiently instructed to render a joint protest of the great Protestant Powers politically feasible. Such a task will require tact and courage, and the emissaries employed must be men of the world, good linguists, and capable of making themselves pleasant to the tchnovnicks by all legitimate means. In a word, the wisdom of the serpent is required quite as much as the noblest of motives.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

Arnold White.

The correspondent from whom we received a former communication writes:—

Thank you much for giving space to the Stundists. The outlook for them is dark, and there seems to be no hope of relief. M. Pobedonostszeff, who is virtually the all-powerful man who controls their destiny, humanly speaking, maintains that there exists no religious persecution in Russia; just as positively he declares that in no country religious liberty is understood and practised as in the Russian Empire. "No propaganda" is the rule for all religious communities with the exception of the so-called Orthodox Church. The Orthodox Church uses every effort to gain over from all other Churches members to join her, and once joined means for ever inseparable. This is the cause of all the persecutions in the Baltic Provinces, and of all the sore and bitter sufferings of the brethren called Stundists, who, for conscience sake, have dissented from the Greek Church.

On what ground the Greek Church claims the exclusive right of making propaganda, and strictly under penalty, forbids to other Churches the same right, it is not easy to perceive. Our brethren, the Stundists, are sorely oppressed by this tyrannical law, and their cry will surely enter the ear of the Lord of Sabaoth. Two servants of God have sought an interview with M. Pobedonostszeff, apparently without any result. Will not many cries go up on the behalf of the suffering members of the body, and give the Lord no rest until He with His almighty arm delivers his people that they may serve Him without fear?

A HINDU LADY'S LETTER.

THE following letter from a Hindu lady has lately en received by Mrs. Salmon, of Tockington Manor, no has been working for the Zenana Mission; she sited Madras last winter and became interested in e work and the workers. The perusal of this simple d interesting account, written by a native lady to Englishwoman she has met with, will be enjoyed our readers young and old:—

I am sure it will interest you and other dear ends to know something about the people of this untry—I mean something of their religion, stoms, habits, superstitions, dress, etc. I shall erefore attempt to give you a glimpse of each, ough I am afraid it will be very imperfect indeed. rst, as regards ndus as a race are very religious. Their religion ters so much into their moral, social, and poli- al thoughts and actions that there can be no tion which cannot be traced to some superstition, lief, or religious motive. You will see temples in most every street and corner. Each street and lage and each family has a god or goddess of its n to whom it makes vows every day and offers crifices. They have a great number of gods and ddesses, and they are not satisfied with them. They on creating more as occasion requires.

They worship anything and everything. An old e standing in the corner of a village becomes re and more sacred as it advances in age, and timately becomes an object of worship. The sun d moon, cows, snakes, owls, kites, eagles, etc., e all considered sacred and are worshipped. The ndus feed cobras (the most venomous of all akes) with milk and eggs, and worship them. henever there is an eclipse of the sun or moon ey fast on those days and go to the seashore and re bathe and offer their sacrifices to the sun and oon, such as cocoanuts, camphor, etc. When yone suffers from smallpox or measles they put down to the displeasure of the goddess "Mári- mmáh," and would never give the patient any edicine for fear of provoking the anger of the ddess. If the patient dies, they would not weep otherwise show signs of their sorrow, lest they end "Máriyammáh." If the patient should over they prepare a kind of gruel of kaggi flour d feed the poor with it as a sign of their gratitude. When any epidemic breaks out, such as cholera, fluenza, or smallpox, they attribute it to the er of the goddess of their village or the god- ses which rule over these epidemics, and at once gin to propitiate them. The village priest is in- ted to one of the houses, where all of them meet gether, especially the women, and ask him to find t the reason why the goddess has been displeased h them. The man and a few of his companions at their drums or tambourines, and invoke the ddess to reveal to them the cause of her anger. hile the invocation goes on in the most hideous shion, one of the companions of the village priest es from their midst all of a sudden, and begins to nce in a fantastic manner. This is a sign to the wd around that the goddess has come on him, they immediately fall down and worship him. en the priest questions this man, and ascertains m him the cause of the displeasure of the village y which has brought on the epidemic. When cause of the epidemic is ascertained, the crowds pose to make early arrangements to propitiate goddess by pujahs and sacrifices.

It is difficult to define what Hindu religion is. e Vedas teach Theism. But the religion has ergone so many changes that it is difficult to ine its tenets and forms of worship. Idol ship, and devil worship, and worship of the ents have become a part and parcel of this ion. The two great divisions of Hindus are ites and Vishnavites, the former worship hma (god) as the Destroyer, and the latter hip him as the Preserver. The Sivaites have ples erected for Siva and the Vishnavites for hnu. The Sivaites have no objection to wor- Vishnu, but the Vishnavites will not under circumstances worship Siva. The latter are most intolerant and the most bigoted, resem- in this respect the Romanists of the Chris- Church. The Vishnavites are distinguished ree perpendicular lines on the forehead, the dle line being red and the other two white. The ites are ordinarily distinguished by a round white or red spot on the forehead. They sometimes have three horizontal lines painted by the fingers with ashes prepared for the purpose.

THE CUSTOMS AND HABITS of the Hindus differ greatly from those of the Western nations. Hindu women are not allowed to move freely in society like our English sisters. They are confined to their houses, and are permitted to visit only their near relations or female friends, and that, too, under a system of strict surveillance. They have never tasted the sweets of a happy home. You seldom see all the members of a family, consisting of mother, father, children, and others, sitting together and having a pleasant conversation with each other. When the husband or his parents are present his wife can't sit down. She ought not to be free in her conversation in the presence of her husband and his people. If one ever attempts to be so, one is sure to be taunted with all sorts of remarks.

These poor women are, therefore, obliged to sacrifice freedom. Very often the women who are under our instruction remark, "Oh, Madam, what a difference there is between your position in your family and ours! You are free to go out wherever you can usefully employ your time and talents. You enjoy all the happiness of family life, but we dare not go anywhere, even though it may be beneficial to us and to our family. We dare not converse freely with our husbands in the presence of our elders, and much less go out with them for a drive. We cannot use our discretion or judgment in matters relating to our family, but submit, without a word of protest, to the decision of our elders. Oh, how we wish we were like you—happy and free."

I often avail myself of such opportunities to tell them that the liberty and happiness we enjoy are all due to the religion we profess, even the religion that sets us free from the bondage of sin and misery. What a change Christianity has wrought wherever its light has entered! Civilisation, liberty, and happiness have followed its footsteps! I don't know when these dark heathen homes will receive the light of heaven, and be set at liberty.

Dear friends, do pray for your poor dark Hindu sisters. It is the duty of England to do it. The Lord has raised you above all nations and has given you possession of this vast empire. Well may you be proud of this possession, but it carries its own responsibilities, and I earnestly hope that you will all realise this and do your utmost to ennoble and elevate her by sending the light of the Gospel into these dark, miserable homes. I know that most of you feel it, and I trust that the whole nation will realise it soon. The more you do this the more will your nation prosper, and the larger will be the number of blessings you will enjoy.

(To be concluded.)

HE UNDERSTANDS US SO!

Tune 517, Songs and Solos, "I love to hear the story."

WHEN tempted, sore, and puzzled,
With mysteries within:
My heart disturbed and darkened,
Beneath the mists of sin:
I always go to Jesus
With what I do not know,
For He is full of wisdom,
And understands me so.

And when the world around me
Perplexes and involves,
When doubts and dangers thicken,
In vain earth's wisdom solves.
I cannot comprehend it,
The wherefore of my woe;
But Jesus knows the darkness,
He understands me so!

Each sigh that others censure,
And griefs that cannot sigh:
Each sparkling little pleasure,
Each thought aspiring high:
Infirmities of feeling
That bend my spirit low—
For these his hand has healing,
He understands me so!

No other hand so comforts,
Though tenderly they try:
No other heart can ever
In pity thus draw nigh.
So then, in joy and sorrow,
Let us to Jesus go:
Whatever be our story,
He understands us so!

WESLEYAN EAST-END MISSION.

MY DEAR SIR,—Will you allow me to make a special appeal to our friends for funds and supplies for our relief work? The distress is already very great, and so far us we can form any estimate, the winter will be one of the severest we have had for many years past. We have already a large number of unemployed, many homes are terribly destitute, and the poor children are hungry and starving. In our vast area it seems utterly impossible to meet the most urgent wants of those we know, and who really belong to us, but we must do what we can, and especially endeavour to feed the large numbers of hungry children that crowd our children's mission meetings.

I have delayed, as long as possible, opening the soup kitchen, and winter arrangements for relief, but my fellow-helpers have earnestly pleaded that we must begin at once and appeal for supplies if they are to continue their visitation among the people. They say, "How can we go out and see such suffering when we have no power to do anything for them?" Two gentlemen have kindly undertaken to provide us with pea-flour, will some others help us with bread, meat or bones, vegetables, etc.—suitable for soup—and other supplies? and let a multitude of friends send us contributions for our work.

We are trying (1) to get employment for as many as possible—though some of the unemployed are too famished for hard work; (2) to attend the sick poor through our Medical Mission—most of whom are sick purely from want of proper food; and (3) to relieve as far as possible the distress of the children.

Yours faithfully,
PETER THOMPSON.

Missionary Pence Association.

"A PENNY a week is going to settle this business," said Mr. George Williams at the Baptist Missionary Centenary celebration. Mr. Ricketts, the treasurer, stated at the same time that the average contribution to foreign missions is "half-a-crown per annum" per church member. These two remarks describe at once the method of, and the need for, this association, which is every week receiving on behalf of various missionary societies contributions made up of the pennies of a large number of working people and others.

About 1000 are now giving at least a penny a week through its agency, and that number should soon be increased tenfold. Friends can help (1) by becoming a member (i.e., one who collects from others), (2) by becoming a subscriber (i.e., one who simply gives a penny per week), or (3) by distributing the leaflets of the association which, with any other information, will be gladly supplied by the hon. secretary, Mr. John Jackson, 186, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C.

A CONFERENCE OF MISSION HALL WORKERS was held in Thornton Heath Mission Hall, on Wednesday evening, 9th inst., called for the threefold purpose of united prayer, free intercourse, and conference on evangelistic work. Mr. Herbert Marshall, of Streatham, presided at the devotional part of the meeting, when earnest pleadings were offered for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit and for a fuller consecration to the Master's service. After an interval for refreshments, the conference followed, the chair being occupied by Dr. Albert Carless, when the discussion centred around the questions of the after meeting and personal dealing. Free expression of thought and experience was given by representatives of some twelve or thirteen mission halls, and on the meeting dispersing it was unanimously felt that another similar conference might with advantage be held before the close of the winter,

The Revival in Ireland.

MR. MOODY'S OFFER TO IRELAND.

At an immense meeting in Dublin on Tuesday last week, Mr. Moody spoke at some length upon the necessity of considerable auxiliary Gospel effort to strengthen that put forth by the ordinary organisation of Church work. As our readers are already aware, the evangelist has inaugurated an effort to meet this want at his Chicago Institute, in the training of young men and women to do the work of evangelising especially among the masses who are not found in attendance at the places of worship. It's easy enough, said Mr. Moody, to preach to those who want it; but what we need is to go to those who don't want to be preached to. If they will not come to your churches and chapels and mission rooms, you must take the Gospel to them in their homes; and this can best be done by consecrated men and women specially set apart for such work—the men to converse with the men, and godly women to show the mothers the way of life. A mother with eight or nine children and no servant has very little chance of attending a religious meeting. We must, therefore, make provision for them.

Speaking of the young men who had gone from this side to Chicago to prepare for such work wherever the Lord may locate them, Mr. Moody said that none had proved themselves more efficient than those who had gone from Ireland. He was, therefore, impelled to make a special offer, that if twenty-five young men, found after due examination to be suitable for the work, were sent forth from Ireland, within the next month or so, he would depart from his general rule of requiring candidates to bear a portion of the expense of their training, and put them through their course without any charge upon them. As the cost per head is about £60 per annum, it is evident that in taking upon himself such a responsibility Mr. Moody will need such co-operation as the Lord's stewards may feel able to give.

Of course it is not intended that such workers should necessarily find their ultimate sphere of labour in America. Many will doubtless return to their native shores, and thus the work at home will be proportionately benefited. It may be said that such training might be with equal efficiency arranged for in this country. This is quite true. Ought we not, however, to take into account also the direct personal influence of Mr. Moody himself? There are only a few men, comparatively, who impress a stamp upon their generation, and men like Charles Spurgeon and D. L. Moody are foremost among them. His personality, therefore, must inevitably be a strong element in the training of all who enter the Chicago Institute, from whencesoever they come, and that influence can only be found where Mr. Moody is in person.

In view of the gigantic evangelistic campaign which he is organising for the coming "World's Fair," it is certain that a very exceptional opportunity will be afforded for the sending out of new recruits; and those who have a share in it will gain an experience never to be forgotten. Let the children of God, therefore, who from whatever cause are not able to join this body of workers, be represented in those that are able to go.

THE FOLLOWING UP.

Mr. Moody has gone to labour in other parts of the Lord's Vineyard, but his spirit is still with us. Before leaving he was entertained at a public breakfast in the Hotel Metropole, presided over by Mr. T. A. Denny, of London. All the prominent Christian workers in and around Dublin were present, and a conference was held as to the best method of carrying on the work so successfully begun.

As usual, Mr. Moody's remarks were eminently practical. Among other things he said:—An immense number of people are flocking away from the Christian Church, and he did not think that they would reach such a class by ecclesiastics only. He was not in any way abusing ministers, but he was advocating the employment of outsiders in the work. If he came back to this country, it was a question if he would not give his whole time to it. He did not think that it was proper that 95 per cent. of the working men should not be reached. There was a great breach between the churches and the working men, and it was Christian workers who were not clergymen who should be entrusted to look after such persons. He regarded regular church work as the best, but once in a while they must supplement it in this way. He thought the time was ripe for a new departure.

For a day or two after Mr. Moody's departure the attendance fell away considerably. This was to be anticipated, as many had made an effort to hear Mr. Moody to the end and then took a little rest. Very many had contracted colds also, for the great wooden structure in the Rotunda Gardens, with asphalted floors, is not so comfortable as might be desired. But Mr. M'Neill's originality of thought and speech soon told upon a people who are passionately fond of eloquence, and the attendance has daily gone up. Mr. M'Neill is a man of strong individuality. His insight into truth is so original, clear, and intuitive that he is constantly dropping gems of thought which take even the unwilling listener captive. His earnestness, too, seems to be contagious. His addresses to business men in the Leinster Hall from one or two o'clock daily have already become the talk of Dublin.

Mr. M'Neill is ably seconded by Mr. Merton Smith and Mr. Burke. The time for writing of results has not yet come. This much is certain—namely, that Dublin has been profoundly stirred. There are, of course, thousands who mock and scoff and keep aloof. But the leaven has been introduced, and, with God's grace, the mass will soon be leavened also.

Another correspondent writes:—"With regard to the number converted at Mr. Moody's meetings in Dublin, it is difficult to speak with accuracy, but that a very large number have been truly turned to God there can be no doubt. One was accustomed to hear of as many as fifty having found Christ in one night in the enquiry room. The room was invariably packed, and those seeking the way of salvation did not disperse until long after 10 p.m.

"A meeting for men only was held nightly from nine till ten by Major Whittle and Mr. Stebbins in the Minor Hall of the Christian Union Buildings, Lower Abbey-street, which was filled with people to the door. Bright singing and testimonies from those who had been converted during the mission occupied the time, and not a few Roman Catholics were amongst those who professed salvation. One night a young man spoke who had been converted at Mr. Moody's meetings at Sligo some weeks previously, and who had come up to the Dublin meetings to hear and learn more of the Gospel.

"Much of the success of the mission in Dublin has been due to the prominent manner in which the public newspapers reported the addresses. Mr. Moody expressed his appreciation of this on many occasions, and urged the audience to buy the papers and send them to their friends, remarking that few people will read a tract or a sermon placed in their hands, but will not object to read the contents of one if published in a newspaper. As evidence that this action of the press was esteemed by people living in the country, Mr. Moody told of hearing from a gentleman, living in a town 150 miles from the metropolis, who said it was quite impossible to purchase a newspaper within a very short time after the arrival of the mail from Dublin, all the copies being bought up immediately.

"Seldom has Sackville-street had such a concourse thronging its side paths as during the past weeks of people going to and returning from the meetings. A tramway man was heard to remark to his fellow, 'The Horse Show was nothing to it, and all sensible-looking people, too.'"

The following letters were sent to Mr. Moody when in Dublin; they serve to indicate the very practical character of his preaching:—

"I write a line for your encouragement to tell you that your sermon on Monday with the remarks on forgiveness has been blessed to the reconciliation of two families who have been estranged for more than seven years. It is quite as wonderful as passing from death into life. Hoping you may be as useful to many others, I am,

"One of the Party."

"I want to tell you how very much your address last night helped me. May God bless the temperance meeting to-morrow night! I have last month, by God's help, given up a drink business which turned £20,000 in the year, left to my children by their father, but what misery to me no one can know, since my eyes were opened some years ago. Thank God it is as though a millstone were taken off my neck. My children join with me in thankfulness and praise that though poor now, we can ask God's blessing on what work we now engage in. Please excuse this from a stranger; I felt I must tell you how strong you made me feel trusting in my Lord."

The following appreciative notice of Mr. Moody's work in Dublin is from The Irish Times of Wednesday, last week:—

"The mission of Mr. Moody in Dublin was brought last night to a close by interesting proceedings. To the end vast audiences occupied the temporary structure which was specially erected at large cost to accommodate the services. The committee by whom the arrangements were made, and under whose supervision the building was placed, took the utmost care that those attending should be comfortably seated, and that ingress and egress through many doors should be perfectly free. For a fortnight the many addresses of the evangelist were delivered with profound earnestness, with unflagging energy, in a restrained and chastened style and with an expression which could not be challenged. There was none of the excitement, often artificial, which characterised revival movements in former years. The feelings of those present were solemnised and their minds instructed, and no attempt was made to go beyond the legitimate and wholesome influences to which reason and the best spiritual experience set bounds.

"Mr. Moody is an even more effective speaker than when he was in Dublin so long ago. His voice is equally clear and penetrating. His teaching is equally simple and sound. As a public duty we have reported his words. These have been read in our columns very widely, and we have received a number of letters in grateful appreciation of the appearance in this form.

"It is due to Mr. Moody and his work to add that throughout his discourses he has never in a single instance introduced any controversial question, or employed phraseology which would indicate that his mind harbours the points of these contentions. He has had a duty quite apart, and in performing it has seized upon the attention and sympathies of multitudes by avoiding every inferior theme. His language has never had in it any of what we may call the magazine and literary form of ambiguous or fanciful phrase, which so often is out of place in the pulpit and on the religious platform, the very frequency of which amongst us made his more direct and easy manner attractive and so strong a contrast. No one could take offence either from his doctrine or illustrations, and much is to be learned even from his method. As a broad, undenominational, primitively inspired exposition and exhortation, these pregnant, straight, monosyllabic utterances, behind which there was so much of heart and knowledge, and depth of resource, and an enthusiasm that endures, will long be remembered by those who wish to treasure them, with joyful recollection of the place and scene where the living voice made every truth so plain and forcible.

MISSES SMITH AND BAX.

These lady evangelists concluded a fortnight's mission in Omagh on the 11th inst, with very blessed results. The mission was held in the Methodist Church, but large numbers of all the Protestant churches attended the services. The house was always filled, and sometimes overcrowded.

Gospel meetings conducted by women were quite a novelty in the stiff, orthodox, county town of Tyrone, and while some were too prejudiced to hear the tidings of salvation from a woman, many came from curiosity, and not a few who came to scoff remained to pray.

The mission closed with a praise meeting, at which in less than an hour 171 bore testimony to the power of God to forgive sins, to whom be the praise and the glory for ever.

C.E.T.S. POLICE COURT MISSION.—Special sermons were preached on Sunday in several of the churches in South London on behalf of the Rochester Diocesan branch of the Church of England Temperance Society Police-court Mission, of which Rev. G. A. Ormsby, of St. Stephen's, Walworth, is organising secretary. The work of this mission has been most successfully carried out by agents of the mission in the important centres of Wandsworth, Southwark, Greenwich, Woolwich, Richmond, Kingston, Rochester, and Chatham. During one year 1808 visits were made to police-courts, 6392 interviews were held with persons accused of crime or misdemeanour, 673 families were visited, 899 temperance pledges taken, 161 women removed to homes, 791 special cases handed over to the care of the clergy, and 421 meetings addressed. In order that the useful work may be carried on with greater success, special appeals were made for increased financial support.

PASTOR C. S. ADAMA VAN SCHELTEMA,

PIONEER OF GOSPEL TEMPERANCE WORK IN HOLLAND.

ALL important reforms involve a large amount of pioneer advocacy; and it not unfrequently happens that a solitary individual protests for a considerable period against glaring social evils, and appeals to a deaf public for sympathy and support. We introduce to notice this week a herculean worker in the cause of temperance—one who sought, for many years, and with small encouragement, to promote temperance among his people. God be praised, great success has of late attended his persistent efforts, and the Gospel Temperance movement is going forward in the Netherlands.

Mr. C. S. ADAMA VAN SCHELTEMA was born at the Hague in 1815. In the following year his mother died, and circumstances compelled his father to leave the child much to the care of others. When seven years of age he went to a boarding-school in Amsterdam, where he was oppressed by a consciousness of loneliness. The desire of his earliest days was to be a minister of the Gospel, and this has been fulfilled with interest such as God alone can give. His preparation for the work was largely influenced by the Swiss revival, and the works of Bunyan, Malan, Monod, and Roussel, were his theological guides.

He began his ministry in 1839, in the small village of Borselen, in the South of Holland, one of the Zeeland Islands. All his hearers being peasants and farmers, he preached the Gospel in the simplest manner; he made thorough preparation for the pulpit, but then followed freely the impulses of the moment. This method he has followed ever since.

Having much leisure time, he then began the study of the English language, in the hope of translating such English books as would interest and benefit young people. His first translations were Miss Catherine Sinclair's "Modern Accomplishments" and "Modern Society," both very soon reaching a second edition. Later he added to the list several works by Mrs. Sewell. A new translation of Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" was offered to publishers, who for the time were unwilling to take it up; after waiting twenty years, Mr. van Scheltema's opportunity came, and the book came out with Cassell's illustrations, and was received with popular satisfaction.

In 1844 he received a call to a larger place, Oudenplaat, and hearing there that Pastor Huydecoper, of the Hague, had started a temperance society (abstinence from spirits only), he immediately joined it, being persuaded that drinking among the working classes was one of the greatest hindrances to the spread of Gospel work. The conflict was against great odds, for the Government pushed the sale of liquor to fill the exchequer through taxation. The following year he removed to Hoorn, a town far in the north of Holland. There and in Amsterdam, whither he went in 1849, he did his utmost to advance temperance among the poorer classes, but very soon experienced that simply abstaining from spirits had very little influence, and not the least power in regard to rescuing drunkards.

For eleven years he laboured in a district of a mixed character, partly shops where people were busy the entire day, partly the narrowest streets with many houses of ill-fame. In 1860, he took charge of one of the poorest and most neglected parts of the town, having but one class of persons, working people; though infested with more than a hundred ginshops. While planning how to exercise a good influence in that mass of 5000 souls who had never been cared for, a friend at the Hague gave him, without having himself read it, Mrs. Wightman's "Haste to the Rescue." The book was an inspiration, and enlightened his mind on the question that had for years been engrossing his attention. He prayerfully determined to make total abstinence the ground-work of his pastoral and home mission labours. From that moment his course has been a series of providential guidings and blessings.

After having for some years been on the committee of the Religious Tract Society of the Netherlands, he was chosen as secretary in 1859, and was able to issue many useful tracts. Twenty-seven on the list of the Religious Tract Society of London are translations which he made for his people. Vine Hall's "The Sinner's Friend," being too large for the Dutch Society, was issued by private arrangement, and 32,000 sold at cost price or less. Subsequently the work was placed in the hands of the Tract Society at Rotterdam, and an additional 20,000 have been sold.

He translated Mrs. Wightman's book, and issued it in aid of a Home Mission Hall, which was opened in 1864 as a home for the work of the Total Abstinence Society, which had been formed two years previously. The fact that Mr. van Scheltema had himself given up wine and smoking had more influence than the most eloquent advocacy, and a body of earnest men gathered round him. Infant schools bearing the name of the young Queen were erected adjoining the Hall, which was named after the King, "Koning Willemshuis."

In 1862 Mr. van Scheltema visited England as a delegate to the National Temperance League meetings. In order to profit fully by the occasion he came early, and stayed in all six weeks. He learned much of English work and ways. He had read Mrs. Bayly's "Ragged Homes and How to Mend Them;" and Mrs. Ranyard's "The Missing Link." He now went through St. Giles's with Rev. G. W. M'Cree; and heard a host of children sing at the Crystal Palace. This last was a charming sight, for in Holland there was no enthusiasm in sacred song. Yet there was promise of good things to come, for one feature of Mr. van Scheltema's very popular "Bible Almanac" was translations with music of "There is a Fountain filled with blood," "Rock of ages," "Just as I am," etc.

One of the many important ministries rendered by Mr. van Scheltema has been the composition and translation of hymns for mission work and worship. A few years ago the readers of the Sunday at Home were asked to send in lists of "The Best Hundred Hymns." Subsequently, the collection which found greatest favour was published; and then it was found that seventy of them had been given to the Dutch-speaking people through our friend's poetic pen.

At the proper moment he found a great helper in Mr. J. van 't Lindenhout, the founder of the Neerbosch Orphanage, an institution carried on in a manner similar to that at Bristol with which the honoured name of George Müller is associated. This is a children's village, the inmates numbering a thousand, tenderly cared for in charming surroundings, with a church in the centre. One of Mr. van 't Lindenhout's first endeavours was to found a printing press, and, besides other work on its behalf, Mr. van Scheltema has written and translated about 2000 hymns and songs. Philip Phillips's "Singing Pilgrim" has been issued in many editions, and there has been a large sale of a Dutch version of "Songs of Gladness," for which the Sunday School Union of London kindly gave the music electros.

A good many of these songs have been reprinted in South Africa and America; the Dutch in the latter country asking Mr. van Scheltema for a hymn-book, numbering 245 pieces, but before it was published it grew to 627. All this was since witnessing the ministry of singing while in England in 1862. For some years Mr. van Scheltema came frequently to Great Britain to study evangelistic and philanthropic methods. His experience has been extended by travels in other directions. In 1864 he visited Geneva to attend the meetings of the Evangelical Alliance and the Calvin Memorial Festival. On the way he stayed a week in Paris, meeting Mr. Albert Woodruff, the apostle of the American Sunday-school system. The outcome was that Mr. Woodruff visited Amsterdam, and a Sunday-school Union was started on the American plan. With the friendly assistance of the London Sunday School Union, the organisation has flourished for more than twenty-five years.

When, in 1865, the cholera showed itself in strong force at Amsterdam, and he discovered that the inhabitants of many streets of his visiting district had scarcely drinkable water, he made a contract with the Water Delivery Company, and through water being supplied by pipes to 800 rooms, the district remained almost free from cholera, and subsequently from typhoid fever. This step was not only a great public boon, but it gave Mr. van Scheltema a mighty influence for good in that neighbourhood. At this time, work was begun for the children by Sunday schools, religious services, Bands of Hope, sewing and knitting classes, singing classes, library, etc.

In 1867 Mr. van Scheltema arranged for the Evangelical Alliance a hymn-book in four languages, so that the delegates could sing "in their own tongue." At the meetings that year he met Canon Battersby and his sister, and the result was a close and lasting friendship. Another undertaking was the introduction of the Jubilee Singers into Holland, where they raised a substantial sum for the Fisk University. To this end the hymns with music had to be translated into Dutch. Mr. van Scheltema was the first to introduce dissolving views into Holland as a means of popular instruction. Working hours are so long that the drink-shops are afterwards almost the only refuge of the people.

Besides the many translations already named, Mr. van Scheltema has given Dutch-speaking people the following:—Isaac Watts's "Divine and Moral Songs"; Spurgeon's "John Ploughman's Talk" and "John Ploughman's Pictures," six of his "Lectures," "Farm Sermons," "Cheque Book of the Bank of Faith," and "Sermons in Candles"; Dr. Alexander Macleod's "Children's Portion"; General Booth's "Darkest England"; William Arthur's "Successful Merchant"; and Mrs. Beecher Stowe's "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Among his own works are Lives of Bunyan, Gordon, and Spurgeon, also a History of Philip II. and his "Invincible" Armada. Some of these works and translations have been very widely circulated, reaching several editions, some of them profusely illustrated.

In 1881 failing health obliged him to take rest, and to leave Amsterdam for Arnhem, where he now resides, although remaining at the head of the work to which he has devoted his life. A most able assistant took up the preaching and visiting, and is highly esteemed by the people. Every part of the work continues to flourish. The number of children in the four schools is 2400; in the Sunday-school there are 1000, and would be more if teachers were more numerous. Those who are engaged in the work are almost all people who were themselves instructed in the schools. The number of total abstainers is 560, and every Saturday evening 150 to 200 spend a free evening in the hall, coffee free.

This local work at last made it possible in 1880 to try a National Christian Total Abstinence League; and this during the past five years has been steadily growing, sixty of the younger ministers having acknowledged the value of the principles in evangelistic work. Mr. van Scheltema even found it possible a year ago to start a weekly paper.

Mr. van Scheltema's latest endeavour has been to start a Sailors' Home, Temperance Hotel, and Coffee Hall, in the village of Ymuiden, built after the opening of the New Canal from Amsterdam to the sea. There are twelve ginshops in the little place, and not one house where the pilots and sailors are free from the smell of strong drink. A lady went to all these ginshops, spoke kindly with the men, and now ten of the pilots and sixty other men are members of the Total Abstinence Society and very zealous for its principles. The wife of one of the pilots opened her house for the sailors, and every evening English and Dutch seamen sing together Sankey's hymns in their own tongue. Of the number of the sailors that come to the place, at least half are English, so that our friend would be glad to hear rom such as are willing to help in the undertaking.

While abundant in labours, Mr. van Scheltema has known much of family care. He has given his people a sound and wholesome literature and pointed the way to social reform; but none the less is he a man who values the home and knows its joys and sorrows. He writes:—"From 1862 to 1872, when I lost my first wife and became a widower with a large family, I regularly visited London two or three times annually to study every kind of philanthropic work. Among my best friends have been Dr. Davis, and now Dr. L. Borrett White, of the Religious Tract Society; Mrs. E. L. Ranyard, of the Domestic Mission; Canon Battersby, at whose invitation I attended the Keswick Convention; Messrs. Smithies, Robert Rae, and Fred. Smith." While so fully engaged himself, Mr. van Scheltema has had the joy of seeing his children walk in paths of truth and honour.

In times gone by he has stood almost alone as a ministerial temperance reformer; now he has a growing support, and a wide recognition is being accorded to his work. Recently the Queen of Holland conferred on him the Order of the Lion. He is now in his seventy-eighth year, but still hard at work, translating, among other books, the "New Hymns and Solos." We trust that his last days will be the brightest, and that the Divine blessing, as well as the co-operation of friends, will encourage and sustain him.

AN OLD ZULU CHIEF.

Our recent account of a new Zulu missionary, Mr. John Meek, of Othello, Rorke's Drift, may add interest to the story of an old Zulu chief, which comes to us in a private letter from the missionary himself. Being now free from his farm, Mr. Meek broke new ground by visiting an old Zulu chief, twelve miles off, and proposing to conduct services for the whole village every Wednesday. After expressing doubt about the acquiescence of the resident magistrate, the old chief agreed to call the meetings, and an impromptu gathering was held at once. A few weeks later the old chief, who was quite astonished that anything new should be learnt by one of his age and experience, said:—"I have been living all this long time for nothing. To-day is the first day that I see I am saved by Jesus who died for me!"

Six weeks later the old man had a stroke of paralysis. His heathen sons summoned the witches who said the spirits were angry; six cows must be sacrificed. But the old man would not say the customary words of offering. "No!" he said "God is my Saviour; you kill for meat, not for me." Witches are very fond of beef. But neither cajoling nor threatening availed. He said, "God made all things. I believe in Jesus as my Saviour." The witches left, but a few days later Mr. Meek found one in the hut trying to persuade the old man again. The Zulus came crowding in to see what would happen. Mr. Meek cross-questioned the witch, showing up her deceits, to the delight of the whole company. She went out and a prayer meeting followed. The old man said, "God is almighty, and may I enter into glory with you!" At the next meeting he exclaimed, after renewed confession of his faith, "I shall enter into God's Kingdom! He is all I need."

The witches had not done with him yet. They said the sacrifices were a mistake. They would now use drugs. But the old chief was a match for them. He agreed, on the one condition that the whole company should join in prayer to God for a blessing on the medicine. They refused, but at last at midnight they yielded, and the old man himself led the prayer. How wonderfully can God's Spirit break the chains even of inveterate superstition!

The heavy cost of equipping the new station at Mr. Meek's farm with schools, &c., has made a few friends in this country anxious to contribute to Dr. Dalziel's Mission (Gordon Memorial), and Miss Cutbush, 56, Norroy-road, Putney, will acknowledge any gift.

OPIUM-SMOKING in Formosa seems to be on the increase. At the Taiwanfoo hospital, sometimes fully half the out-patients on a dispensary day are slaves of opium. Dr. Anderson says that most of the opium-smokers he has met declare that the first introduction to the pleasures of the pipe was a resort to the soothing influence of the drug in some time of bodily pain. He believes that if every town and village could have a qualified native practitioner dispensing foreign medicines there would be much less of what he, in common with almost every missionary in China, holds to be "a gigantic evil."

THE WESLEYAN TEMPERANCE COMMITTEE has sent to the Government resolutions in favour of the introduction during next session of some effective measures for the control of the drink traffic; expressing its strong conviction that no legislation will be satisfactory which does not exclude compensation for refused licences, provide for specially elected licensing bodies, include Sunday closing with more stringent regulations in reference to travellers, and give ratepayers the power of direct veto on all licences. The committee also urge that clubs should be brought under the control of the licensing laws, and that there should speedily be adequate legislation for the control of habitual drunkards.

MR. MOODY IN ENGLAND.

MISSION AT READING.

THE visit of the evangelist to this thriving Berkshire town was short but distinctly fruitful. The first arrangement was that the meetings should only cover two days, but Mr. Moody was prevailed on to extend his stay so as to embrace Sunday last. The main gatherings were held in the large new Town Hall; the smaller hall was used partly for overflows, but chiefly for the inquiry meetings. The local friends entered very heartily into the special effort. Prominent among the lay helpers was Mr. Sutton, jun., of the firm of the world-renowned florists and seedsmen, Messrs. Sutton and Sons. Another industrial king in Reading, Mr. William Palmer, of biscuit fame, was also at a number of the meetings.

It is not easy to differentiate the Reading Mission from many that have gone before it. There were the "eager anxious throngs" coming from town and district; the same spirit of hearing shown by people of all sorts and conditions, the same enjoyment of Mr. Moody's happy unrestrained fashion of conducting the meetings; the same rapt attention to his fervid appeals and presentation of the way of life; the same responses to his calls for instant decision, and the same solemn dealing with stricken anxious ones in the after-meeting.

Mr. W. R. Lane took charge of the overflow meetings, and was cheered by many tokens of God's presence and power in these assemblies. The department of Gospel-song was well to the front. The local choir was extremely hearty in its rendering of the tuneful melodies, though there was the tendency to rush through the music at a breathless pace. Mr. A. J. Sayers sang solos with exceeding sweetness; when he was absent Lord Bennet and Mr. C. F. Davis took his place. Occasionally, as is his wont, Mr. Moody elected himself choir-master and drilled the congregation into a knowledge of some catching chorus, much to the delight of everybody.

Sabbath was a full and deeply interesting day. Mr. Lane spoke with power to a large body of Christians in the early morning. At eleven o'clock the hall was crowded with non-churchgoers and seekers, when Mr. Moody discoursed on the love of God, and many hearts were melted down by the strong sunshine of that glorious truth. At three in the afternoon, while Mr. Moody rested, Mr. Lane was preacher to another full congregation, taking for his subject the solemn one of future retribution, which he handled with mingled fidelity and tenderness. In the evening the hall was crowded by men about an hour before the advertised time, and Herod's spiritual concern under the preaching of John the Baptist was made the topic of a thrilling appeal to procrastinators. At the same hour Mr. Lane spoke to a more than full audience in King's Road Baptist Church, the pastor of which, Mr. Davis, was very hearty in his sympathy with the mission.

After-meetings were held forenoon, afternoon, and evening, and they were all of a very hopeful character. So far as human judgment could extend, there were many clear decisions for Christ. The Reading friends have a great opportunity now in following up and carrying to its flood the tide of spiritual concern awakened. We understand the special meetings are to be continued in the churches.

An added interest was lent to the Sabbath meetings by the artless and pathetic song of Miss Agnew, as she was singing in the West-end meetings of nine years ago will be remembered by many.

PREPARATIONS AT OXFORD.

The expected visit of the evangelist to Oxford has quickened a deep, if quiet, interest in both "town and gown." A committee of arrangements has been formed, headed by Canon Christopher, and consisting of several other evangelical clergymen, some of the Nonconformist ministers, and other leading men of the churches. The Corn Exchange, capable of holding some two thousand people, has been secured, and also the Town Hall for the expected overflow. The mission commences to-morrow (Friday) and continues to the following Monday, inclusive.

Mr. Moody's willingness to give the last few days of his stay in England to a visit to Oxford, while many other places have been declined, arises, it is known, from the hope of meeting a large number of the undergraduates, as he did at his former visit, ten years ago. Special arrangements are, therefore, being devised in their interest. In almost every college the matter has been taken up, and it is being worked by the "grads" themselves. It is said that quite a thousand were down to hear Mr. Moody at his former visit, and it is believed that as many will avail themselves of the special men's meeting arranged for the Sunday night. Will not Christian parents who have sons at Oxford use their influence to induce them to attend, and pray earnestly that in doing so they may gain a blessing for their whole life? Daily prayer-meetings have already commenced, and special preparatory meetings are, or will be, held in most of the congregations in the city.

Canon Christopher, by whose influence and effort Mr. Moody's visit has been largely brought about, has written a letter to the Oxford Chronicle calling upon the Christians in the locality to take up the movement. Will not Christians throughout the whole country join their Oxford brethren in prayer; remembering that to gain a blessing for the University City will be in a large degree to gain a blessing for the land, and even beyond it.

THE NAVVY MISSION.

A LITTLE paper sent us by Dean Fremantle gives some details as to that nomadic class, the navvies, engaged on public and other works, and numbering nearly 100,000. Amongst these this mission works by sending qualified missionaries to live amongst the navvies, and also, when possible, trained nurses, by establishing Sunday-schools, night-schools, reading-rooms, religious services, temperance societies, ambulance classes, and, in short, bringing within the reach of navvy wanderers the benefits already enjoyed by other working men.

The navvies appreciate it, and everywhere look for their mission. In 1891 the number of adult navvies attending various services and Bible-classes was 526,834, and the number of pledges was 765. It has gained not only the confidence of the navvies, but the sympathy of many for the navvies, who formerly were left to suffer unheeded. When 9000 of them were starving, from the suspension of the Hull and Barnsley Railway and Docks, an appeal to the public brought the noble sum of £1,400, and for three months the distress was met, relieved, and conquered. But far more needs to be done, and to be sustained, by reason of the many projected works shortly to be started. The Dean of Ripon says:—"No other society has done a greater work with such small means. The Divine blessing has from the first rested on its labours, religiously, morally, and socially." Communications may be made to the treasurer, Mr. F. C. Hall, 13, Berkeley-place, Wimbledon.

REV. O. MICHELSEN'S WORK.

LAST week Rev. Oscar Michelsen, of Tongoa, New Hebrides, addressed the North London Presbytery on his mission work in the South Seas. He has several engagements to tell his deeply interesting story, and letters may be addressed to him at 57, Petherton-road, Mildmay Park, N. Pastor Arthur G. Stevens, of Malvern Link, describing a second visit by Mr. Michelsen to that place, writes:—

"It is to commend him to any who desire that the interest of their friends, their classes, and themselves in 'the Divine enterprise of missions' should be stimulated that I now write, bespeaking help for our Norwegian brother, in arranging meetings for him in different parts of the country—and where that is possible, utilising his presence for several meetings in a district—that so his desires may be accomplished in being able to testify to the Lord's faithfulness in the past, and to put Him still further to the test for the future development of the work by establishing a training school for native Christian teachers, by the appointment of a large number of native missionaries, the provision of a mission vessel, and, if it may be, the calling out of some from this country to work there.

"The Otago (New Zealand) Presbyterian Church, with which Mr. Michelsen is connected, is unable to make itself responsible for all the labourers needed at the present juncture. Mr. Michelsen therefore appeals to British Christians for help. When I mention that an annual contribution of £3 will maintain an evangelist in his own village, that for £4 he may be sent to any part of his native island, and for £6 a year a new missionary can be sent to occupy and pioneer an unevangelised island, surely Bible classes, mission bands, and Christian associations will be found eager to support a missionary of their own, in addition to any other help they may be giving to this grand cause."

EVANGELISATION OF THE SUDAN.

IT is now several years since a certain section of the Church of Christ was awakened by the voice of Graham Wilmot Brooke to think of the needs of the Great Sudan. At that time, and since, many have felt that this part of the world has been laid upon their hearts. But there are those who, in the interval, have been raising the cry of unbelief, and asking what has been the result of the work undertaken up to the present time. These have overlooked the fact that the survey must be carried out before real work can be begun. A preliminary survey of the field before us has been made; those who went forth to lead the surveying party have laid down their lives in the work. The report of that survey is now to be put before the Church of Christ at home, and the question must be asked, "What will you do now? You sent us forth to find openings for the work. Are you ready now to accept the responsibility which this report lays upon you, and to see that the Gospel shall be sent where the doors stand wide open?"

It is impossible to give in a few words any adequate impression of the openings that exist. I hope that before long the story of my journeys in the Basa country to Bida, and to Yimaej, may be published, and they will give the best proof of the crisis that has arrived. But though I do not wish now to make any general statement as to the prospects of evangelisation in the Upper Niger District, I must tell you of the action which I have taken as your representative, and appeal to you to back me up.

In the Basa country I found the people ready and eager for the Gospel, and in view of the immense importance of this tract of country as having resisted the Mohammedan invasion, I told the people that by God's power we hoped to be able to work amongst them. On my journey to Bida, calling at the towns of Muye and Boudan, I held out hopes of visits from our missionaries, and at Egga spoke of the renewal of the work. But the interviews which I had with the chief men of the places were of comparatively slight importance when we speak of Bida. Here, for the second time, in one of the great Mohammedan cities of Central Africa, we were received with every sign of cordiality, and the second time with far greater appreciation than the first. Again I told the Emir of Nupe that it was our deliberate intention, God willing, to visit them frequently and to live nearer them, and, if possible, that they should have visits from a doctor.

This is, then, a great crisis. We have been invited to take up the work, and a welcome is assured us from all the people of the country. If we do not go we shall be classed as deceivers, and a fatal barrier may be opposed to the progress of the Gospel. Whilst this is true of Bida, it is also true of Yimaha, where they have been appealing for Christian teachers for many years. Shall we take advantage of these opportunities, or must we delay until it is, perhaps, too late?

Some cautious friends may suggest that perhaps the state of the country may not be settled, and that we should wait some time to see how things turn out. I grant that the country is liable to be disturbed, and for this reason I should not recommend the erection of many expensive mission buildings. With due regard to health, the modes of living and machinery should be as simple as possible. But I look upon it as of the most urgent importance that we should go forward now: we have an opportunity now which we may never have again, and if we let it slip this part of Africa may for many years be closed to the Gospel.

That there may be danger there is no question. Men who are fearful and afraid should not volunteer for this field; but I believe that a splendid opening presents itself of preaching Christ where it has not been already preached. Will you pray that the right men may be raised up, and that means may be provided for their support, and that they may be equipped in the fullest possible way for the work which lies before them?

CHARLES F. HARFORD-BATTERSBY.
Church Missionary Society, Salisbury-square.

THE CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY has for many winters opened its hall in Thrawl-street as a night shelter for the homeless and destitute, and 37,000 men and women have thus been sheltered, and many of them afterwards helped into work. The report may be had of Mr. J. Atkinson, 28, Enfield-road, Kingsland, N.

PRAYER AND WORK.

SPECIAL MEETINGS AT MEMORIAL HALL.

The ordinary half-yearly meetings of the London Congregational Union were preceded last week by two days devoted specially to prayer and earnest conference on spiritual work. The all-day prayer-meeting on Monday proved a season of remarkable power, and indeed there were those who declared it to be "the greatest day in the history of the London Union." Throughout the day, from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m., a constant succession of prayer meetings was held, and great interest was shown.

In the evening a conference was held on "Our Work in London," when Rev. A. Rowland presided, and briefly opened the subject.

Rev. Andrew Mearns, referring to the increase in the population of London, said there were now nearly six millions of people in the metropolis, and Congregationalism had not kept pace with this increase. To do this one hundred and sixty more places of worship were needed, with an aggregate seating capacity of 1,600,000. Dealing with the various districts separately, he stated that South London, not East London, was the poorest. The slums were not so populous as once they were, as the people are gradually leaving the centre for the suburbs; but they must be followed to the suburbs, and their religious needs provided for there. As to mission work, he did not think they had yet got at the right method. It was certain that the churches must do the work, and they might combine in local groups for this purpose. He was in favour of hiring halls rather than building new edifices, and he mentioned that he had an offer of one for £250 per annum, where the Gospel could be preached to 3,000 people weekly. He knew of three such halls which could be rented at once if the funds were forthcoming. The same kind of service would not suit all places, and he insisted that the services must be such as the people can understand and appreciate.

Amongst those who took part in the conference which followed were Revs. T. T. Waterman and R. Mackay and Mr. John Blackham.

The consecration meeting of Tuesday proved deeply interesting, the speakers at the morning meeting representing various denominations. First, after the chairman, came Rev. F. B. Meyer, who delivered an earnest address, pointing out that the secret of successful Christian work was in permitting God to work through the worker. When a man ceased to speak from himself as a centre, and let God speak through him, there was a complete revolution in himself and his method. Rev. W. Darlow Serjeant discussed the conditions upon which the baptism of the Holy Ghost could be received. There must, he pointed out, be an end of self; they must surrender themselves wholly up to God. Rev. W. Hay M. H. Aitken, in the course of a powerful address, made the statement that there is in the Church of Christ of to-day but little of real downright self-sacrifice. The Church, he declared, was weighed down with the incubus of self-indulgence, and, like the previous speaker, he urged his hearers to live lives of complete surrender to the will of God. Mr. R. F. Horton, the concluding speaker, offered their "heart's love" to those who had spoken, and said a meeting of Congregationalists was never happy without having brethren of other denominations present who were whole hearted with God. He then turned the meeting into a service of prayer and praise. Some fifteen or sixteen very brief prayers were offered, ladies as well as gentlemen taking part.

In the afternoon the work of the Holy Spirit was considered, addresses being given and testimonies borne by Revs. R. J. Ward, R. F. Horton, G. D. Macgregor, J. Knaggs, R. H. Noble, and G. D. Bartlett.

The evening was devoted to an address by Rev. Alfred Rowland on "The Fruition of the Fuller Life." Among the conditions on which fuller spiritual life depends, he mentioned nourishment and atmosphere. Perhaps more than in anything else our churches are deficient in a devotional atmosphere, which will make their social engagements sweet and wholesome and transform into sacraments the feasts they spread for God's poor. "In our homes and in our churches, then," he concluded, "but above all in our own secret experience, let us steadily maintain close fellowship with God, and then spiritual life will develop into Christly service, and ultimately into the blessedness of heaven." An outburst of applause succeeded this timely and earnest address, which evidently made a deep impression upon the hearers.

Brief words by Revs. W. B. Selbie and F. H. Stead closed a series of meetings which all felt to have been accompanied with much profit and power.

THE CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATIONS.

Y.M.C.A.

It is proposed to hold in 1894 a Jubilee Y.M.C.A. Conference in London.

The Aylesbury Y.M.C.A. has recently had a successful annual meeting.

New premises are being erected by the Ballymena Young Men's Christian Association, at a cost of £2000.

The Aberdeen Y.M.C.A. has 663 men and boys in its various Bible-classes, and both the spiritual and educational branches have been well sustained.

On Sunday week special sermons were preached at the Nonconformist and Episcopal churches of Sheerness on behalf of the Isle of Sheppey Y.M.C.A.

Mr. W. A. Boyd, of the Cork Y.M.C.A., has been appointed secretary of the Dublin Association, and travelling secretary for the Midland Counties of Ireland.

Sheerness Association is steadily increasing the amount of its mission work in the villages. A building fund has been started in order to provide the branch with a home of its own.

The membership of the Cape Town Y.M.C.A. is shown by the last annual report to be 580. The Association is in an excellent financial condition, and is, we learn, doing a splendid work.

The fifth annual report of the Burton Y.M.C.A. gives the number of members and associates as 311. The evangelistic work has been much blessed, while the P.S.A. proves helpful and interesting.

The three days' conference on the spiritual life, recently held at Wakefield in connection with the Y.M.C.A., were times of rich blessing to many. An interesting missionary meeting was held on the closing day.

The question of forming a teachers' and students' section of the Y.M.C.A. is receiving the attention of the National Council; as is that also of promoting further legislation for the repression of betting and gambling.

The Dublin Y.M.C.A. has a capital programme for the winter. There are plenty of good clubs and classes, meetings and Bible-classes, and the reception committee does a most useful work in welcoming strangers.

In the North Metropolitan district united meetings were arranged for the week of prayer for young men. These were held at Finsbury Park on Nov. 7, at Tottenham on Nov. 8, Highbury Nov. 9, and Camden Town Nov. 10.

Reports to hand show that the opening of their winter's work by the generality of London Y.M.C.A.'s has never been attended with more promise. The present activity of both city and suburban associations is particularly marked.

The City Quarterly states:—"Fifteen of the Scottish associations provide recreative agencies in the form either of a gymnasium or outdoor athletics, while a very large number report literary agencies, which are carried on with great benefit to the members."

The special mission to young men at Finsbury Park commenced on Monday night with an address by Mr. Barry Wake. These meetings are continuing each night this week at eight o'clock. Prayer is asked for a great blessing during and after the mission.

The Derby Y.M.C.A. has just entered its new rooms in St. Peter's Churchyard, and has thus begun what promises to be a most successful winter's work. The president, Mr. Alderman H. H. Bemrose, J.P., has recently been elected a vice-president of the national council.

Mr. Edward Hurditch, who is conducting evangelical services at the Athenæum Hall, Brighton, this winter, with much acceptance, united with the committee of the Brighton Y.M.C.A. in arranging services for the week of universal prayer, from Nov. 6 to 13. Daily meetings were held at noon in the lecture hall of the association.

Shaftesbury House, Margate, has just issued its tenth annual report, showing the appreciation of the Home. 1262 visitors have stayed there during the past year, while many encouraging testimonies have been received to spiritual and physical benefits derived from the home influence and from the evangelistic work carried on.

The secretary of the Norwich Y.M.C.A. says:—We have increased our membership by 34. A mission band has been inaugurated, the junior section is going ahead. Evangelistic meetings, which were abandoned some years ago, have been restarted Gospel meetings for boys are being held every Sun day night, and the results are most encouraging.

The Liverpool Y.M.C.A. has hit upon a capita feature in its "Pleasant Saturday Evenings fo Men," which will prove a strong antidote to demora lising places of amusement. This well-organise and successful association is now in the midst of it winter work, and the rooms are full of visitors an the programme full of attractive engagements. Ove 450 new members were received quite recently.

A month ago the Belfast Association organise Gospel services, in the largest hall in the city, o Sunday afternoons. The movement has met with grea success; the large hall is filled to overflowing ever Sunday with an audience numbering between 2,00 and 3,000. Leading ministers of the city have bee giving addresses, and a large choir, under the leade ship of Mr. A. W. Vance, has conducted the praise.

Of the two Y.M.C.A. missionary secretaries jus sent out—Mr. McCann to India and Mr. Holmes t Egypt and Palestine—the latter reports excelle results accruing from his temporary stay at Gibralta where two promising auxiliaries have been forme The Christian workers with whom he has bee brought into contact just outside Gibraltar are i urgent need of a "Y.M.C.A. mule," the cost of whic would be about £10, and beg also for supplies Spanish tracts.

A praying band, in connection with the Bourne mouth Association, have united in making th following promise:—"Remembering the words the Lord Jesus, 'If two of you shall agree on eart as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall b done for them of my Father which is in heaven,' will endeavour, by God's grace, to pray daily for real deepening of the spiritual life of the membe of our Y.M.C.A., for the true conversion to God the associates, for a great ingathering of youn men as the result of this winter's work, and for rich blessing generally upon the Shaftesbury Ha services."

An encouraging meeting was held at Tottenha on Nov. 8, when representatives from other associa tions in the district were present, and addresses wer given by Mr. Hind Smith and Mr. Nash Rees, o "The Sunday Afternoon Bible Class." The gener feeling was that the "S.A.B.C." should be mai tained in connection with the associations and no superseded by the "P.S.A.," but that the two move ments might be maintained concurrently. Stres was laid on the importance of conducting the Bible class in a lively and conversational manner, and tes timonies were given as to blessings received in con nection with such gatherings.

The week of prayer has been well sustained Southwark by nightly meetings. On Sunday, Noven ber 6, a special service was held at New Surre Chapel, when the claims of the association wer brought before the church by Rev. B. Senior an Mr. C. Woollard (Y.M.C.A. Sec.). In five othe churches special sermons were preached. On Noven ber 13 special reference was made in ten church to the work of the Y.M.C.A. At Christ Church (Re F. B. Meyer's) a special meeting for men only wa held after the ordinary evening service, when th secretary and members of the Southwark Associa tion took part. A quickened influence is expecte from these special efforts.

Clergy and ministers all over the country hav joined heartily with the Y.M.C.A. in observing th past week as a week of special prayer. Beyond th very large number of meetings organised, hundred of special sermons to young men have been preache from church and chapel pulpits. In one provinci town, for example, sermons to young men, arrange for by the local Y.M.C.A., were preached, on th evening of the 13th inst., in no fewer than fift places of worship. The Central International Com mittee at Geneva fix the subjects for prayer an meditation, and these are circulated amongst th 4982 centres throughout the world, each year with manifestly increased measure of Divine blessing res ing on the movement.

Y.W.C.A.

The winter session at Cavendish-street, and othe centres of the London work, is now in full and bus swing.

Since their first home was opened at Great Wake ing in July, the Women's Convalescent Home Asso ciation have afforded convalescent accommodation t nearly 150 women and girls upon recovery from acci dent or disease.

The report of the Dublin Y.W.C.A. Institute an Home shows that during the year 347 members an friends have been staying in the Home; the Bible classes have increased in numbers and power— we 300 attending. The educational classes go on wel The interest in missions has increased. The Bibl class members support two Bible-women in Foo-chow and altogether the work of the branch is in a flouri ing condition.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

OXFORD.

The British Temperance League had a conference and meeting last Monday, when stirring addresses were delivered by Canon Barker, Rev. H. J. Boyd, and other leading temperance workers.

The recent disastrous fire in Newfoundland gave special interest to a lecture delivered some days ago by Rev. J. J. Curling, Commissary to the Bishop of Newfoundland, who gave a valuable account of the work of God and the great needs of that distant land.

One of the most popular of Oxford lecturers is Rev. R. L. Ottley, of Magdalen, and he has been giving on the last three Sunday evenings in All Saints' Church a course of addresses to University men on "Some Laws of Christian Life": fear, self-respect, service. A large number attended, and the course was full of helpful teaching.

The annual meeting of the Mansfield House University Settlement in Canning Town was held at Mansfield College last week, when a very encouraging account of the work was given. Dr. Fairbairn and Dr. Moulton also spoke. The spread of these settlements in London is bringing many University men into touch with life among the poor.

Mrs. Malden, honorary secretary of the Mothers' Union, has been addressing some important meetings in Oxford recently. The union is a valuable help for gathering together mothers for sympathy, prayer, counsel, and help in their life of motherhood. There are branches all over the country, and the Oxford Diocesan branch is evidently doing a good work.

Last Sunday and Monday the anniversary services and meetings of the Church Pastoral Aid Society were held. Rev. J. A. Howell, vicar of Penmaenmawr, spoke very acceptably on the work of the society in Wales, and Rev. F. S. Webster (formerly of St. Aldate's, Oxford) gave an interesting account of the work in his populous parish in Birmingham.

Prayer and preparation are the key-notes of Oxford workers in view of the mission this week by Mr. Moody. There will be two meetings each day from November 18 to 21 inclusive, one of which (on Sunday evening) will be for men only. The interest created by Mr. Moody's last visit and the evident blessing of the present missions in other places are leading the faith of many to "expect great things from God."

At the terminal conversazione of the Inter-Collegiate Christian Union held at Wycliffe Hall last Wednesday, Rev. H. V. Stuart, Vicar of St. James's, Wolverhampton, gave an address on "The Clergy and the People." Mr. Stuart, who is a brother of Rev. E. A. Stuart, of Holloway, has for some time lived practically as a working man among working men, with the style of living usual among working people.

CAMBRIDGE.

Much sympathy is expressed with Rev. H. C. G. Moule, whose nephew, Mr. E. H. Moule, a most promising scholar of Trinity, died suddenly last week. He was the son of Bishop Moule, of Mid-China. May he be strengthened to bear his heavy loss and enabled to rejoice that his son has entered first into the presence of the King.

Sunday week was Commemoration Day, and an able sermon was preached at the University Church, Great St. Mary's, by Dr. Creighton, Bishop of Peterborough. He said, in the course of his sermon, which was listened to attentively by a large congregation, that a university could only have one true motive, a common zeal for truth and goodness.

The terrible evils of gambling and betting have been more than ordinarily brought before us lately by a scandal having been made by the police upon a house in the town where these practices were carried on to a large extent. Rev. H. P. Stokes, vicar of St. Paul's, took the opportunity to preach upon the subject last Sunday morning, and a crowded congregation listened to his earnest remarks.

The branch of the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society had its annual meeting on Monday night, which was presided over by Rev. John Barton. The report which was read by the chairman showed a steady increase in the work, the sum raised last year being £440. One bed at the Duchess of Connaught Hospital, Peshawur, is supported by students of Girton College.

At the C.M.U. on Monday night, Rev. Jani Alli, himself a convert from Islam, brought before us the work among the Mahommedans in Bengal. He dealt with the special difficulties which that work affords; but men filled with the Holy Ghost and with power could do great things even where the difficulties seemed most insurmountable. A man is wanted at once for Calcutta to help Mr. Jani Alli in a school. Who will go?

An extremely interesting exhibition has been held for four days at the Corn Exchange with the object of raising funds for erecting a new hospital at Jerusalem. The hall was fitted up to represent a street in Jerusalem, with bazaars containing curios from the Holy Land. Large models of the tabernacle, temple, and Jerusalem itself were the subjects of lectures by Mr. S. Schor, Mr. Schick, and Mrs. Tenz, which were listened to with great interest.

A meeting of university men interested in the work of the Children's Special Service Mission was held in the small room of the Guildhall on Tuesday. Addresses were delivered by Messrs. W. H. Roberts (Corpus), C. H. Clissold (Clare), E. Arrowsmith (secretary), H. C. Lees (John's), H. Clayton (Pembroke), and L. Byrde (Corpus). Very interesting accounts were given of the sea-side work among the boys and girls during last summer. Mr. Edwin Arrowsmith spoke earnestly of the need of winning the children to Christ while they were young.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

An interesting week of missionary meetings has been held at Largs.

Mr. J. G. Woolley has visited Glasgow and given addresses on the temperance crusade.

Madame Thoumaian, of Marsovan, Asia Minor, has been giving addresses in Scotland.

The friend who recently gave Mr. Wm. Quarrier £2000 for a teachers' house, also sent £6000 to build a new school at Bridge of Weir.

The Glasgow United Evangelistic Association appeals in the columns of The Mail for increased support during the winter months.

In an address to the Christian Association of the Glasgow University, Professor Drummond said the Christian students were the cream of the university.

A very touching account from a lady's pen of a visit to some of the homes in Dundee where "shelter children" are found, appeared in The Advertiser last week.

A meeting in furtherance of the forward movement in foreign missions was held last week in Aberdeen; several experienced missionaries gave stirring addresses.

During the ten years of its existence, the Glasgow Home Mission Union claims to have spiritually influenced about 26,000 persons, who had been non-churchgoers or "lapsed" attenders.

The Dundee Boys and Girls' Religious Association are advocating such a rearrangement of the Sunday services as would enable effective work to be done among the neglected young people.

Rev. Jas. Paton, in a lecture in Glasgow to the Protestant Institute of Scotland, reviewed the Papal claims, and illustrated the methods by which they are enforced in the country and in Parliament.

A conference of open-air preachers was held last week at Carrubber's Close, Edinburgh, to mark the close of the season for outside effort in the streets and highways. Several workers spoke words of cheer and counsel as to the best methods in adapting the message to the hearers.

IRISH NOTES.

A Methodist City Mission is proposed for Dublin.

Miss E. Lee, of Limerick, is going out to engage in Zenana mission work in China.

Rev. Dr. Williamson, of Belfast, has commenced, on Thursdays at 3 p.m., a winter series of Bible readings on important topics.

A pressing call, given for the third time to Rev. Wesley Guard, of Belfast, has come from Mount Vernon M.E. Church, Baltimore, U.S.A.

A Gospel Mission, extending over a fortnight, has been held in Dromore, co. Down, by Rev. Henry Ball. A number of persons professed conversion.

Gospel services were held each day last week in the Friends' Meeting House, Belfast, by Mr. Howard Nicholson, of London, and Arthur Pim, of Hillsborough.

The Christian Endeavour Society recently established in Enniskillen is doing an excellent work, and promises to be a power for good among the young people in that town.

Eighty-nine new members have been added to the Baptist Church, Regent-street, Belfast, during the past year. A day-school has also been opened, which now has over 100 scholars.

A united Gospel Temperance Mission, under the auspices of the Irish Temperance League, has been conducted during the past fortnight in Ballymacarrett, by Mr. Matthew Burnett. Nearly all the local ministers assisted.

The third anniversary of the Belfast Methodist City Mission was held last week in the Ulster Hall. Addresses were delivered by Revs. Jas. Harpur and Henry Montgomery, who showed that the mission is doing a really splendid work.

A successful meeting of the Belfast branch of the Evangelical Alliance was held on Tuesday evening week, to hear an address from Rev. Philip Colborne, of London, on the work of the Alliance on behalf of the persecuted in many lands.

BIBLE SOCIETY NOTES.

Some time ago there was an explosion of fire-damp, near Paturage, one of the mining villages not far from Mons, in Belgium, and the Committee made a grant of Scriptures to the families of the miners who had been killed. The Society's colporteur, who had charge of the distribution, reports that the books were received with thankfulness and much personal kindness. The people he met were generally Romanists with little enlightenment; others were secularists, who spoke bitterly of everything. There were, however, several instances which showed that copies of Scriptures which had got into the people's hands were carefully read and preserved.

Of the thirteen new versions added during last year to the Society's lists one is in Tasiko, the language of part of the population of the New Hebrides. In acknowledging a few days ago a specimen copy of the Gospel of St. Matthew, the translator, Rev. O. Michelsen, whose sphere includes Tongoa and other islands, with part of Epi, says:—"I have just seen a report from our missionaries, that the natives have come from distant parts of the islands to purchase the few pages of printed matter already existing in their language. What joy will it be for them when they learn that the whole Gospel may now be obtained for sixpence! May a rich blessing follow our united efforts."

There are few branches of Christian work more interesting than the Scripture distribution which Dr. Baedeker has been able to effect in the prisons of Siberia. With the permission of the authorities, he has distributed the Bible, in whole or part, in some thirty languages. "If anyone wants to know what sin is," Dr. Baedeker recently said at a Bible Society meeting, "let him go to Siberia. The sickness, degradation, and absence of all moral standard is something beyond description." But the prisoners received the Word of God with great joy, and the Government allowed Dr. Baedeker to visit every prison in Siberia, and to give a copy of the New Testament to every prisoner who could read. There is no reason, Dr. Baedeker says, why Siberia should not be as good a country as Canada; and it is a fact full of significance that there is no people better affected to the Bible than are the Russians generally. "They hug it to their heart."

A recent letter from the Society's agent in Tangier, gives some interesting though painful glimpses of the state of affairs among the poorer classes in Morocco. "The year has been a distressing one for the poor people—struggles against oppression and cattle disease in spring, actual war throughout the summer, and a great deal of fever and smallpox during the last few weeks. It is saddening to see the roofless houses in the villages, and to hear the people's sorrowful tales, often ended by the words—'And this is what our brethren the Moslems have done to us.' In spite, however, of numerous hindrances, many visits were paid to the villages, and occasionally to the soldiers. Among the latter, some really seem thoughtful and tender-hearted, while brutality characterises the mass. The villagers seem somewhat softened by what has occurred during the last three or four months, and in not a few instances in South Morocco and elsewhere there have been encouraging openings among the Moslems and Jews, and a good number of Scriptures have been put into the hands of the people."

A very suggestive illustration of the comparative circulation of the Scriptures among Protestants and Roman Catholics is furnished by the literary history of the Hungarian Bible. The Reformed Church of Hungary received its first complete edition from Karoli, the Tyndale of his native land, in 1590. The rival Jesuit version, that of Kaldi, did not appear till 1626. Since then the Reformed book has up to 1874 gone through some seventy-one editions; up to that date of the Jesuit version only three have been required. The Magyar-speaking Protestant population of Hungary is about half that of the Roman Catholic. If the circulation of Scriptures among the latter had been but equal in proportion to that among the former, the Jesuit Bible—taking as basis of calculation the number of editions—would in 1874 have been, not in its third or fourth, but in its 146th issue. As things stand, the circulation among the Reformed seems about forty-nine times greater than among the Romanists. It should be added that while the Protestant editions are mostly in handy volumes, the others are all large and voluminous—certainly not intended, as they would be quite unsuitable, for popular use. An interesting and detailed account of the Hungarian Bible, by Mr. Theodore Duka, M.D., will be given in the Society's Reporter for December.

Christ is the pot of manna, the cruse of oil; a bottomless ocean of all comfort, content, and satisfaction. He that has Him, wants nothing; he that wants him enjoys nothing.—Brooks.

TEMPERANCE LEGISLATION.

The Friends' Temperance Union, whose secretary is Mr. Frank Dymond, of Chesham, Bucks, has had the excellent idea (says The Daily News) of taking the sense of the country on the question of temperance reform. Some few months ago the Union drew up a series of questions on the main principles of such reform, and distributed them very widely throughout England and Wales. They were in all cases sent to persons who, whether officially connected with Temperance Associations or not, were leaders of public opinion in their localities. More than eight hundred persons answered, and their replies have been summarised in a pamphlet just issued by the Union. They cover the main points of Temperance Reform, and they will serve to show the Legislature the way that it should go when it comes to deal with this important matter.

The first question, on which there is a practical unanimity of affirmative reply, is as to the necessity of a common agreement among temperance workers in regard to the essential requirements of temperance legislation. Eighty-eight per cent. of the answers are in favour of the proposal that the number of public-houses and beerhouses shall, by the action of Parliament, be very largely reduced, so as not to exceed a certain maximum proportion—say one to a thousand in towns. Some seventy-nine per cent. of the persons replying think that popularly-elected boards should take over the licensing powers of the magistrates. But a large majority of them are against the proposal that the Town and County Councils shall exercise this licensing power. They would prefer a body created ad hoc, just as the School Boards were created for educational matters. They would give the authority the power of licensing or not licensing at its discretion, and without appeal. Ninety-one per cent., an enormous majority, would give the ratepayers in each licensing district the power of direct veto.

As to the scope of this popular veto, a great number think that the ratepayers should be empowered absolutely to prohibit the issue of any licences whether old or new, though they are by no means of one opinion as to the requisite majority. Others, and with a practical unanimity of 93 per cent., would give the ratepayers the power to diminish the number of licences, and to prohibit the issue of licences to premises not hitherto licensed. A smaller number, though a majority, would give to any locality that desired it the power to take the trade out of private hands and place it directly under the control of the Licensing Board. But they reject the proposal that the controlling body should be a philanthropic society, limited to a profit of five per cent. A large majority think that the Board should have power to issue special yearly licences to hotels and refreshment rooms, with certain clearly defined restrictions. And as many think that clubs also should be annually licensed, with all needful guarantees against "bogus" institutions of this sort.

The Union has done a good piece of work. It rightly congratulates itself on the discovery that a substantial agreement exists as to the general scope and character of the great coming measure of licensing reform.

Personalia.

Canon C. D. Bell is, we regret to hear, lying ill at the Rectory, Cheltenham.

Dr. Joseph Parker intimates that he has withdrawn from the Board of Congregational Ministers for London.

Dr. Fry, of Neyoor Medical Mission, has resigned his post, in order to enter on the superintendency of the Edinburgh Medical Mission.

Mr. I. D. Sankey conducted the praise at a recent Christian Endeavour Convention at Binghampton, N.Y. The gatherings were marked by a strongly evangelistic spirit.

Mr. John Harris, of Canning Town, held last week the twenty-fourth anniversary of the open-air services, which for all these years he and his friends have held successfully Sunday after Sunday. From testimonies borne, it is evident that great blessing has been granted on Mr. Harris's labours.

Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, the foreign secretary of the London Missionary Society, has returned from his three months' visit to South Africa. While there he had an interesting interview with Khama, the renowned African chief, and conferred with the Bechuanaland and other missionaries, including the native church at Palapye, north of the Transvaal.

Rev. John Bradford, pastor of Fillebrook Baptist Church, Leytonstone, was last week crushed between two wagons in Fenchurch-street, E.C., sustaining injuries which will necessitate careful nursing for a time. No serious consequences are apprehended from the accident, but Mr. Bradford can ill be spared from the work which he superintends with great and blessed results.

Dr. Wm. M. Taylor has resigned the pastorate of the Broadway Tabernacle, New York. He has to a great extent recovered from his late severe stroke of sickness, and it was expected that he would be able to occupy his own pulpit again. But after careful deliberation, and acting upon medical advice, Dr. Taylor has decided that the duties of the ministry at the Tabernacle are too heavy a task for his present strength.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. Richard Weaver begins a fortnight's mission on November 27 at the Ebury Mission, Pimlico Rooms, Warwick-street, S.W.

Mr. William Forbes has been giving addresses at Upminster, Finchley, and Holloway. He is this week conducting a short mission at Shanklin, Isle of Wight.

Rev. Dr. Morgan has been holding evangelistic meetings in an iron mission-room at Stroat, near Chepstow. Though the weather was bad, the people came for miles round every evening, and we believe the result has been much blessing.

New Barnet.—A series of evangelistic services has just been held here in connection with the Presbyterian Evangelisation Committee, by Rev. C. A. Scott. Much interest has been shown, and it is believed that enduring blessing has been granted.

Bovingdon, Herts.—Mr. T. Goudie, evangelist of the Herts Union of Baptist Churches, has just concluded a successful six days' mission in this village. The meetings were well attended, and several anxious souls were dealt with in the inquiry room.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Gordon Oswald will, during the winter, continue their evangelistic work in Greece. Their address will be: The Grand Hotel, Athens, and they will be glad to welcome any Christian friends who may be passing through the city.

Bracknell.—A very successful ten days' mission, conducted by Mr. Rowland Street, was brought to a close at Bracknell, Berks, on Tuesday, November 8. The services were held in the Congregational Church, and have been much blessed in the neighbourhood.

Mrs. Tanser Dawson has been holding a week's mission at Erith. Very many will have cause to praise God throughout eternity for this mission. The power of God has been manifest, and many profess to have found peace through the Blood of the Lamb.

Dr. L. W. Munhall has conducted a campaign in Meriden, Conn., that was greatly honoured of God. More than 2000 persons publicly expressed a desire to begin the Christian life. The Congregational, Methodist, and Episcopalian Churches have all received accessions to the membership.

Windsor.—A ten days' mission has been held in the Y.W.C.A. Hall, in connection with the Children's Scripture Union, by Mr. A. G. Dodderidge. Much thankfulness is felt for the blessing received both by young and old, and for the power of God's spirit realised, especially at the after meetings, where there is every reason to believe that many young boys and girls were "born again." Besides the children's meetings, evangelistic services for parents and others and Bible readings for Sunday-school teachers, etc., were held by Mr. Dodderidge, and definite blessing was received by many who were present.

Bournemouth.—Mr. John M. McAuliffe has concluded a series of eight days' mission to working people at the East Cliff Lecture Hall. Very considerable interest was evinced in the Gospel addresses as well as the afternoon Bible reading. During the eight days three lectures for the working people were delivered on "The History of the Christian Faith in Great Britain, from the Days of the Ancient British Church before Augustine to Wycliffe's Times"; "Wycliffe to the Days of Henry VIII. and Luther Reformation"; and "The Progress of Protestantism in the Sixteenth Century." These lectures were illustrated by dissolving scenes and the commodious lecture hall was filled to its capacity with working men and women. These addresses were specially given with the object of enlightening the working classes upon Protestant principles and history without controversy, and were most successful in so doing.

LADS' REST, WEST DULWICH.—The annual sale of work on behalf of this home, recently held at Upper Norwood, realised the sum of £180.

SABBATH OBSERVANCE.—In response to an appeal issued by the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association, many ministers and clergymen promised to preach on "Sabbath Observance," especially in relation to the Sunday opening of museums.

Temperance Notes.

In Auburn, Maine, population 10,000, there are only three policemen, one for the day and two for the night.

It is satisfactory to learn from a New Zealand paper that temperance is making great progress among the Maoris.

Where twelve men formerly made beer in the Wairuff Brewery at Lawrence, Kan., one hundred people are now busy making shoes.

The Congregational Total Abstinence Association has appointed a special committee to consider the Government Licensing Bill as soon as submitted.

The Bishop of London has consented to preside at the annual meeting of the Central Sunday Closing Association, to be held in Exeter Hall in February.

The trade price for gin on the West Coast of Africa is twopence-halfpenny a bottle; while rum can be bought at 4s. 6d. per dozen bottles, and gin at 2s. 6d.

Mrs. Hawkes, of Bristol, has been speaking with great acceptance and excellent results at Wakefield Preston, Longridge, Cockermouth, Halifax, and Weymouth.

The Bishop of Liverpool has issued a letter asking his clergy to support the Church of England Temperance Society, and to preach generally on January 29 on its behalf.

Spirits to the value of £1,000,000 sterling were shipped in the vessels bound for South and West Africa, which touched at a single port, last year, in the course of a single week.

A recent writer on the condition of Deptford says, "I have seen girls quite intoxicated at ten years of age, and it is of common occurrence soon after they enter their 'teens."

A Zenana missionary says: "Many are the children I have had to teach who could hardly learn, so stupefied were their brains for life by the nightly dose of opium given to them while babies."

In Michigan it is the law that only total abstainers shall be employed as engine-drivers, train despatchers firemen, and brakesmen. Any company employing any but total abstainers is liable to a fine of 500 dols for each offence.

If the municipalities of India had the power, says Mr. W. S. Caine, there is not one that would not prohibit the liquor traffic without the slightest scruple, and without the slightest mercy. There would be a majority of nine to one in favour of closing every drink shop in India.

Under the auspices of the Brighton and Hove Branch of the British Women's Temperance Association a conference and public meeting were held on Nov. 10 in the Brighton Pavilion. The attendances were good, and the workers were greatly refreshed and encouraged.

The Birmingham Gospel Temperance Mission is doing a very good and successful work. Classes for women are a prominent feature of the mission. These number twenty-nine, with a membership of over 3500. In addition to this, the agents of the mission delivered 900 addresses during the year, distributed a large amount of literature, and carried on a good work in the police courts.

Mr. Bush, R.M., in his report to Parliament on the Auckland district, says that "the ever-increasing sobriety" of the natives becomes more noticeable every year, and drunkenness is now considered a perfect disgrace. There are a few places where the natives show themselves the exception to what Mr. Bush considers himself justified in terming the rule, but he hopes for an improvement even among these.

While the British public give £1 for liquor and 2s. 6d. to Christ, obedience and love to Him demand that we should strongly protest, and more strongly work; a mere protest is not enough. Drinkdom laughs at it, and can stand volumes of words.

The Friends' Temperance Union sent out some time ago a series of inquiries in order to elicit the views entertained by temperance workers as to the essential requirements and measure of Licensing Reform. A digest of the answers received, published by the secretary of the F.T.U., Mr. Dymond Chesham, Bucks, shows practical unanimity in the necessity for the direct veto, but considerable variety of views as to the best form to be adopted.

In the Deptford Nursery, says Dr. Pring, there is a little child under the age of three, who has already learned to ask for beer. Her vocabulary is necessarily limited; but the words "beer, nurse," are lisped as readily as another child would ask for milk or water. What will be the future of this little one? And she is one of hundreds! The little withered children, paralysed boys, emaciated girls, these revelations of the streets, prove how terrible is the curse laid by the sins of the fathers upon the children.

Letters to the Editor.

"PRESENT-DAY PREACHING."

Sir,—I have read with pleasure your stirring article on "Present-day Preaching," contained in your issue of October 27. May I be permitted to add a few words upon a point which is, I think, left untouched? Eloquence is a rare quality; perhaps dwellers in cities can hardly realise how rarely it is met with in country parishes, in the by-paths, as it were, and out of the beaten track of commercial prosperity; but, as one of the every-day workers, who need reviving and refreshing each week, after six days' contact with the world, one of the many who, from the nature of their calling, have little time for individual meditation upon and examination of the Scriptures, but thankfully look forward to the first day of the week, and to some one set apart by God, as it were, and given time, education, and money to study and teach and help others, I appeal, if not for eloquent, at least for common-sense preaching!

Surely the Bible, as most Christians read, accept, and love it, is a common-sense and practical book! By it we are told truly, we can guide and judge every action of our distinctly practical lives; and is not the right way in which to do this exactly the thing we most desire to have pointed out to us week by week? If a man stands up to speak to even ordinarily educated every-day people, who, from the fact of their being before him, are in a receptive state, ready to receive the seed, and may, in many cases, be hungering for something true and satisfying to take hold of, think of, and live by, during a busy toiling week, and meanders on over some side issues of dogmatism or theory which are of no matter at all, or draws some imaginary picture out of his own inner consciousness, of mystical connections and transactions between ourselves and the angels, or some fancy portrait of a future state, about which who should speak with certainty and authority, seeing that our Lord Himself gave but few words to the subject — are we not justified in asking if this is the food Paul and the disciples would have offered to their congregations, and in complaining bitterly that our Church leaves us to a state of spiritual starvation, literally wanting bread?

Far be it from me to judge the power to serve God acceptably, in any man! A bad preacher may be one of the best of workers, but what is that to the many who do not know him as a worker, but are there to listen to him, ready to hear something which shall make their lives better and purer, willing to listen perhaps for once, to a few words about Christ and the real Christian's life, its hopes and trials, its promises and aspirations, between two weeks of crowded business or social life? What is it to them though he were a very Apollos during the week, if, on the very occasion when they are free to seek his help and counsel, and consolation, he has nothing better to offer them for the bread of life than a stone?

A clergyman's private and public life, noble, hard-working, single-minded, cannot appeal to the large or small percentage of his congregation who are not brought into contact with it; his voice, week by week, is all that reaches them; dumbly, patiently, hopefully, or hopelessly, they wait before him, for the word in good season. On whom rests the responsibility, if even in one only of God's houses, they do not get it?

The gift of clear, thoughtful, persuasive speech is not more universal than any other gift, and although a man overflowing with the love of Christ can, and will, speak with an eloquence of the heart that shall touch other hearts, as surely as would the greatest oratory of the age, one cannot, dare not, alas, depend upon this God-given because God-claimed eloquence! But because the shepherd's faith is faint ought the sheep to be allowed to suffer? Do those examiners, whose duty it is to listen to the sermons of candidates for Holy Orders, ever think of the responsibility that rests upon them? Do they ever think of the hungering multitudes who may one day have to turn hopelessly, perhaps contemptuously, wearily away from the empty platitudes, the uninteresting ramblings, the dreary disquisitions which are all the share they are to receive of the glorious, life-giving, preached Gospel of Christ?

The pulpit is acknowledged as the greatest platform the world has ever had; from it the highest and the best are to be reached; even a careless, indifferent, avowedly Godless man will listen with pleasure to a clear, logical, well-thought-out sermon, and find the shining shafts that every now and then play lightly-wise about him, none the less to his liking that they every now and then touch him home. Are we not called upon to be as wise as serpents, if as harmless as doves? If we would win men and women to Christ, we must remember that what the great preacher Paul calls "the foolishness of preaching" does not mean drivelling, but our highest talent, our highest eloquence, the dedication to God of one of the greatest of his gifts!

The mere fact of a man being a clergyman does not guarantee his being a good speaker; but taking into consideration the fact that for hundreds and thousands of souls these weekly sermons are all the spiritual help provided, surely means should be taken by the Church of England that they should be the best of their kind procurable! When Moses complained to God that he was not a man of words, but slow of speech and slow of tongue, what did God do? "Is not Aaron the Levite thy brother? I know that he can speak well. . . . . And he shall be thy spokesman unto the people!" Surely if Moses, the greatest leader that ever lived, found no shame in owning that he was not eloquent, and, in spite of his high and responsible position, felt himself unfitted to speak to his congregation, no clergyman of the present day need hesitate to own an equal lack of speaking power, and need of help!

SPIRITUAL POWER.

Dear Sir,—For a considerable time my mind has been much exercised on the subject to which so much prominence is now being given, viz., spiritual power. I take such terms as "Anointing," "Baptism of the Spirit," etc., to mean the same thing. Bearing in mind the fact that we have "one little life to live, and only one," and that it is passing so quickly, the subject of spiritual power is one of solemn importance.

I have never had the opportunity of attending a conference, any Mildmay meetings, or any meetings for Christians, such as those held in connection with Mr. Moody's meetings; but it is out of the question to suppose that on that account the blessing should be withheld. Is there some definite experience to be gone through before one can receive such a filling with the Spirit's power as one reads of in connection with such meetings? In the case of a Christian, entirely consecrated to God, not cherishing any known sin, engaging in Christian work as prompted and empowered by God's Spirit, what remains to be done?

It may be answered that the power spoken of must have been received by such an one, but there are many such who would not venture to speak of themselves or of their work as they hear others spoken of. They are conscious of no sudden transition from emptiness to fulness; they can point to no exact time when they were filled with the Spirit, and certainly they cannot say that none of their work is unsuccessful. Their spiritual life has been marked by gradual growth thus far; must they now seek after something which shall come suddenly? If so, how can they prepare for it, and in what way may they expect to obtain it?

Yours very sincerely

One Who Would Do Good.

DELUSIONS OF ROME.

Sir,—I am a constant reader and distributor of The Christian, and thank you for your excellent report of the National Protestant Congress. Will you permit me to offer a few observations on the arrogant but baseless assumptions of the Romish Church? Although proudly boasting herself to be the only true Church, when tested by her own principles she does not really possess an ordained priesthood or a single sacrament. This is not an assertion of Protestant bigotry, but a fact, drawn from authoritative sources of the Romish Church herself!

In the creed of Pope Pius IV., which is one of the fundamental documents of the Church of Rome, it is written: "I likewise undoubtedly receive and profess all other things, delivered, defined, and declared by the sacred canons and General Councils, and particularly by the Holy Council of Trent, and I condemn, reject, and anathematise all things contrary thereto," &c. Now, let us hear what the Council of Trent says in Canon 10, De Sacramentis: "If anyone shall say that the intention, at least, of doing what the Church does is not required in ministers, while they form and give the sacraments, let him be accursed."

Well, in what position do the creed and the decree place the priest and members of the Romish Church? At the best, it is a position of miserable uncertainty regarding all things sacred. The priest knows not that he is ordained. The laity know not that they have ever been baptized or married. They know not that the mass or extreme unction has ever been truly administered to them, for though they may be sure about the outward ceremony, they cannot possibly know the mind or intention of the ministering priest or prelate. Nay, even if they were absolutely sure of the honest intent of the priest ministering to them, neither he nor they can have the slightest assurance that in the long preceding links of succession, there have not been fatal defects of intention which render void every following ordination or administration of the sacrament.

Further, it is not mere uncertainty that the priests and people of the Romish Church have to face. No sane man acquainted with the characters and doings of the prelates and priests of Rome throughout Europe in former times can doubt that in thousands of cases there must have been an absolute want of any spiritual intention in the bestowal of ordination or administration of the sacraments. It comes to this result, then; that all the proud pretensions of Romanist or Ritualist regarding their orders or sacraments are empty dreams—false now—fatal for eternity. Let those who are in danger of being deluded by the assumptions of Rome ponder these facts.

I am, yours obediently, H.

GIVING OR WORKING?

Dear Sir,—I hope "Work Among the Poorest" in your last issue will act as an inspiration to many to become personally acquainted with some whom they can help in the truest sense. The great need is work for all who are in any way able to do it. Giving should only be resorted to where work is impossible. How many rich people might turn wildernesses into fruitful fields by using their capital in paying for honest labour!

I trust that, in some well-organised way, it may be brought to pass that every Christian family in comfortable circumstances, and every Christian individual, shall find those whom they can be in touch with and to whom they can give of their wealth of love and sympathy. The world will believe in us when all class pride is destroyed by the Spirit of the Master, and his love fills our hearts so that we love our neighbour as ourselves.

Yours sincerely,

Eliz. Seaton.

WITH NAVVIES IN GERMANY.

Since our conference in September, we have been profiting by this fine autumn to carry the Gospel tidings to the hundreds of navvies at work on the new railway line, some hours' distant from us. These men, who come from all parts of Germany, from Bohemia and Italy, are so eager to obtain Bibles, New Testaments, and tracts, that we constantly run short of our supplies. As soon as our little carriage appears, it is surrounded by anxious faces, and German, Polish, Bohemian, and Italian Bibles, etc., are quickly disposed of. Enough cannot be said of the courteous demeanour of the officials superintending the work, who express their satisfaction that their men should be supplied with good literature, whilst the men themselves, without exception, show us their gratitude in every possible way.

Such a distribution among a medley of nationalities as this is a sight worth seeing. Here a Bavarian Roman Catholic reverently kisses the Bible he besought us to bring him at our last visit, the eyes of Poles and Bohemians glisten as they light upon the sacred volume in their own language, and the Italians are warm and hearty in the expression of their thanks. We are able at the same time to have short conversations, all the more earnest and pointed because they must be short with many of the recipients, and we pray and trust that this "sowing time," by spoken and printed word, may bear fruit in the great harvest day.

At the same time, our distribution of the Word of God among Italian navvies exclusively has reached such large dimensions that the grant allowed us from our friend, Mrs. Robertson, which used to extend over a year, has been expended in three months. Hardly a day passes without letters from Italians scattered all over Germany, Austria, Roumania, etc., and also from Italy: they have procured our address from their comrades, and send in touching appeals for Bibles. We despatch parcels of these, and of tracts, about twice or thrice a week, though, to our regret, we are not able to supply as many as we are asked for.

The correspondence with these men is a very interesting one; their letters are, with few exceptions, beautifully written, and extremely well expressed. "My heart prompts me to write to you," says one, "for several of my comrades and myself are most anxious to read the Holy Scriptures for ourselves, since we have come to the conclusion that our priests tell us many things which do not agree with the Gospel, and that is why we wish to study it ourselves." Another writes: "Last night, when visiting the quarters of the other Italian navvies, I found them all busy reading the Bibles you had sent them. I joined them, and soon found myself so interested by what I read that I begged one of them to give me a Bible to take away with me. However, no one would part with his, so I asked for your address, and now beg you to show the same favour to me as to my countrymen." Again another writes: "Oh pray send us as quickly as possible twenty-four Bibles. We shall soon be returning home, and want to carry them with us." May the readers of The Christian help us to pray for God's blessing on this sowing beside all waters. "Oh, what will the harvest be?"

CHRISTMAS CARDS.

A packet of these timely messengers of goodwill comes to us from Messrs. Raphael Tuck and Sons, the fine art publishers, of London, Paris, and New York. They are almost all of a very pleasing order, with excellent mottoes wedded to pictorial designs of a wonderful varied description. Some of the mottoes and verses embody the religious sentiment that we have come to associate with Christmas. The packets of "private autograph cards," with envelopes, will be a convenience to many. "A Year's Sunshine" calendar (3s. 6d. in box) gives twelve pretty and finely-coloured seasonable designs with practical quotations. "Our Armour for every Day" (1s. 6d.), is a pretty booklet with devotional texts and verses for a month, with chastely-coloured floral and other designs.

MESSRS. S. W. PARTRIDGE AND CO.

The Grand Chaco. By G. Manville Fenn. (5s.) Adventures in an unknown region on the mighty Amazon, in the course of which two boys dare and do wonderful things amongst wild beasts and wilder men. A thorough yet wholesome boys' book. Ailsa's Reaping. By Jennie Chappell. (3s. 6d.) The story of a girl's life, with many ups and downs, in which a great sacrifice for conscience sake is at length happily rewarded. One or two of the characters are finely conceived and boldly sketched. Nella; or, Not My Own. By Jessie Goldsmith Cooper. Another capital girls' book. She who has learned that she is "not her own" learns also in due time how good it is to be simply faithful in well doing. It is really an interesting book, (1s. 6d.) Punch. By A. C. Fryer. (6d.) The autobiography of a fox-terrier, written by one who loves dogs, and wishes to teach kindness to dumb animals.

WESLEYAN PUBLISHING OFFICE.

Five Brave Hearts. By Edith E. Rhodes (2s. 6d.). A good story for boys, with a Gospel tone and temperance purpose. Though there are no perilous adventures, there are dangers of another kind firmly faced and finally conquered. Fanny Wilson, by Friba (2s. 6d.). What an earnest Christian child can do to win and save the neglected and perishing, is here pleasantly told by one in full sympathy with such service, and possessing a practical acquaintance with life as it is lived in the poorest slums. Famous British Explorers, by Richard Rowe (3s. 6d.). Here we have the life story tersely told of Drake, Dampier, Anson, Captain Cook, Ross, Parry, Franklin, and men of that heroic stamp who have dared and done in bygone days. A book which the boys will prize. The Cracked Hearthstone (2s.) is a capital story by Rev. John M. Bamford. It tells how a home was broken up through want of mutual forbearance; but the runaway wife was wooed again, and a new hearthstone laid when she re-entered the house of her penitent husband. The story has wholesome lessons as well as entertaining features.

Some readable and attractive shilling story books, issued by Partridge & Co., are Grannie's Treasures, and how they Helped Her, by L. E. Tiddeman; Phil's Frolic, a story for boys, by F. Scarlett Potter; and Our Den, by E. M. Waterworth. Bright little books at sixpence are One Christmas, by Jennie Chappell, and Noel's Lesson, by Meta. The same firm has issued a popular edition (1s.) of Mrs. Oliphant's engrossing story, Cousin Mary.

The Biblical Illustrator: 2 Timothy, Titus, and Philemon.—The latest volume of this compilation, edited by Rev. J. S. Exell, M.A., deals at great length with portions of Scripture which are of special wealth from a homiletical point of view. A wide range of reading has been covered in collecting these thousands of outlines of discourses and expository notes. Preachers and teachers of limited resource will find this volume as valuable as the number which has gone before it in the same series. (7s. 6d. Nisbet.)

Lives that Speak. Messrs. Nisbet have added two more volumes to this series. The Marquis of Salisbury is a biographical sketch by Rev. J. J. Ellis. The pages trace, in a readable manner, political movements and events which are well in the minds of most. Ulric Zwingle, by Rev. Robert Wilkes Gosse, is a very useful outline of the life and work of the celebrated Swiss Reformer. Mr. Gosse well says of Zwingle: "Though in some respects we may not be able to approve his views, we cannot but admit that he accomplished a great work for his country and his people." (2s. 6d. each.)

The Christian's Influence, by Archdeacon Sinclair, is a worthy addition to the "Christian under Review" series. The actual conditions of modern life are kept well in mind, and counsels at once practical and spiritual are conveyed in a winning manner. The author takes no circumscribed view of things, as will be evident when we say that he speaks of personal influence in many relations, including the following: as man, gentleman, father, woman, mother, politician, master; also influence in society, on war, and in philanthropy. The chapters are divided into convenient sections. (2s. Nisbet.)

Hunted and Harried. By R. M. Ballantyne. (Nisbet. 2s. 6d.) A tale of the Scottish Covenanters told in the author's best style. We are right glad to find this ready pen used to such good purpose in telling afresh the heroic story of "men strong in the Lord" who, while "hunted like partridges on mountain and moor," witnessed to the last a good confession. In days when there is grave danger that loyalty to truth may be forgotten, it is well that our young people should be led to read and understand the endurance of men "of whom the world was not worthy."

Trophies from African Heathenism. By Robert Young. (3s. 6d. Hodder and Stoughton.) One who has made several very useful contributions to missionary literature, gives us in this attractive volume a series of sketches of members of the African race who have come under the power of the Gospel. Where he does not speak from personal knowledge, gained by visiting mission stations, he relies on information received from well-known workers. This gives the book a substantial value, which will not fail to be appreciated by the growing circle in which missions form a subject of serious study.

Popular Cyclopædia of Curative and Health Maxims, comprising about three thousand counsels, alphabetically arranged, regarding the cure of disease, the maintenance of health, and the increase of strength. By W. W. Hall, M.D. (3s. 6d. Simpkin, Marshall, and Co.) This American reprint is not a "domestic physician," nor indeed a doctor's book at all. Its object is to enable one to do without medicine by taking reasonable precautions, and living according to the laws of health. Though some of the counsels are essentially commonplace, there are many which all readers would do well to heed and obey.

The Right Road: A Handbook for Parents and Teachers. By John W. Kramer. (3s. 6d. Nisbet.) An excellent design admirably executed. The work is correctly described in the preface as "an elementary treatment of Christian morality," offering "persuasions that may be helpful in the training up of children." Grouped under three heads, the chapters deal with duty in various aspects and relations, to self, to others, and to God. Stories such as the young will easily appreciate point the lessons, which are disposed in sections that will well repay the perusal of those who superintend the upbringing of children.

The Future Tenses of the Blessed Life. By F. B. Meyer, B.A. This is a companion volume to the well-known "Present Tenses." The title would suggest meditations on the Christian's hope, but somehow or other the author brings in aspects of the present life of faith, and shows the relation of both to the love of God and the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. Eleven in number, the chapters are eminently practical, as the title of three of them will show: "He will do it" (1 Thess. v. 24); "Claiming and Reckoning" (Isai. ix. 7); and "What the Man can be" (Isai. xxxii. 2). The pages are in Mr. Meyer's well-known style, and are very encouraging and stimulating to devout minds. (1s. and 1s. 6d. Morgan and Scott.)

Thomas Shillitoe, Shoemaker and Minister. By Frances Anne Budge. (1s. Nisbet.) Let no one think there is anything very new in preaching to public-house companies and prison inmates. The Quaker minister whose story is sketched in these pages did both, abroad as well as at home, and likewise visited several of the crowned heads of Europe, speaking to them of national righteousness and personal religion. This was during the first half of the present century. Shillitoe also addressed King George III. of England, and had interviews with ecclesiastical dignitaries and authorities of various orders. He had much to endure for the sake of the Gospel, but was, as a rule, gladly heard by the common people. This story is full of deep interest, and is told with charming simplicity.

Short Stories.—Some wholesome and well-illustrated tales for youthful readers, issued by the Wesleyan Methodist Sunday-school Union, are: For John's Sake, and other stories, by Annie Frances Perram, faithful to life in showing the evils of indulgence in strong drink, and sound in counsels regarding total abstinence principles; Scaramouch, and other stories, by Annie M. Young, all of them well written and bright in incident; and Beyond the Boundary, by Jennie Perrett, a purposeful tale (all 1s. 6d. each). Still smaller books are: The Wonderful Half-crown, and other stories, by William J. Forster (1s.); That Odd Little Pair; or, Sayings and Doings of Molly and Larry, by Isabel Suart Robson (9d.); and Ned's Helper, and other temperance sketches, by Helen Briston (6d.).

The Inquisition and Confessional of the Present Century, by Rev. E. K. Elliott, of Worthing, is a pamphlet which should be widely circulated at the present time. Religious indifference greatly favours the encroachments of Rome under cover of a professed toleration. History demonstrates the hollowness of these pretensions, for though claiming freedom of action at the hands of others, the Papacy allows nothing of the kind to any over whom she has spiritual or temporal power. These pages briefly describe the Inquisition and its work in various countries, with special reference to discoveries in the prisons of the Inquisition at Rome, when they were entered after the Revolution in 1849. Pictures enforce some of the horrible details of cruelty by which Christians who bravely refused to acknowledge "the Church" were put under "discipline," thrown into dungeons, and done to death in misery and darkness. There are here and there evidences of glorious fortitude having been shown by martyrs for the pure faith of Christ. Information gathered from various sources shows that Rome is, of old, the persecutor of the saints of God. The archives at Rome showed that ecclesiastics in all lands sent political secrets to headquarters. There is no reason why they should not do the same now. They take an active part in politics, and have among their confessing "penitents" statesmen of all shades and degrees. This book also deals with the confessional. Those who assist in its circulation will perform a religious duty and deserve well of the country. (6d. Kensit.)

Preparation, a weekly journal for the Sunday-school teacher and Bible student, has many attractive features. Lessons for classes of various grades are developed at length, and many illustrative facts are given. (One penny. Haddon and Co.)

My Jack: A Story of Rescue, by Sydney Watson, is the first of a series of penny publications by The Thrill Stories Committee, Holmes Chapel, near Crewe. The production is inferior to some books of this class; but the matter is wholesome as well as thrilling.

A GERMAN BIBLE SCHOOL.

In Gütergotz, not far from Berlin, Pastor Jellinghaus is doing an excellent work in conducting during the winter months a Bible school for Christian men belonging to the working classes and the peasantry. During the seven years of its existence it has been attended by about fifty men of all ages, married and single, who, after about five months of study, return to their secular occupations, with which to combine evangelistic work during their leisure hours.

The arrangements for the reception of the students are of the most primitive kind; an empty cowshed is fitted up for them in the simplest manner, the men bringing their own beds with them, and a general store being accessible to all for the purpose of cooking their own food, to supply which those who are able to do so pay £1 a month.

The subjects of study, although comprising both the Old and New Testament, are very largely taken from the Epistles, such as Romans, Hebrews, and the Epistles of John and of Peter.

Pastor Jellinghaus—whose excellent book, "Die gegenwärtige völlige Heil in Christo" ("Complete Salvation") is highly appreciated among believers in Germany—is a fine type of the German theologian of the evangelical school. Modest and unassuming, he combines sound learning with strong Alliance principles and a loving heartedness seldom to be found in the State Church to which he outwardly belongs, and which enables him to reach the hand of fellowship to all who love the Lord Jesus Christ, of whatever denomination they may be. His genial nature and his devotion to his work make him well adapted to influence those attending his Bible school. He has turned out excellent evangelists, earnest and God-fearing men, thoroughly grounded in the Scriptures, and well able to hold Gospel meetings, Bible classes, Sunday-schools, &c., among the rural population, by whom they are greatly prized.

The good pastor generously opens his house to many a young man who is unable to pay even the modest sum required for his support at the school.

Anyone willing to aid this good work, or desiring of further details, will kindly communicate with Pastor Jellinghaus, Gütergotz, near Potsdam.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 20.—JUDGES IV.

These chapters of the Judges are full of encouragement to such as are discouraged by repeated failures. Their experience has been one long series of endeavours after a better life, interrupted and darkened by transgression and relapse. They have gone back to God so often with the same tale that they are almost ashamed to go any more. Let these take heart; his mercy endureth for ever. Their remorse, and yearning to be different, are a clear proof that He has not withdrawn his favour from them. Let them look again towards his holy temple (Jonah ii. 4). Mighty oppression like that of Jabin and Sisera, is a type of the vehement hatred of our spiritual foes, but it is the foil on which God displays the might of his deliverance.

How lamentable that Barak should have pinned his faith to a woman, instead of to the eternal God! If only he had said these words (8) to God, he might have achieved a more wonderful deliverance, and his rule established on a more settled basis. We must beware lest we imitate his fault, and trust more in those who are around us, than in the living God. There cannot be failure in our faith without our suffering in some way the results. Deborah's strength was evidently gained from prayer and faith. She was conscious of the presence and movement of the Spirit of God. "Is not the Lord gone out before thee?" (14) What comfort there is in this thought!

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 21.—JUDGES V.

In this magnificent ode we are taught to ascribe all glory in our successes to God. The people made themselves free-will offerings in the day of God's power; and it is only when we do so that the mighty power of God can work through human means (2). We do well to remember our low estate, to see the hole of the pit from whence we have been taken; to set our former low estate clearly forth, that the deliverance of God may be the more manifest. Do not forget the days of Jael, when the caravans ceased and the villages were unoccupied (6, R.V.). And far from the noise of war, where the water lies in the deep wells to be drawn, let us rehearse the righteous acts of Jehovah. Oh! when will men speak of the glorious majesty of our God with the enthusiasm that they now expend on the words or acts of some favourite leader!

The co-operation of God and man is clearly revealed throughout the Bible. We are his fellow-workers, fellow-helpers with the truth." It is well worth our notice that some of the strongest denunciations in the Bible are against those that do nothing. It is a sin not to do, not to come against mighty to the help of the Lord. "Curse ye Meroz." Oh! my soul, dost thou rightly fulfil all the opportunities of thy life? The virgins that slept without oil: the man that hid the talent: the nations that did it not to the least of the king's brethren; these are held up by Christ to the most terrible denunciations that his gentle lips could frame.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 22.—JUDGES VI.

Often enough have the hosts of Midianites visited Israel and left us very low, leaving no green thing in the field or vineyard. It is then that the Lord's voice is heard pleading within; reminding us that we have fallen, not by any failure on his part, but by our own iniquity. I brought out; I delivered; I drove them out: I said, but YE have not hearkened to my voice. The path of obedience is the only safe and prosperous path.

God sends angels of deliverance as well as prophets of remonstrance, and they come to the men who are in the winepress, and are least in their own eyes, as they meditate on the past mighty works of the Lord. Behold what a look of the Lord can do; it carries with it light and salvation (14). God always goes with those whom He sends, and though our foes be as swarms of locusts, they perish as one man, when smitten by the sword of the Lord and of Gideon. When faith is weak, God nurtures it by sign of wonder and by fire; and the peace of God is breathed into the heart. What a sweet title! Jehovah-shalom! The Lord is Peace. He sends Peace and He is Peace, like the calm of evening settling down upon the heart. Shall we have seen God face to face, we have no reason to fear man.

Before we can be delivered from Midian, there must be an honest dealing with the idolatry of evil in the inner life. The altar of Baal must be thrown down and replaced by the altar of God, and there must be the burnt-offering of entire surrender to his will. We are first tested in the less before being called to the greater. It was because Gideon dared for God as far as concerned his home and family that the Spirit of the Lord "clothed itself with Him" for wider service (34, R.V.).

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 23.—JUDGES VII.

This is one of the most searching chapters in the Old Testament. It is full of teaching to those amongst us who are full of their own plans and strength, and who can count on many great alliances to assist them. God will not give his glory to another, and He cannot give the Midianites into our hand so long as there is a likelihood of our laying claim to the results. Success in spiritual work must be denied us if it would tend to our vaunting ourselves. Hence it is that so many of God's most successful workers have had to pass through periods of humiliation at the river's brink.

Some are fearful and trembling, and God cannot use such. Others are too careful of their own ease, throwing themselves at full length to drink their fill. Only a few subordinate their selfish gratification to their duty, and catch the water up to their mouths whilst standing erect for any duty which may summon them. But at the best we are only as cakes of barley bread. There is nothing in us to make the tents of Midian collapse. It is only as God delivers Midian into our hands that any victory is possible.

The preparations made of Gideon were of the rudest description possible, and totally inadequate to account for the marvellous result. And yet the same God is ours!

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 24.—JUDGES VIII.

When we are doing God's work, and especially if we are successful in doing it, there will be always plenty of critics. Answer them kindly, or do not answer them at all. Your business is to do the biddings of Him who has sent you, and to finish his work. We may sometimes be physically faint and weary with the fight, and saddened by the criticism around us. But we must still pursue, confident that ere long we shall come again in peace.

Those were two striking sentences uttered by the captive kings, which we do well to ponder (18, 21). We who belong to the family of God should see to it that we resemble the children of a king, that there is a royalty in our bearing worthy of our origin. Our strength also depends on what we are in our character.

As the men of Israel spake to Gideon, we should speak to our Lord: Rule Thou over us, for Thou hast saved us. "Thou art worthy to take the book, for Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us." My soul, thou hast been saved out of the hand of thy foes, now enthrone the Lord, who has saved thee. When shall the love of Jesus so inspire and melt our hearts, that we shall gladly give to Him all the jewels of life?

The closing words of the chapter are bitter. They remind us of the way in which the butler treated Joseph, and we have treated the Lord.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 25.—JUDGES IX.

This record of anarchy and blood is a photograph of the unrest of the world for want of a true leader and prince. As all these incidents were leading towards the days of David and Solomon, so the great agony and sorrow of our times must portend the advent of the true king. It is when the kingdoms of the world are rent by tribulation and war that we may expect to see the reign of the Son of Man. "Lift up your heads, and rejoice, for your redemption draweth nigh."

In all the diabolical wickedness of the world we must trace the work of the rulers of the darkness of this world, and we must deeply pity the rank and file of men who are led by those who would serve their own purposes at their expense. Well may the Son of Man behold them as they are scattered abroad and pity them, and weep over their destruction, and seek to gather them as a hen gathers her chickens under her wing. Throughout these dreary records the purpose of God was moving forward (57). Nothing will pacify or save mankind till the King comes.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 26.—JUDGES X.

As an inspired commentary on this chapter, we should read Psa. cvi. 36-46. These last sentences are very pathetic, and well in accord with the sad record before us. "Many times did He deliver them, but they were rebellious in their counsel, and were brought low in their iniquity." There are times when God appears to leave us to reap as we have sown. It is as if He bade us get what help we might from the idols and the alliances which we had chosen: "I will save you no more, go and cry unto the gods which ye have chosen, let them save you."

This apparent refusal of help is only intended to bring us more utterly to our knees in self-abhorrence, humiliation, and prayer. It is at such times that we not only pray, but we put away the strange gods, and cast ourselves utterly and hopelessly at his feet. "We have sinned, do Thou unto us whatsoever seemeth good unto Thee." We should read also Hosea xiv., appropriating the prayer with which it begins; and then we shall hear the reply coming from those gracious lips, "I will heal their backslidings, I will love them freely, mine anger is turned away." How touching the thought that our miseries can grieve God, even when they are the result of sin. "His compassions fail not."

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 27.

The Apostles Turning to the Gentiles.

Acts xiv. 44—7.

Golden Text: Acts xiii. 47.

The Apostles are still in Antioch in Pisidia. This lesson opens on the Sabbath following that of the last lesson. The effect of Paul's sermon was remarkable (44). Without resorting to any other means than the preaching of the Gospel in the power of the Holy Ghost, nearly the whole city gather to hear. It is not another Gospel that is wanted to-day, but more of the power of the Spirit in preaching it.

Opposition (45).—If there is anything really good, Satan is certain to stir up opposition. If he lets the Church alone, it is to be feared that the Church is letting him alone. A zealous Church has always provoked persecution. The opposition was headed by the Jews. The bitterness of Jewish antipathy to the Gospel was as great in Asia Minor as it had been in Palestine. Modern converts from Judaism to Christianity have had to learn that the same bitterness exists still. Envy moved them. The same spirit led to the murder of Abel (1 Jno. iii. 12), and to the crucifixion of Jesus (Matt. xxvii. 18). The same spirit enters into the nursery, the school, the church, destroying peace and harmony, and leading to innumerable evils. Watch against the beginnings of this spirit, which finds in another's pleasure a reason for vexation and pain (Matt. xxiii. 13).

The effect of the opposition was not what the Jews intended. It did not silence the Apostles, but rather made them more bold (46). Threats cannot make dumb those whose mouths God opens. Yet their answer is calm, and free from anything like unholy passion. To give railing for railing, is to fail. We must not cease to love even those who need reproof. The Jews thus "judged" themselves. The Gospel rejects none who do not reject it. What the judgment of the last day will be, is determined by men's treatment of the Gospel now. None are outside the kingdom now, nor will be excluded then, who do not exclude themselves (see Jno. iii. 18-21.). The Apostles could justly turn to the Gentiles. Why should the Jews complain if that is taken from them, which they would not have?

Among the Gentiles the Gospel produced a different result. The believers were those "ordained to eternal life" (48). The Saviour was comforted by the assurance that if some rejected Him others would believe (see Jno. vi. 37, 39, 40). It is an abuse of this truth for any to suppose either that they can be saved without a willing acceptance of Christ, or lost without a deliberate and wilful rejection of Him.

Further opposition (50-52).—It may appear strange that "devout and honourable women" should take such a part in this persecution, But these were proselytes to the Jewish faith. It is necessary to distinguish between religion and true godliness. An unconverted person may be religious, but cannot be godly. "Shaking the dust off their feet" (51) was not an expression of contempt, but declared their sense of the guilt of those who had rejected the Gospel, and their own freedom from responsibility concerning them (Matt. x. 14, 15). Were the disciples in Antioch distressed and in despair because the Apostles had fled? Their joy was full (52), because they were full of the Holy Ghost.

Iconium, the modern Konieh, is about ninety miles to the south-east of Antioch, and at the time of the Apostles' visit was the chief city of Lycaonia. "The district of Lycaonia extends from the ridges of Mount Taurus and the borders of Cilicia on the south, to the Cappadocian hills on the north"; so that the Apostles were still in the same district when they fled still further south-eastwards to Derbe and Lystra (xiv. 6). In Iconium they had experience of immediate blessing (1), followed again by Jewish opposition (2), which was again met with persistent and bold effort (3). Division (4) was what the Lord had foretold (Luke xii. 51). The Gospel unites all who receive it, but it arms the world against it. The two sides exist among us to-day. On which side are we?

Folly of Opposition to Christ.—A swordfish has been known to dart at a ship in full sail with such a violence, as to pierce the solid timbers. With what result? The ship has sailed on as before, but the fish has been killed by the force of its own blow. Were not the Jews equally foolish?

Courage against opponents.—Referring to Luther's attacks upon the Papacy, some one said to him, "I marvel how you can be so merry: if the case were mine, it would go near to kill me." Luther answered, "Not the Pope nor all his shaven retinue can make me sad; for I know that they are Christ's enemies, therefore, I fight against him with joyful courage."

The following prayer, found in the desk of a schoolboy after he was dead, may be appropriate for our scholars:—"O, God! give me courage to fear none but Thee."

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Jubilee of the Church of England Sunday-school Institute will be held in May, 1893.

At the Church Association Conference the wider employment of Protestant vans and colporteurs was recommended as a check to sacerdotalism.

The Church of England Waifs and Strays Society has received an anonymous donation of £500 towards the proposed Emigration Farm Home at Walsham-le-Willows.

News has reached Bath of the death, on 5th inst., of Rev. Hayes Robinson, of St. German's, Blackheath, who died suddenly of heart disease at Bournemouth, where he was spending his honeymoon.

The Bishop of London stated last week that it is perfectly lawful for clergymen to have the communion table removed into body of church: a course suggested as a witness against the Ritualistic idea of "an altar."

Rev. T. E. Cleworth, Rector of Middleton, concluded a twelve days' mission in the parish of St. Edmund, Whalley Range, Manchester. The mission has been very successful, services being held daily to large and interested congregations.

On Saturday, in Kensington Town Hall, Bishop Smythies delivered an address on mission work in Central Africa, in which he described more particularly the work done at [illegible] and further all that had taken place in [illegible] British Government could not reasonably [illegible] that country.

The Protestant Churchmen's Alliance (Kilburn branch), opened last week its winter course of Church lectures at the St. Cuthbert's Mission-hall, and in spite of the thick fog there was a good attendance. The lecture was by Rev. William Joseph Smith, Vicar of St. John's, Kilburn, and the subject was "The Great Florentine Reformer."

Rev. J. E. Padfield, principal of the C.M.S. Training College at Masulipatam, who had already translated Paley's "Evidences of Christianity" and the "S.P.C.K. Commentary on the New Testament" into the Telugu language, has recently translated into the same language Rev. Wm. Odom's "Gospel Types and Shadows of the Old Testament."

An Eight-days' Mission has lately been held at Quarndon, a small village near Derby. The missioner was Rev. W. G. Halse, vicar of Holy Trinity, Bridlington Quay. The interest in the services never flagged, and one very pleasing feature was the kindly feeling shown by the Wesleyans, who, in addition to attending the services, closed their chapel on Sunday.

The Vicar of Wakefield, backed up by a strong committee, has taken the circus, the largest building in the city, and capable of holding 3000 people, for a mass meeting on Sunday evenings. The first service was held last Sunday, and there were present some 2000 persons. After reading the story of the Prodigal Son, the Archdeacon had the lights turned down, and entered upon a forceful and pointed address on the parable of the Prodigal Son, which was made all the more interesting and impressive by a number of views thrown upon the screen by a magic lantern.

Says The Record: "The Church Congress debate on 'Preaching' we have long striven to enforce, namely, that most graduate candidates for Holy Orders need some definite training in theology and in pastoral work before ordination. Such training is offered at Ridley Hall, Cambridge, and Wycliffe Hall, Oxford, but is very often beyond the means of those who most need it. We are glad, therefore, to learn that the Elland Society has recently resolved to employ part of its funds, or gifts specially given for that purpose."

At St. Margaret, Lothbury, the Golden lecturer, Prebendary Moore, has opened a series of discourses upon the book of Jeremiah. The first chapters of this book might almost have been included in the "Lamentations." The people were passing through so many troubles and sorrows that it was no wonder Jeremiah exclaimed, "Thou hast stricken them." But the chastening did not in this case bring forth the fruit God desired. We each have many lessons to learn from the words of Jeremiah. In the world we are to have tribulation, but it is for a definite purpose. The Christian should have nothing to do with the fatalism of the world. Let us remember that as precious metals are tried by fire, so God in his love allows affliction to test the purity of the aims of his children. God is supreme, and He will in due time deliver the souls of those who trust and love his will. Only we must in all our troubles and adversities seek to hold communion with Him who chasteneth every soul which He receiveth.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Mr. Arthur Cook, late of the Evangelisation Society, has accepted the pastorate at Tiptree.

Rev. Herbert J. Crouch has just celebrated the tenth anniversary of his settlement at Hersham.

Rev. W. G. Percival, of Uppermill, Huddersfield, has accepted an invitation to the Lozells Chapel, Birmingham.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has concluded a second special mission at Clifton Church, Peckham. His next mission will be at Walthamstow.

Rev. Samuel Pearson, who for the past eleven years has been minister at Lightcliffe, near Halifax, has accepted the pastorate at Tynemouth.

The anniversary of Christ Church, Harlesden, was recently observed, Revs. J. Anderson, E. Theodore Hitchens, and J. B. Figgis, M.A., being the special preachers.

Rev. J. F. Roberts has taken charge of a mission parish which embraces all New Oklahoma, 50 by 125 miles, he being the only Congregational minister on this field at present.

An interesting service was held in Milton Church, Gravesend, on Thursday week, to bid farewell to Miss Crissy Williams, who leaves England on November 25 by the Australia for mission work in China.

Four members of Trinity Congregational Church Choir, Walthamstow, spend the greater part of every Sunday afternoon in the homes of persons who, through sickness or age, are unable to attend public worship.

The anniversary services of the Stanley Congregational Church, Green Lane, Liverpool, have just been held, the pastor, Rev. G. Lord, completing twenty-seven years' service. The reports showed encouraging tokens of progress.

At the autumnal meetings of the Huddersfield Yorkshire Congregational Union, held at Cleckheaton on Thursday, Mr. Sykes (the treasurer) reported that, besides contributing largely to the country funds, the district had found £669 for the Yorkshire aggressive movement.

At the fortieth annual meeting of the Woolwich Church, Rev. A. J. Viner's earnest and encouraging words were followed by addresses from speakers representing the various organisations of the church, all of which had been maintained in an efficient and healthy condition.

As illustrating the growth of free churches in the rising town of Horwich, near Bolton, Rev. W. J. Houlgate (Congregationalist) has lately welcomed five new ministers who have settled in the town and district—viz., two Congregationalists, one Baptist, and two Methodists (Primitive and Free), the three latter of whom represent the formation of entirely new churches.

The P.S.A. class connected with Handsworth Church has just been visited by Rev. T. Townsend, of Shrewsbury. Large congregations assembled on five successive evenings to hear addresses at once bright and impressive, simple and sympathetic. The members of the church and congregation showed deep interest in the services; and a revival of the spiritual life in some seemed to manifest itself.

We are informed that Rev. Wm. Marshall has not accepted the pastorate of the Church at Forest Hill, as he does not feel that his health is sufficiently restored to justify him in taking a permanent charge, but he has consented to occupy the pulpit and fulfil pastoral duties for a time at Queen's-road Church, Forest Hill, leaving the future open and undetermined. He began his ministry last Sunday with much acceptance.

At the autumnal meetings of the North Bucks Union Rev. F. W. Clarkson, B.A., delivered an address on "The importance and influence of the work of village churches, and the claims they had on the generous support of the wealthier churches in towns and cities." At the public meeting addresses were delivered by Rev. D. A. Davies on "The relation of the voluntary principle to spiritual life and growth," and by Mr. J. G. Gailby on "The relation of the voluntary principle to religious work."

BAPTIST.

Rev. F. C. Morris has been recognised as pastor at Crown Lane, Maldon.

A branch of the Y.P.S.C.E. has been formed at Warwick-street, Leamington.

Rev. C. A. Dunn, of Blockley, has been called to work at Nassau, in the Bahamas.

A good missionary conference has just been held at Aberystwith, when Mr. A. H. Baynes gave an address on India.

Mr. G. A. Ambrose, of the Pastor's College, has accepted an invitation to the pastorate of the First Baptist Church, Wantage, Berks.

At Alnwick on Sunday, interesting services were held in connection with the settlement of Mr. W. W. Wilks, of the Pastor's College.

The tenth anniversary of the work at St. Ann's-road, Brixton, has just been observed, the report showing prosperity in the various branches of the work.

A special feature of the work at Chipping Norton has lately been the special services held by the pastor, Rev. G. W. Davidson, among the young people.

Rev. T. H. Cousins has been addressing the students of the Brighton Grove College on training institutes for the natives of the Congo and other African regions.

Lord Kinnaird presided the other night over a valedictory meeting at the Lewisham-road Baptist Church, to bid Godspeed to Miss Gray, who is leaving England shortly to take joint charge of Benares Hospital in connection with the Zenana and Bible Medical Mission of India.

The church and congregation worshipping at the Royal Public Rooms, Exeter, held on Wednesday week a very encouraging meeting, when representatives of the several organisations referred to the work carried on. The pastor, Rev. W. Julyan, has just entered on his fourth year's ministry here.

A farewell meeting was held on Thursday week at the Broad-street Chapel, Nottingham, on the departure for the Indian mission field of Mr. G. S. Wilkins, the youngest son of the late Mr. Wilkins, of Derby, who has been a student of the Baptist College at Nottingham during the past four years, and has recently been accepted by the Baptist Missionary Society. He sails this week for India, where he will work in connection with the Orissa Mission.

Uxbridge-road Tabernacle, the new building in connection with the work of Pastor F. B. Monti, in Bloemfontein-road, Shepherd's Bush, was opened on Sunday week with much encouragement, the place being crowded afternoon and evening. On Tuesday, 8th, the opening tea and public meeting was held, Mr. John Short presiding, and Revs. G. D. Hooper, W. H. Broad, J. Stenlake, and F. B. Monti taking part. The secretary reported good progress during the past year. The present iron building is intended to do duty until funds warrant the erection of a permanent structure.

METHODIST.

A new Wesleyan Garrison Church has been opened at Chatham.

The German Wesleyan Church in Commercial-road East has just been re-opened with interesting services.

Rev. Thos. Waugh has been conducting a series of special evangelistic services at Dene Side, Yarmouth, with encouraging results.

Interesting services have been held in Bradford in connection with the return of Rev. E. H. Sugden, who has done good work in Australia.

Enthusiastic meetings have been held in Birmingham in connection with the Wesleyan Mission, which is now making remarkable progress.

Rev. B. Senior preached to young men on Sunday evening in New Surrey Chapel, his subject being "600,000 Young Men in London outside the Churches: How can we save them?"

A series of "Services for the People," has been commenced at West Parade Wesleyan Chapel, Wakefield. It is intended that these meetings shall be of the "fireside" character, with plenty of singing, a short address.

Rev. J. Bailey has commenced a successful series of services on Sunday afternoons in the Ramsgate Amphitheatre. Some 1500 persons attended week after week. The good effect is felt at Queen-street Chapel, where the Sunday evening services are crowded.

Rev. Thomas Champness has issued a cartoon, designed by himself, and intended for the use of children. It represents the interior of a railway station called Decision Station. Two trains are in the station, one representing Christianity and Temperance, and the other drunkenness, gambling, and other popular vices. Men, women, and children are represented getting into both trains, some willingly, others reluctantly. The cartoon is a very striking one, and will be found most helpful and useful in training children. The price is threepence a dozen, or one shilling and threepence per hundred, post free, from Mr. Champness, Rochdale.

The Foreign Secretary, Lord Rosebery, has now in hand a correspondence with the Madrid Government respecting the action of the Spanish Governor of Fernando Po, who has issued a decree suddenly closing the Protestant mission day-schools on that West African island. For some years the teachers and missionaries have been treated with fairness, and the fanatical priests of the Romish Church have not been allowed to carry too far their intrigues against the Methodists. The Missionary Committee, whilst carefully avoiding any course which would give cause for fair complaint, will not allow their just rights under the Spanish Constitution to be taken away without respectfully and firmly maintaining their lawful position.

PRESBYTERIAN.

A new church is about to be opened at Newington, Hull.

Special services have been held at Lewes by Revs. D. Thain Davidson, J. B. Figgis, and others.

The United Fellowship Associations of London held the annual meeting on Tuesday week in Trinity Church, Clapham.

Since Mr. Wilson commenced work at Oxenden Church, Haverstock Hill, many encouraging tokens of revival have been granted.

At the anniversary of Market-place Church, Whitehaven (Rev. M. Young), it was stated that the Bible-class is the largest in England.

Representatives from various Presbyterian churches have forwarded a memorial to the Foreign Office viewing with serious apprehension even the possibility of the British withdrawal from Uganda.

At a conference of the Northern Presbyteries of Berwick, Northumberland, Newcastle, and Darlington, held last week in Jesmond Church, Newcastle, Rev. W. Stuart, of Wallsend, read a paper on "Our Attitude Towards the Higher Criticism."

The Week of Prayer and Self-Denial, which commences on the 24th inst., is being heartily taken up. About 20,000 envelopes are being distributed throughout the congregations, applications for them having exceeded the most sanguine expectations.

The delegates to the recent Pan-Presbyterian Council represented seventy-one branches of the Presbyterian Church, 23,500 ministers, 120,000 elders, 70,000 managers and deacons, 25,700 Sabbath schools, 405,000 teachers, 3,020,000 Sabbath scholars, and considerably over 4,000,000 communicants.

It is announced that two S.S. Conferences will be held during the winter, one on December 2 in Highbury Church, and the second in February in the West End. The former will be opened by Dr. Pentecost, and the subject will be the comparative want of success in Sunday-school work through the failure to retain the young people in large numbers.

Rev. Dr. Pentecost has, we hear, been unanimously elected as Dr. Fraser's successor at Marylebone Presbyterian Church. Inasmuch as he is not a minister of the Presbyterian Church, the call cannot at present be formally addressed to him; but should he indicate his willingness, the difficulty would be speedily removed. All interested in the Lord's work in Marylebone must pray and hope that this result may be arrived at.

Speaking as to the attitude of the Church towards Social movements, Rev. J. Reid Howatt maintains that the warmest sympathy should be shown, but adds: "When the Church departs from its mandate to preach the Gospel for the sake of attending to the material machinery by which even the most desirable reforms must be brought about, then, instead of being a source of strength to men, it will become a weakness, an irritation, and cause of strife only."

SALVATION ARMY.

A new citadel has just been opened in Rochdale.

The Salvation Army Shelter established less than two years ago in Bradford is doing splendid work.

Commissioner Tucker gave last week in St. James', Marylebone, some account of the operations of the social scheme.

The Union Signal states that Mrs. Booth-Clibborn has been nominated by General Booth as his successor in command of the Army.

One hundred and ninety-five men are now busily engaged at Hanbury-street Elevator, being one hundred more than last year this time.

The General has made arrangements to visit Sheffield, Manchester, Weymouth, and Bristol. At the latter place an influential committee has been formed for the promotion of the Social Scheme.

The Committee of Inquiry into the administration of the Social Scheme have continued their labours, deprived, however, of the assistance of Mr. Sydney Buxton, owing to the death of his wife. On Saturday three members of the committee visited and inspected the farm colony.

An appeal was issued last week by General Booth to the friends and supporters of Darkest England, claiming that marvellous measure of success has been achieved. He has expended about £185,000 in various ways, and has only received £120,000, so that he is in debt to the extent of £65,000, which must be raised immediately, otherwise he will be obliged to dispose of some of the land and buildings he has acquired.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Great Berkhamsted, on 8th inst., Mrs. George Thompson, wife of a former City Missionary, and one who laboured many years in the Lord's work among villages. His residence in Clapham-road, on 3rd inst., Mr. J. T. O., aged seventy-four, well known at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, and a brother of the late William Olney.—At Liverpool, on 6th inst., Mr. T. W. Christie, F.R.C.S., for forty a labourer in the Gospel.—At Norwich, Alderman R. R. aged sixty-seven, an active preacher and worker.—At Kempton, on 3rd inst., aged seventy, Rev. W. Bett, retired minister.—At Northampton, Mr. James Ella, deacon, and very active Christian worker.—At Widnes, 7th inst., Rev. W. Pritchard, who entered the Methodist ministry in 1859.—At Pembroke, Mr. J. Paxon, a worker sixty-five years as a local preacher.—At Portadown, John Tate, a well known worker and author.—At Devon, on 4th inst., Mrs. Kirk, aged forty-one, wife of Rev. Kirk, a busy and loving helper of many.—At Ellbridge, Cornwall, William Nauscawen, a humble but gifted Christian preacher for over fifty years.—At Middleton-by-Youlgrave, Rev. J. Buxton, a promising young minister.—At St. John's Chapel, Weardale, Mr. Joshua Dawson, for many years a successful evangelist.—At Hexham, Mr. John Ridley, a helper of many good works.

BRIGHTON MEDICAL MISSION.—A sale of work for the Brighton Medical Mission was held last week in Brighton. This annual sale brings before the public a truly Christ-like work carried on amidst the sick and suffering poor of Brighton. It is done quietly and unobtrusively that the mission that often lacks funds. The mission hall is situated at 100, Edward-street, which is one of the poorest districts in the town.

CADBURY'S COCOA

ABSOLUTELY PURE, therefore BEST.

The late editor of the Sanitary Review, writing on "The Consumption of Cocoa," warns the public against the use of foreign cocoas containing alkali, and makes the following allusion to the firm of CADBURY BROTHERS:—"It is the aim and practice of this famous firm to send out cocoa absolutely pure, of the highest quality which art will permit."

"The typical cocoa of English manufacture, absolutely pure."—The Analyst.

"The name Cadbury on any packet of cocoa is a guarantee of purity."—Medical Annual.

NO CHEMICALS USED (AS IN THE SO-CALLED PURE FOREIGN COCOAS).

DONATIONS RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1892.

⁂ Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

⁂ Will donors oblige by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

⁂ Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank": this will effectually prevent loss.

"The Children's Bread."

Dear Friends and Fellow-Workers,

Will you help the cause of Christ's Little Ones by sharing to some extent in my well-nigh crushing burdens?

Nearly 5,000 Orphan and Waif Children to-day in the Homes under my care look to me for food and maintenance. These figures are easily written, but hardly anyone outside can realise their weighty import.

Through God's goodness and His people's gifts, all the wants of my children have been hitherto supplied; but now the funds at my disposal are quite exhausted, and I am sorely in need of immediate help.

Meanwhile, my doors still stand open to all the world; every week from 40 to 60 destitute little strangers take their places among my rescued sons and daughters, and the growing volume of their needs can only be met by corresponding self-sacrifice and sympathy on the part of the Lord's servants

I am now compelled afresh to lay these heavy burdens at the feet of our Master, Christ, and of His servants everywhere; and though my children's necessities are pressingly urgent, I cannot doubt but that the response to their cry through me will be alike prompt and generous.

Our winter's work is growingly imperious in its demands. I cannot, I dare not, close my doors to the timorous knock of a single destitute child; and even beyond the call of the children there arises a wider plaint from thousands of East-End dwellings where the hearth is fireless and the cupboard is bare. Devoted Christian ladies living in our Deaconess House and labouring among the poorest will gladly carry your gifts of love to those whose lives are so cheerless and so wretched.

Who amidst the November fogs will send through me the sunshine of Christian beneficence into the hearts and lives of homeless Little Children and of the thousands beyond them who are needy and suffering?

Who will respond quickly? £30 will give 1,000 of my children food for a single day, or £150 will do the same for all my family; while £3 will spread the table three times for 100 of my Little Waifs. Any gift, however small, will be gratefully acknowledged by our Treasurer, Mr. William Fowler, or by the undersigned.

Ever your faithful fellow-worker in Christ's service among His Little Ones,

THOS. J. BARNARDO.

MR. DAVID RAE has been holding evangelistic meetings with great power at Ballymena, of which we hope to say more in our next.

MR. HERMAN WARSZAWIAK.—Every one will be pleased to hear that the wife of this Jewish evangelist to his own people has been allowed to rejoin him. He came from New York to meet her in London. We regret to say, however, that the two children have been detained in Poland, and not allowed to accompany their mother. Mr. and Mrs. Warszawiak are now in Edinburgh, and will proceed to New York at the end of the month.

Appeals.

The Female Mission to the Fallen, which employs twenty-one female agents to work among the sad sisters of the streets, visiting them in their houses and in hospitals, etc., and seeking to awaken a sense of sin and win them to the Saviour, is in urgent need of help. Communications should be made to the secretary, Mr. Maddison, 32, Charing-cross, S.W.

"Macready" Seaside House.—A furnished house has been offered rent free at Hastings for five years. If another friend would supply the funds for the initiatory expenses and the maintenance of this place of rest, there need be no delay in opening. The Director of the Theatrical Mission is Rev. Courthope Todd, Macready House, Covent Garden, W.C.

Reading for Ragged Youths.—The director of the North-East London Gospel Mission would be grateful for any parcels of back numbers of pictorial magazines and periodicals for the use of the ragged youths and match-factory girls attending the different institutes of the Mission; also for the youths' reading-room at Lancing-on-Sea, about to be opened by the Mission. They may be addressed to W. B. Moses, Somerset Hall, 205, Devons-road, Bow Common, E.

Poor Jews of East London.—Mr. D. Oppenheim, of the London City Mission, appeals to friends of Israel on behalf of the starving Jews of the East End. "We are," he says, "daily visited by resident and refugee Jews, asking for food. We have started our free breakfasts, teas, and are giving away food and shelter tickets. It is very hard to speak to starving people about the love of Christ without being able to alleviate their sufferings." Address, 119, Leman-street, Whitechapel.

Pontemoile Mission.—Having just visited the Undenominational Christian Mission and Ragged Schools, Pontymoile, Pontypool, South Wales, I can with great pleasure bear testimony to the good work being done by our brother, Mr. T. M. Wintle, and his workers in this portion of the Welsh principality. Many souls are being won to Christ through their agency, and mission halls springing up all around in many dark and benighted places. To carry on and extend this work about £300 will be required before the year closes. Who will come to the help of the Lord in this matter? Our brother Wintle is far from well, and the burden lies heavy on his heart. Any donations sent to him at the above address, or to the Christian, will, I know, be gratefully acknowledged, and enable him to go forward in the good work.—George Hughes Cardiff, Nov. 13, 1892. [I have the warmest sympathy with this work. Mr. Wintle has to go to his roll-turning at 1.30 on Monday morning, after a laborious mission work on Sunday. A splendid work depends on the brittle thread of his delicate health. R. C. Morgan.]

THE FORTY-FIRST SERIES OF CASES.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CHRONIC PNEUMONIA AND INCIPIENT PHTHISIS.

Miss M. B., a young lady residing in Ireland (to whom I will privately refer, but who says, "Circumstances make it most undesirable that my name should be published"), became a patient of mine in October last year. Severe pains in both lungs had troubled her for more than two years, sometimes very acute with severe cough and hectic flushes, and gradual loss of strength. No remedy seemed to produce any permanent result.

"I saw your advertisement (she says) in the Irish Christian Advocate. I will answer the questions of your book and try your famous medicine."

A month after this she wrote again, stating she was much better. The acute pains had subsided, and she had gained strength.

I heard from her lately. She says:—"Two large bottles of your medicine completely cured me. I have continued well, and am stronger than I have ever been before. I have recommended it to several of my friends who have benefited much, and shall be most happy to recommend it wherever I can. I do hope that my testimonial, even without my name, may be of some use."

PLAISTERS.

If people knew more of the advantage of healing by means of Plaisters there would be less suffering. A really good Plaister is almost a complete Medicine Chest, but a common one is worse than useless. The best is

DR. SETH PYNAR'S

CORRUGATED AMERICAN PINE PLAISTER.

It warms and comforts the Chest and cures Colds, Bronchitis, Asthma, Difficulty of Breathing. For Back-ache, Rheumatism, Lumbago, Sciatica, Sprains and Twists, it is better than anything else. It relieves Wind, Indigestion, Heartburn, and Sickness. It invigorates and stimulates the entire system. Try it for Aches, Pains, and Weakness.

Any Chemist can supply Dr. Pynar's Plaister for 9d., or Lawrence & Co., Rhyl, will send one post free to any address on receipt of 10 stamps. Do not buy any other.

A DILEMMA.

DEAR FRIENDS,

The pressure upon me increases daily. From streets and alleys, tramps' kitchens and casual wards, famishing, tempted, despairing lads come to our door. They stretch out their hands to me for shelter and help.

I have lately had boys sleeping on the floor here—for the first time in my 22 years' experience. What am I to do? I must either secure extra sleeping space or close our doors against all applicants. Hitherto we have always been able to say we were Open Day and Night to every really homeless lad. I pray God I may never have to say No Room to one desolate street lad.

I can obtain sleeping room for 100 more boys, and with our present organisation we can deal with them easily—if only the rent, cost of beds', &c., maintenance till the spring, and expenses of emigration to Canada are forthcoming.

I have not a penny to spare for this purpose. It is with much difficulty that I am able to provide for the three large families already in my care. But it seems so very sad that a precious young life should be ruined for want of a little timely aid, that I do most earnestly and yearningly plead for help to save the lads.

To keep an Open Door, Day and Night, and carry on this work till the end of the year, I need £2,000. Who will pay the extra rent? Who will provide the beds? Who will find food for a day, for one meal to all—even for a single meal to one waif?

£100 will send ten boys away from London slums to a bright future in Canada. £50 will keep eight street lads in our Home right through the bitter winter. £10 will send one boy to Canada. £6 10s. will maintain a street-arab here till the spring. £1 will give one hundred a hot dinner. 10s. will give sixty a good breakfast.

Will you help me in my busy, trying, but happy labours here? I never felt more than I do now that it is God's work, and His presence and power are with us.

THE BOYS' HOME,
95, SOUTHWARK STREET, LONDON, S.E.

Yours faithfully,
J. W. C. FEGAN.

SALVATION ARMY — "LIGHTS" — SAFETY MATCHES.

IN DARKEST ENGLAND."

These Matches are manufactured under perfectly healthy conditions, and entirely without the POISONOUS PHOSPHORUS which causes NECROSIS, or the terrible disease known as "PHOSSY JAW." Higher wages are paid to the employees—25 PER CENT. AT LEAST, in one department—than by any firm in the trade.

THE STAR says: "Darkest England Matches bring brightness to sweated workers and scotch the Phosphor Fiend."

If you cannot obtain them of your local tradesman, send a postcard for name of nearest shopkeeper and copy of "An Anti-Phossy Jaw Blast," by a Chemical Scientist, which will be sent FREE to all readers of THE CHRISTIAN on application to Commissioner CADMAN, 101, Queen Victoria-street.

Watson Smith, Esq., F.I.C., F.C.S., Lecturer in Chemical Technology, writes: "The sticks or stems of Salvation Army Matches BURN LIKE WAX."

SPECIAL OFFER FOR MISSIONARIES FOR 1893. Have you a friend a Missionary? If so, encourage him in his work by sending him monthly a copy of "The Review of the Churches." 10,000 RUGS GIVEN AWAY

This Phenomenal Offer is made to the Readers of this Journal only.

On receipt of this advertisement, accompanied by Postal Order for 6s. or 74 stamps, we will forward DIRECT FROM OUR LOOMS to your address, one of our genuine Seamless Woven Reversible Carpets, suitable for Drawing-room, Dining-room, Bedroom, &c., handsomely bordered and woven in 30 different patterns and art colourings to suit all requirements, and LARGE ENOUGH TO COVER ANY ORDINARY-SIZED ROOM. These Carpets are manufactured from a material equal in wear to wool, and are undoubtedly the cheapest in the world.

With every Carpet we shall absolutely give away a very handsome Rug to match, or we will send 2 Carpets and 2 Rugs for 10/6. Money willingly returned if not satisfied.

The Queen says: "Decidedly stouter and handsomer than any of the kind, the price being the astounding part of the matter." School Mistress: "For style, durability and cheapness, they cannot be beaten." Penny Illustrated Paper: "Manufactured in every variety of colour, and is one of the most surprising bargains I have seen." Church Bells: "Truly wonderful value." Sala's Journal: "Unequalled for cheapness combined with durability and prettiness."

Thousands of Testimonials similar to the following, and Repeat Orders, have been received from our customers:—

166, Crown Street, Aberdeen.

"Gentlemen.—The two Carpets and Rugs to match you sent us two years ago have given every satisfaction, and are still in use.—Yours faithfully, "ALEX. MALCOLM."

This offer is made to the readers of this paper only, and may not be repeated. All orders despatched same day as received. Cheques and Postal Orders to be crossed "Union Bank," and made payable to J. HARGREAVES, Secretary. [Estd. 1872.] ADDRESS—

What is a bigot? Bailey replies that a bigot is "a zealot," and a zealot is "a great stickler or party man, and principally in matters of religion." What is bigotry? The same authority describes it as "superstition; hypocrisy; a fond and obstinate adhering to man's own opinions and humours." We fear there are few of us who are altogether free from this uncomely quality. "But if the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead" is able to deliver us from it.

A few years ago a famous brewery was turned into a joint-stock company. Crowds of people rushed forward to become sharers in a business whose profits are associated with the temporal and spiritual ruin of tens of thousands of men and women. The ordinary shares of £100 went up to £150, so great was the competition. They were quoted a few days ago at £18 to £20! There has only been one dividend paid, and that was three years ago. They that "sow the wind" often reap the whirlwind."

A judgment which has just been delivered in the Ecclesiastical Court of Appeal of the Church of Ireland is one which all lovers of purity of worship will rejoice over. The appeal was brought by Colonel Fox Grant, against the decision of the Diocesan Court some months ago, which rejected his petition to have a conspicuous brass cross which stands upon a structure between the wall and the communion table in St. Bartholomew's Church, Dublin, to be declared illegal under the statutes and canons of the Irish Church. The Court was composed of the Lord Primate, the Bishops of Derry and Cashel, and four of Her Majesty's Judges, and although it was divided in its judgment, the Lord Primate and the Bishop of Derry being opposed to the finding of the majority, there can be no doubt that a signal victory has been won by those who are jealous to maintain that the teaching of Holy Scripture, without the aid of Ritualistic ornament, is the true and only ground upon which the doctrine of the Church of Ireland is based.

In the decision which was delivered by Mr. Justice Holmes a precedent has been laid down which will control all similar cases in future, and it will now be impossible for any Romanising cleric in the independent Episcopal Church of Ireland to introduce or maintain any innovation of the kind under notice. Whilst we on this side of the Channel continue to deplore the inroads which Romish doctrines, through a too frequently unrestrained clergy, are making in our midst, we cannot but feel thankful that a check to such practices has been administered in Ireland, through the action of Colonel Fox Grant, who is entitled to the gratitude of all adherents of evangelical truth.

The deplorable railway accident at Thirsk will not be without some good result if it should be the means of directing the public attention to a return by the Board of Trade in regard to the hours of signalmen and others concerned in the running of trains. It is a significant fact that on the lines of the North-Eastern Railway Company during a month 296 signalmen were on duty for more than twelve hours at a time; some others for seventeen or eighteen hours at a stretch. As regards some other companies matters were worse. This question is of vital importance to the public safety, but even as a matter of common humanity it is desirable that there should be restrictions on this practice of keeping men at continuous work beyond a reasonable time.

In an address to the clergy of his diocese, the Bishop of Durham has commented strongly on the need for social reforms. Perhaps, however, the most noteworthy portion of the address was in the direction of pointing out the abundant scope there is for private efforts to secure a simpler type of living, and to bring employers more into touch with their workpeople:—

> The largest businesses are falling more and more into the hands of joint-stock companies, which already engross one-third of the commerce of England. Shares in great companies are regarded as investments merely, without any duties of proprietorship.

The Bishop touched in a powerful manner upon other perplexing social questions. Here are a few terse and wise counsels:—

> In schemes of reform the family has too often been forgotten. Legislative changes have tended to weaken the sense of home responsibility. Many popular institutions break up the fellowship of the hearth. It is in the family that the future of a people is shaped. Each true home is a kingdom, a school, a sanctuary.
> We should not seek to equalise material riches, but to hallow large means by the sense of large responsibility; not to palliate the effects of poverty, but to remove the causes of it; not to dispense with strenuous and even painful effort, but to provide that labour in every form may be made the discipline of noble character.
> There are classes who are still children, and in their case the Government must not shrink from discipline. It cannot rightly leave uncorrected and unrestrained masses of men whose low type of life spreads corruption. It treats attempted suicide as a crime; it ought to treat "the slow suicide of idleness" as a crime no less. Labour refuges and labour colonies, both at home and abroad, may be of good service. The experiments in Holland and Germany give warnings and encouragement.

Discussion of such subjects is calculated to educate public opinion as well as to stir the Christian conscience. Speaking on war, the Bishop asked his hearers to cherish the hope of concluding a general arbitration treaty with America, for the stable friendship of the English-speaking people would go far to ensure the peace of the world. He added:—

> It is said that the discipline which comes through military service, and the sacrifices which are required for a campaign, bring vigour to nations not unworthy of the price, and that the sufferings of war are preferable to the torpor of cowardly and selfish indulgence. But torpor is not peace. Peace calls for sacrifices as great as war, and offers fields for equal heroism. Peace demands courage of body and soul for the accomplishment of its works, and kindles enthusiasm by the prospect of new victories. It was said, again, that arbitration may miscarry; but it was enough to reply that we have no security that an appeal to arms will establish a just claim. There is, indeed, no more reason to suppose that right as right will triumph in war than in a wager of battle.

These also are words of palpable truth and soberness. It is a sad fact, mentioned by the Bishop: "We pray for victory, not for the victory of righteousness!"

The news that a new gambling centre is springing into existence will come with surprise to those who are not careful to remember that moral weeds are native to the soil of the human heart. Rev. R. Doyle, Rector of Wynberg, Cape Town, unwillingly detained in the London Dock from his homeward voyage, put his time to excellent account, by drawing attention to matters that have come under his personal observation at Aix-les-Bains occasionally during the past ten years. He says the baths are nowhere in comparison with the gambling tables. These gambling institutions dominate and control everything during the season. Out of the 25,000 visitors only a very small proportion come to take the course of baths. Mr. Doyle's letter to The Times is a strong word of warning regarding an evil which has silently insinuated itself in a quarter much frequented by English visitors.

"A Lancashire Newspaper Proprietor," in last Friday's Times, suggested an effective method of dealing with the betting mania. The Telegraph Department caters for and fosters the vice; in fact, the vice lives and flourishes through the rapid transmission of exciting details of racing arrangements and events. Let Parliament declare that betting intelligence shall be excluded from transmission by telegraph, as bad language, slander, etc., are already excluded, and a fatal blow will be struck at this gigantic evil:—

> It is the telegraphic flash of the latest odds to newspapers, betting clubs, bookmakers, public-houses, political and other clubs, and newsrooms throughout the country that excites and inflames votaries of the Turf, and imparts zest to the betting game. The Legislature holds the key, and can lock the door of supply, whether telegraphic or telephonic.
> A Parliament virtuous enough to wash the hands of the Government from its inciting and stimulating complicity with the betting mania would be strong to suppress whatever else might remain of the evil. Therefore, the efforts of religious leaders should be concentrated upon Parliament prohibiting the transmission of betting news. The moral effect of such a decision by the Legislature would have incalculable influence for good upon the nation.

This mania has disastrous effects upon society at large, and messages in its service assuredly deserve classification with such as are morally impure and socially dangerous. Let there be no delay in acting, by petition and otherwise, upon the very practical suggestion thus put forward.

A friendly pen draws attention in The Times to a new development of the hostile spirit against Europeans which exists in the province of Hunan, China. The very title of the article, "The Resurrection of Chau Han," serves to show how important the author considers impending events. That there is reason for the warning note will be admitted, when it is remembered that this individual was the author and disseminator of the obscene literature directed against Europeans which led to the outrages in the Yangtse Valley last year. Circumstances somewhat favourable to the hostile policy have transpired, and with them its bold and unscrupulous agent has again come to the front. That he has a large following and considerable power may be seen when it is remembered that the united diplomatic representatives of the chief Powers in the world cannot secure his arrest and punishment. It is said that his reappearance has given new life to the persecution of British missionaries, and that the attack upon Mr. and Mrs. Polhill-Turner recently chronicled is one of its evil results.

The importance of native instrumentality in foreign mission work has frequently been emphasised in these columns. In the current issue of The Missionary Review of the World, Dr. Bunker, of Toungoo, Burmah, states the case at length, and with much clearness. He says:—

> It requires long experience and much humility for a missionary to learn all he can from the natives in order to enable him to get down to the everyday life and thought of the heathen, and it is only in that low place that he can do his best work and reach the common people. . . . He cannot deal with them at arm's length. Moreover, he finds himself hedged about, as with a wall, by his ignorance of the language, manners and customs of the people, and especially of their modes of thought. Through this wall he must work his way, requiring time and much patient labour.
> The native workers, however, have inherited this knowledge from their birth, and are at once in that place where they can best reach their countrymen after they themselves have found the truth. Best of all, they are in full and intelligent sympathy with their needs. Again, these workers can be more easily lifted into higher thought and life, and equipped for missionary work, than the foreign missionary can learn to adapt himself to these new conditions in which he finds himself. He can reach his native helper much more easily than he can the masses about him, and thus, instead of one, if he has the talent and grace, he becomes many, multiplying himself in the native converts made under his instruction.

Scriptural and reasonable, these principles are also eminently practical. We rejoice to observe that the conviction is growing among missionaries, as well as those who sustain their hands, that special strength and earnestness should be put into the work of establishing churches under native pastors on a much larger scale than hitherto.

Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A.

A special Gospel Mission to young men was conducted here last week by Major Liebenrood. The Major has a singularly simple, straightforward, soldierly style of address. He studiously kept the meeting within an hour's duration. Conversational after-meetings were held each evening, during which many young men talked over their spiritual doubts and difficulties; and many gladly accepted the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour. More than seventy gave their names and addresses.

At the closing meeting on Monday evening the members of the Zulu Christian Choir sang some of their beautiful pieces. These Christian native Zulus are open for engagements in connection with Christian work.—Mr. Msane, 3, Coleherne-road, South Kensington, W.

Mr. Moody's Parting Message.

OXFORD, SUNDAY NIGHT.

This afternoon I spent an hour with Mr. Moody. The following paragraphs are the result of our conversation, and are written at his suggestion. He will have left our shores ere they come before the reader, and they may be considered as his last message to the Christians of Great Britain and Ireland, at the close of a very fruitful visit. He went to the meeting he was about to address (the Corn Exchange, packed full of men), and I could not but feel that because he went with his heart at peace with all his fellow believers, and of one accord and of one mind with them on all the great and fundamental verities, the power of God rested mightily upon him, and very many of those men believed.

This dispensation began with the members of the infant Church with one accord in one place, waiting for the promised Spirit; and the Day of Pentecost inaugurated the golden age of the Church.

Nothing caused the apostles more distress and sorrow than the growth of divisions among the saints; and that their trouble was not without foundation has been proved through the succeeding ages; for by successive controversies upon questions of doctrine, the Church has been divided into parties, so that Pentecostal conditions have passed away, and Pentecostal results have become impossible.

The controversies of the past century on Election and Free-will are painful reading now. The difficulties are still unsolved, but the controversy is dead, and when Charles H. Spurgeon invited Mark Guy Pearse to preach in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, or the Pastor lent the Tabernacle for Primitive Methodist anniversaries, no difference appeared in the full free Gospel which they equally preached and taught.

Post-millennarians and pre-millennarians work harmoniously together. Those who hold contrary views of Baptism co-operate in Christian fellowship. Old divisions are being healed; sub-divided denominations are seeking to be re-united; and though the desire for re-union in some quarters seeks the union of elements which are not unitable, is not even this an unconscious appeal to us who ought never to have been divided, to unite on the great principles in which we all agree, rather than to separate on the lesser questions on which we differ?

We have seen in this generation a body of brethren, who united on simple and spiritual grounds, and who were remarkable for their Berean spirit, split into fragments by the false formula that "separation from evil is God's principle of unity"; whereas God's principle of unity is the oneness of the Body of which Christ is Head. Those who hold the Lord's Coming as the Church's blessed hope have seen that hope almost eclipsed by discussions and controversies as to the order of events; and this controversy has "separated very friends."

The healing of our divisions does not suit our great adversary; he takes care to have new causes of separation always in hand; and when old strifes are dead, he stirs up new ones which equally serve his evil purpose.

The apparent cause of many of these controversies is that teachers go beyond what is written, instead of obeying the injunction to "Preach the Word." There need be no division as to God's judgment on the impenitent, if we only preach the Word. Teachers of Holiness are gathering into separate, if not antagonistic, camps. The Inspiration of th Scriptures has become a burning questio threatening to consume the love out of ma hearts. Yet with regard to Holiness an Inspiration, it should surely be enough to l the Scriptures speak, and to avoid priva and conflicting interpretations.

Like apples of discord, these controversi are separating men whose deepest desire is preach the Gospel and to win souls, but wh paralyse each other's efforts, and dive against each other the strength that ough to be used against the common foe.

Our beloved brother, whom God has wondrously used, no less in this tha in his former visits to this countr leaves as his last word to his fello Christians the eager desire that the may manifest the oneness in which God h bound us together. I do not doubt that o great secret of the power which has wrough through him has been and is his fellowsh with the Lord and Saviour in the great inte cession at the close of His earthly ministr "That they all may be one, as Thou, Fathe art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also ma be one in us, that the world may believe th Thou hast sent Me."

Brethren, the great desire of us all is th the world may believe in Him to whom w owe everything in time and for eternit Shall we not put this first thing first, an remit questions which we cannot solve to th coming day?

> Soon the whole,
> Like a parchèd scroll,
> Shall before our amazèd sight uproll;
> And without a screen
> At one burst be seen
> The Presence wherein we have ever been.

We need at this time to remember th Apostle's words:—

"Let us therefore as many as be perfect be th minded; and if in any thing ye be otherwise minde God shall reveal even this unto you. Neverth less, whereto we have already attained, let us walk the same rule, let us mind the same thing."

For only in the atmosphere of love can w ascertain the truth. Only "with all saints can we "comprehend the breadth and lengt and depth and height of the love of Christ."

In the great and historic meeting of men Oxford to-night, it was worthy of note tha of the numbers who rose and by their em phatic "I will," declared their acceptance Christ as their Saviour, and their surrend to Him as Lord, there were more studen than others; proving that the Gospel ha not lost its power or its attraction for th more educated classes. How needful that, i order to a united testimony, we should "b like-minded, having the same love, being one accord, of one mind."

As a parting text Mr. Moody leaves wit us:—

"Above all things, have fervent charit among yourselves; for charity covereth a mult tude of sins."

The Book of Joshua.

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.,
Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road.

PASSING THE JORDAN.—Joshua iii. 10.

The words "I will drive out" are familiar ones in the Mosaic record of the Exodus. A dozen times at least God promised, through his servant, to drive out the nations of Canaan before his people. Sometimes it was to be wrought by sending an angel, and sometimes a hornet; for God's righteous acts are fair and lovely to his children, but terrible to his adversaries. All that Israel had to do was to march straight before them into the Land of Promise, and they would find that the mightiest armies would give back before them, as the flimsy mist driven before the rising gale.

There were several reasons why it was needful for God to drive out the seven nations which dwelt in Canaan, and which are enumerated here. But chief amongst them stands that suggested by the memorable interview held between Jehovah and Abraham, the ancestor of the chosen race four centuries before. The iniquity of the Amorite was full (Gen. xv. 16).

In the first place, the nations of Canaan had abandoned themselves to the most abominable immorality. After enumerating a number of impure actions, which were not to be so much as named amongst the chosen people, Moses, speaking as the mouthpiece of Jehovah, said, "Defile not ye yourselves in any of these things, for in all these the nations are defiled which I cast out from before you, and the land is defiled, therefore do I visit the iniquity thereof upon it, and the land vomiteth out her inhabitants." And again, "All these abominations have the men of the land done." The destruction of the people by the sword of Israel was only the hastening of the natural results of their shameful vice. It was even a gracious act to cut off the little children rather than permit them to grow up to inherit the inevitable results of the abominable iniquity of their parents. The reasons which necessitated the Deluge of water necessitated this deluge of blood. Plague spot as it was, Canaan would have infected the world, had it not been passed through the fire.

In the second place, the Canaanites were steeped in spiritualism, and held close communications with the demons of the air; which have always been forbidden to men. On the eve of Israel's entrance into Canaan, Moses said, "There shall not be found with thee one that useth divination, one that practiseth augury, or an enchanter, or a sorcerer, or a charmer, or a consulter with a familiar spirit, or a wizard, or a necromancer. For whosoever doeth these things is an abomination to the Lord; and because of these abominations the Lord thy God doth drive them out from before thee" (Deut. xviii. 10, 11, 12). These terms include mesmerism, the use of evil spirits to get aid and information, demoniacal possession of bodies of mediums, and the apparent summoning back of the departed. "All of these things are a transgression of the limits of humanity as laid down by the Creator. And the unlawful confusion brings its own immediate punishment, in addition to the fearful judgment to come. For our body appears to be intended to serve as a fortress, and is not improbably devised for the very purpose of sheltering us in some degree from the corrupting influence of demons" (Pember). When, therefore, man breaks through this strong fence and opens a passage of communication with the fallen spirits around, he exposes himself to God's direst wrath, and for the sake of the race these black arte must be stayed.

And this last thought gives a new complexion to this conflict. In driving out and destroying these demoralised races, God was in effect waging war with the evil spirits, that from their seat in the heavenlies were ruling the darkness of that land. This conflict was not against flesh and blood, but against the principalities and powers of the Prince of the Power of the Air. The mighty armies marshalled against Israel were dissipated as chaff before the breeze of the summer evening, because the demons whom they worshipped were being driven out before the Lord's host, the Captain of which appeared presently to Joshua. At this time, probably, to celestial watchers, Satan appeared to fall as lightning from heaven. And thus this old record is invested with a new interest. It is not simply the story of the conquest of Canaan, but it is a fragment from the chronicles of heaven, giving an episode in the eternal conflict between Light and Darkness, between Heaven and Hell, between the Son of God and his great antagonist, the devil. What an interesting additional analogy is also presented by this fact, between the Book of Joshua and the Epistle to the Ephesians!

God graciously vouchsafed a sign of the ultimate issue of the war, so that through the seven years of coming conflict the people of Israel might be at rest as to the result. "Hereby ye shall know that the living God is among you, and that He will without fail drive out from before you the Canaanite, and the Hittite, and the Hivite, and the Perizzite, and the Girgashite, and the Amorite, and the Jebusite. Behold! the ark of the covenant of the Lord of all the earth passeth over before you into Jordan." The passage of the turbulent waters of Jordan was to be the heaven-appointed sign, just as the passage of our Lord through death, in which He cut death off, his Resurrection, and his Ascension are the Heaven-appointed auguries and signs that He shall at last put down all rule, and authority, and power, destroy the works of the devil, and give up the kingdom to God, even the Father.

I.—The Passage of the Jordan—At the close of the three days of preparation there seems to have been a movement of the camp from Shittim, with its acacia groves, to a spot within a mile of the boisterous rush of the swollen floods. There Israel spent the last memorable night of pilgrimage and wandering. As the dawn broke the officers again passed through the host, and bade the people watch and follow the movements of the ark. It would not be long before the congregation had struck their slight black tents, packed up their household goods, adjusted their burdens, and stood in one great host, two and a half millions strong, prepared to tread the untried path—the way that they had not passed heretofore—though it led into the valley of death. The sun was rising behind them, its beams flashing on the Jordan, a mile of water broad, and setting in bold relief the white walls of the houses of Jericho, whilst all the adjacent hills of Canaan stood around veiled in morning mist, or robed in the exquisite garments of light.

At last a little group emerged from those densely-crowded hosts. It was the chosen band of priests, white-robed, barefooted, who slowly descended the terraced bank of the river, bearing on their shoulders the sacred ark, its golden lid and bending cherubim hidden beneath their covering of blue. How awful the silence! How fixed the gaze that followed them every step! How hushed the voices of wiseacres and gainsayers who had been loud all the previous days in protesting that the passage was impossible, and that it would be wiser to wait until the mile of water had dwindled to the normal width of thirty yards when the stream was four or six feet deep, and easily fordable! It is said that ordinarily there are points at which a man can go across without wetting his feet.

Nearer the little procession went, but even when it was within a yard of the river brink its approach effected nothing. The waters showed no disposition to flee or fail. But when the feet of the priests were dipped into the tiny wavelets, brown with mud, yeasty with the foam of their hurried rush, a marvellous change took place. They began to divide and shrink away. And as the priests pursued them, descending ever further towards the midst of Jordan, they fled before them as if panic-stricken. "What ailed thee, thou Jordan, that thou turnest back?" Ah, it was at the presence of the God of Jacob, because the ark of the covenant of the Lord of all the earth was passing through its depths.

Far up the river, at a distance of some thirty miles, at Adam, the city that is beside Zaretan, the flow of the river had suddenly stayed, and the waters, unable to hurry forward, were gathering into a heap, and probably forming a vast lake that spread itself for miles. From that point and downwards, the waters, no longer supplied from above, began to fail, they hurried down towards the Sea of Death, and were swallowed up in its dark unwholesome depths. "They were wholly cut off." And as there were none to follow, the river bed for miles was dry, and the people hurrying down the bank, "hastened and passed over." "All Israel passed over on dry ground, until all the nation were passed clean over Jordan."

Mark the all-inclusiveness of the miracle. It did not concern the strong only, but also the weak; not men only, but women and children; not the loyal and true only, but the querulous, the murmurers, the doubters, the fearless and unbelieving. Achan, whose heart was preparing for his deed of sin, and Caleb, the hale warrior, who wholly followed the Lord. Not one was missing. The feet of the priests stood firm till every individual of the redeemed race had crossed the river. It is a blessed anticipation of the keeping back of a more awful flood until without one exception the entire host of the Church has entered that city whose walls are Salvation, and its gates Praise.

And this was the promised sign. For He who could drive out the waters would drive out their foes. Having done so much, He would perfect that which He had begun. No child of the kingdom may put his hand to the plough, and then look back; how much less the King Himself. The waters might fail, but the living God, without fail, would drive out their foes.

II.—The Typical Significance of this Passage. The Son of God was manifested that He might destroy the works of the devil. The dispossession of the devil from the position which he has usurped is as certain as that of the Canaanites from the Land of Promise. His doom is sure. He must be cast out. Our Emmanuel will not fail nor be discouraged until our great enemy and all his armies have been cast out of the heavenlies into the earth, and out of the earth into the abyss, and thence into the lake of fire. And this is the sign of it, that He dipped his feet in death, and dying abolished death. It fled before Him, as Jordan before the priests; and for those who live and believe in Him, though the semblance remains, it is as a river-bed from which the water has shrunk away, and they go over dry-shod.

Christian people do not seem to understand this glorious fact. They think that death to them will be much as it was to the myriads who die outside Christ. But surely this is a profound mistake. When Jesus died, He entirely altered the article of death for all who believe. There may be the physical anguish, the pains of dissolution, the damp sweat on the brow, but if we could compare the experiences of those who die out of Christ and of those who die in blessed union with Him, if we could look into the heart of their respective experiences, we should discover that whilst to the former dying is like Jordan at the flood, to the latter it is like Jordan without its water, a lion without teeth, a scorpion without a sting, a king without power or victory. "Through death He brought to nought him that had the power of death, that is the devil, and delivered them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage."

In the light of these considerations what a sparkle of light flashes on several of these sentences!

"There shall be a space between you and the ark." Yes, the Lord Jesus preceded his Church. He first passed through the grave in resurrection power. Every man in his own order; Christ the first-fruits, afterwards they that are Christ's. In all things, and therefore in this also, He must have the pre-eminence. When He putteth forth his own sheep He goeth before them, and his sheep follow Him. The breaker is gone up before them: they have broken forth and passed on to the gate, and are gone out thereat, and their king is passed on before them, and the Lord at the head of them.

"And the Lord said unto Joshua, This day will I begin to magnify thee." And surely the exaltation of Christ as the God-man dates from the moment that He stepped into the hurrying waters of death and dried them up. The God of Peace brought again the Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the Sheep, through the blood of the everlasting of the covenant.

"The priests that bare the ark of the covenant of the Lord stood firm, until all the nation were passed clean over Jordan." Thus does the merit of Jesus avail till all the ransomed Church of God be saved to sin no more. The waters of judgment may be accumulating for all who cling to the old Adam-stock; but they can never slip from their leash until every trembling laggard soul that will has passed into blessed rest. You may be young, or crippled, or ready to halt, or much afraid, but if you will but cast in your lot with the host of the ransomed, the Priest will lengthen out the dispensation, and hold the waters back for you.

"The people hasted and passed over." Not that they were afraid of being caught in the rush of water, but that they might not overtire the waiting priests, patiently standing, the precious burden on their shoulders. Has not the patience of Jesus been greatly exercised during these long centuries? He longs to take his bride to Himself, to reap the harvest of his tears, and see of the travail of his soul. Let us hasten the coming of the day of God, by learning all his holy lessons, doing his blessed will, and hastening the Lots that linger at the gates of Sodom.

This, then, is the blessed sign of the final victory of the Son of God, and every Christian who passes into the Land of Promise, Rest, and Victory, who begins to live the Resurrection life, who knows what it is to stand in conscious rapture of power, is another pledge that ere long the song shall be heard ringing through all the spheres, "Hallelujah, the kingdoms of this world have become the kingdoms of our God and of his Christ, and He shall reign for ever."

III.—The Bearing of this Passage on Daily Life. It is true always that Jordans roll between us and our Canaans. We are permitted to catch glimpses of spiritual experience, which is not only within our reach, but evidently intended for us. A face lighted up with an unearthly glow, a recital of experience, a passage in a book, a text, a sermon, have revealed something as radiant to our gaze as Jericho must have seemed to those weary travellers. But there is a Jordan between us and it. And the turbulent waters seem an impassable barrier.

There is no hope that we shall be able to cope with these things by any might or wisdom of our own. As well might we seek to arrest a river in its flood, or curb the ocean in storm. The opposition of that relative, the hatred of that persecutor, the strength of that passion, the tyranny of that habit, the untowardness of our circumstances: these are our Jordan. How easy life would be if only these were other than they are. Give me Canaan without its Jordan.

But God permits the Jordans that He may educate our faith. Do not look at the troubled waters, rushing past, but at the Priest, who is also the Ark of the Covenant. He will never send us by a way that He is not willing to tread before us. "Behold, the ark of the covenant of the Lord of all the earth passeth over before you into Jordan."

Keep in living fellowship with the Apostle and High Priest of your profession. Consider Him. Look away from all else to Him. Follow Him. It may seem as if He is leading thee into certain destruction. But it shall not be so. When thou comest to the dreaded difficulty, be it what it may, thou wilt find that because his feet have been dipped in its brink, it has dwindled in its flow. Its roar is hushed; its waters are shrunken; its violence is gone. The iron gate stands open. The stone is rolled from the sepulchre. The river-bed is dry. Jericho is within reach. "They passed over right against Jericho."

GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL.

Mr. E. P. Telford, who, with Mrs. Telford, has been holding evangelistic services in the United States for the past three years, commenced a seven-weeks' mission in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, on October 29, prior to their return to America in December next. Mr. Telford is well known in connection with the work he carried on so successfully some years ago at Stockton-on-Tees and East and West Hartlepool. Before he went abroad he conducted a month's services at the Great Assembly Hall for many years, and this visit was looked forward to with much pleasure by the people of the East End.

Although he has not completed half his mission, the result up to the present has been such as to cause much praise to God. Both the week-evening and Sunday services have been above the average for attendance. The readiness with which the people have responded to Mr. Telford's appeals for immediate decision have been very marked. It has been an ordinary thing for ten or a dozen to stan up and declare audibly "I will," in answer to the preacher's invitation and question, "Who will decide now for Christ?" On Sunday evenings this number has been greatly increased, and some solemn times have been experienced by that immense congregation as one and another have stood up and testified their willingness to serve Christ.

The after-meetings have been crowded, and the spirit of inquiry and the many conversions have inspired not a few Christians who had grown cold in the Master's service.

THE MAJESTY OF SCRIPTURE.*

By the late Adolph Saphir, D.D.

It has often been remarked that the Church of Christ originated without the Scriptures, only by the preached word of the Gospel; and that as it thus originated it also existed before the Scriptures. This assertion is very superficial, and, in fact, it is not true, because the preaching of our Lord Jesus Christ and the preaching of the apostles were always connected with the Scriptures of the Old Testament, yea, founded upon them; so that from the very beginning the Church owed its origin not merely to the preaching of the Word but to the preaching of the Word as being the explanation of the Word which was written, and which God had given to the fathers. We can see this not merely concerning the Church, which was founded among Israel—for what was the preaching of the apostle Peter on the day of Pentecost, and of the apostle Paul in the synagogue at Antioch, but the explanation of that which was written, because that which was written was not now superseded, nor merely supplemented, but it was fulfilled; it was illumined and transfigured, and it was to remain for ever as the authoritative announcement of the Most High.

And when the apostles went to the idolaters, how remarkable is it that unto them also they preached the Scriptures, so that we find that in all the epistles which afterwards they directed to the congregations which had been formed from among the heathen, they proved every doctrine from the Old Testament Scriptures. Justification by faith was proved from the prophet Habakkuk, from the example of Abraham, and from the experience of David. And the apostle Paul was so anxious, that in that world-wide epistle to the Romans there should be given light to the Gentiles, as to the true position of the Old Testament, that he shows in it how Jesus Christ was the minister of the circumcision to fulfil the promises which were given to the fathers, and how the Gentiles were brought in, in accordance with the prophetic word. He was afraid of that congregation in Rome, and of all the Gentile congregations, falling into what I may call Gentilising error, just as he was afraid of the Galatians falling into Judaising error; and all the practical exhortations that he gave to the churches were based upon the Word of God, "as it is written." So he writes to the Corinthians that the experience of Israel in the wilderness was to be a guide and a warning unto them. And when the apostles were near the end of their earthly course, and saw the dangers to which the Church of Christ would be exposed, they with all emphasis directed men again to the Scriptures, which were to be a light shining to them in darkness, and which were profitable to them, and able to make them perfect, furnishing them to every good work.

The glory of the Old Testament is great. The glory of the New Testament is still greater. But it is not by depreciating the one that we shall be able to see the true magnitude and excellence of the other. The Old Testament in its humility compares itself to the night, although it is illuminated by the moon and the stars; and the very last word of the Old Testament in the prophet Malachi is, that unto them that fear God the sun of righteousness shall rise with healing in its wings. Therefore although the night is solemn and beautiful, the day with the sun is still more glorious.

Think for a moment of what we have in the New Testament Scriptures. Think of the grandeur of the New Testament. Here God Himself is revealed, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; and for this reason it is that in the New Testament you find so often the expression used, "Before the foundation of the world," because the New Testament, in thus differing from the Old Testament, goes back to the eternal counsel of God, and shows us what was in the depth of God's mind when, in Christ Jesus as the Lamb, He chose the Church in order to show forth all his glory and all his praise. God is light, God is love, God Himself is made manifest to us in the New Testament.

And as this New Testament possesses such a wonderful grandeur and majesty, it possesses also a marvellous simplicity. What can be more simple than the words of Jesus and the exposition of the apostles? The very word "Jesus" is a summing up in the simplest form of all God's announcements and promises in the Old Testament. Th name which was never mentioned as the name the Messiah in the Old Testament, sums up ever thing that God has promised to his peopl Or take that expression, "The Lamb the midst of the throne." Here you ha all the sacrifices; here you have the predictio of Isaiah; here you have the still clearer and mo condensed explanation of the prophet Zecharia when he speaks about the priest being set on t throne, and it is all summed up in the most luc and sweet manner, "The Lamb in the midst of t throne." Great is the majesty of the New Test ment, and still greater is its simplicity.

Think again how compact it is. After all it is a very small compass. The New Testament is n a large book, and the period of history which it h to sum up only comprises a few years. In thr years Jesus finished his earthly ministry, and on twenty years sum up the history of the book Acts. How easily it is read, and how easily it remembered.

And, lastly, I would say about the New Test ment, although in it God Himself is revealed, more glorious revelation of God than the Incarn tion even eternity will not bring. A mo stupendous sacrifice of Divine love than the dea of Jesus on the cross eternity will not unfold. A mo wonderful mystery than the indwelling of the Spirit God in the Church of Christ we can never witness

Although the majesty of the New Testament exceedingly great, the manner of its inspiration exceedingly human and exceedingly homely; not, as in the Old Testament, was the Spirit of Go as it were, outside the prophets, so that they had search diligently what the Spirit that was in the did signify. The Spirit now abiding within t hearts of the apostles, their testimony came, so speak, in the most personal and subjective way. Christ says, "The Spirit shall testify and ye al shall testify." Their own individuality is allow the freest and fullest scope, which is manifest fro this simple circumstance, that nearly all the boo of the New Testament are letters. The Gospel Luke is a letter. The Gospel of John is a lette The Book of Acts is a letter. And then comes great number of epistles, and even in the Book Revelation we see the form of a letter.

Heart to heart, mouth to mouth, man to ma speaks in this book. Think for a few moments what we have in the New Testament. The Jew possessed in the Old Testament all that they r quired as a nation—the history and origin of Israe all God's dealings with them, all God's teaching f them, and all the plans of God for their future, a are contained in the Old Testament, so that Isra as a nation requires no more. . . . Everythin that the Church can require is contained in th wonderful collection of books which we are in th habit of calling the New Testament. All these boo are one book. There is no discordance between t gospels and the epistles. There is a most shallow vie constantly propounded nowadays, when people sa that they would rather listen to what Christ says in t gospels than to what is written in the epistles of t apostles. The Holy Ghost alone could bring to t remembrance of the apostles the things that Chri had spoken, and the reason why Christ did not te the apostles all that is in the epistles was, n because He was not able to do so, but because the were not able to bear it; but, besides, Christ to them everything in germ, although in Jerusale and afterwards all was more fully revealed.

UNIVERSAL WEEK OF PRAYER, January 1—1893.—The Council of the Evangelical Allian have issued the programme for the New Year's Wee of Prayer. The invitation is, as usual, signed b representatives of the various branches of th Alliance throughout the world, and the subjec suggested for prayer for the several days of the wee are wide and varied, but they may be briefly indicat by the general outline given for each day, thu Monday, Humiliation and Thangsgiving; Tuesda The Church Universal; Wednesday, Nations an their Rulers; Thursday, Foreign Missions; Frida Home Missions and the Jews; Saturday, Famil and Schools. The Week of Universal Pray always commences with the first Sunday in Janua and next year this comes early, the first Sund being the first day of January. For this day as w as for January 8, the programme suggests that s mons be preached suitable to the occasion. T Secretary of the Evangelical Alliance, 7, Ad street, Strand, will forward copies of the progra on application.

DR. D. FRASER'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY.

We heartily welcome the modest volume* into which (with a selection of his sermons) are gathered all the literary memorials of a personal kind that we are ever likely to have of the late pastor of Marylebone Presbyterian Church. Though a man of great popular gifts, which he freely exercised, Dr. Fraser had, at the same time, a shrinking from the glare of excessive publicity. It appears that he preserved few of the private documents that are generally utilised for biographical purposes. Dr. Oswald Dykes informs us in a brief preface that a MS. was discovered in Dr. Fraser's handwriting, containing a fairly complete autobiography, and this has been published virtually as it was found. Mrs. Fraser has added a short chapter, giving an outline of the leading events of her husband's life subsequent to 1884, the period covered by the manuscript.

Though the record is in many respects fragmentary and incomplete, we much prefer it to any elaborate and eulogistic narrative from the hand of another. Dr. Fraser writes throughout with the freedom and candour induced by the thought that before publication he will be out of the reach of praise or blame. While he expresses his views freely on many subjects of passing importance and interest, everything is written in the fine vein of gentlemanly moderation and charity that was a marked characteristic of his utterances when alive. In this respect all who write for publication about themselves or others would do well to imitate him. The sermons are good, condensed specimens of his pulpit teaching. The discourses are exceedingly earnest, evangelical, and practical; marked by a graceful and cultured style of diction; though lacking the note of passion that would have made them great. We append some interesting reminiscences of an evangelistic and personal kind, taken from the chapter that describes Dr. Fraser's ministry at Inverness:—

"My occupation was the ordinary routine of ministerial duty in town, with a good deal of extra preaching in neighbouring towns and country parishes. But occasions of a more special nature soon arose. I found on my arrival at Inverness that, through the visits of the late Mr. Brownlow North and others, a measure of new religious interest had been awakened. A good many young people had begun to believe with their hearts, and wished to confess with their mouths, the Lord Jesus. But their zeal was accounted presumption by not a few Christians of the old school, and there was some danger of a breach between the young spiritual efflorescence on the one hand and the Church pastors and authorities on the other. In these circumstances, I trust that my intervention was of some lasting service. I encouraged the young Christians, gave a good deal of time to conversation with inquirers after the way of peace, received those who had believed through grace to the holy communion, employed them in Sunday-school teaching, called on them to lift up their voices in meetings for prayer, and strongly favoured the habit then introduced of singing hymns at district meetings and open-air services. I often preached in the open-air—sometimes on the Castle Hill at Inverness, sometimes on the Links at Nairn, sometimes at the great gatherings which were held in those days at Arndilly and at Huntly.

"Itinerant preachers of approved character and orthodoxy I welcomed to Inverness, and gave them every facility in my power. I may mention as examples Mr. Brownlow North, Mr. Grant of Arndilly, Mr. John Fraser (my brother), Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, and Mr. Duncan Matheson. At the same time I was glad to have the help of such ministerial brethren as H. M. Williamson, of Huntly (now of Belfast), the late H. Cobban, of Braemar, and others, and so did what I could to keep the fresh religious life which broke forth among us within the lines of church fellowship and symmetry. In this manner I was happily and busily occupied for two or three years after my settlement in Inverness. In taking part so decidedly with the young Christians and the party of progress, I do not think that I lost any ground with the true Christians of older growth. None of them forsook me; many of them helped me greatly by their sympathy. . . .

"As to the growth of my mind and ripening of my views at Inverness, I have not much to say. It was a period of great activity. I was more occupied in what is called evangelistic work than either before or after. I wrote sermons regularly, but seldom with deep study. Dr. Guthrie once urged it on me to prepare but one sermon a week, and so do my best. I put the advice aside, because I never could bear to elaborate the materials of a sermon or address. But I went over large tracts of Scripture, and widened the range of my thinking and teaching.

"In regard to what may be called my religious views, I was led by the circumstances and traditions around me to fight against a fatalistic application of the doctrines of predestination and moral inability; but never wavered from the doctrines of grace, which have always been, and to this day are the strength of my ministry. I think also that I began to see more clearly than before the true character of the Bible as a progressive historical revelation; that I learned caution in regard to the popular idea of future conscious endless sufferings as the doom of all the unsaved, and that my mind opened more fully than before to the true constitution and calling of the Church of God, and the blessed hope of our Lord's glorious appearing."

MR. QUARRIER'S ORPHAN HOMES.

The twenty-first annual meeting in connection with the Orphan Homes of Scotland and the Destitute Children's Homes and Mission took place last week in the Christian Institute, Glasgow. There was a large attendance of the general public. Mr. A. Cameron Corbett, M.P., presided.

In Mr. Quarrier's narrative of facts for the year it was stated that there had been an increase for maintenance in the general fund of the Homes, which had amounted this year to £12,577 8s. 7d., and gifts in clothing, kind, etc., had also been larger. They had received for building purposes £4275 13s. 7d., making in all a total of £16,853 2s. 2d. A greater number of children had been rescued, 561 new cases having been admitted, which, added to 817 they commenced the year with, made a total of 1378 who had passed through the Homes during the twelve months. In addition to the children dealt with in the Homes, 669 homeless, friendless wanderers had been provided with a night's shelter in the model lodging houses, and in many cases with food; lines for infirmaries and convalescent homes had been given to the sick and delicate, besides thousands of other needy ones helped with advice, etc. At present, for the large family of 1000, the expense for maintenance amounts to about £40 a day; but as new members are constantly being added, the needs are daily increasing. One more cottage will fill up the group in Love Avenue. Mr. Quarrier requires £2500 for the passages and outfit of the 250 children to be sent to Canada in the coming year.

The Chairman said they had always in the main the same story to tell—a story of increasing success and enlarging work. No doubt during the year Mr. Quarrier had many special difficulties, many times of trial, but always when the year closed they had to record a steady advance of the work, and to record that Mr. Quarrier's faith had met its reward, and that he had not trusted his God in vain. It is wonderful how the supplies for Mr. Quarrier's Homes came in almost literally day by day. The wants of the Homes had always been met as they arose, and had been met through the Spirit of God directly appealing to his servants through their own hearts to come forward and give what was required.

Mr. Robert A. Dryden submitted an abstract of the accounts. The general fund closed with a favourable balance of £1250, while the balance at the credit of the building fund is £6600. All this money, however, will be absorbed by the completion of buildings in course of erection.

Bailie Chisholm and Rev. Mr. Roberts supported the work in hearty addresses.

Mr. Quarrier, after some interesting recollections of the past, said he had no intention of stopping building until God indicated that He wanted the work stopped, and He would do so by keeping the children away. He hoped by-and-by to have other half-a-dozen houses. There was one wanted for Love Avenue, and there were on the farm sites for five or six more. If there was anyone present who could spend £10,000, he believed the very best investment they could put it into was to build these houses. Then he wanted a farm, extending to about 200 acres and costing other £10,000, and he was quite sure that both the houses and the farm would come when they were needed, and he just kept on believing so. While every care was taken to properly feed, clothe, and train the children, the spiritual part of their nature was not neglected, and, as a result, they had very much to encourage them.

WITH THE BLUEJACKETS.

A short synopsis of my work in the Royal Navy for the past year may interest your readers. I have enlarged the Portsmouth Sailors' Rest considerably. The coffee bar has been doubled in size, kitchens and offices added, and a large, handsome block of cabins and reading-rooms has been opend.

The sum of £7429 9s. 6d. has been paid to the contractor for building and furnishing. The men sleeping on the premises during the year (all service men, for I admit no outsiders), were 115,697: Portsmouth, 42,875; Devonport, 72,822. Large numbers of men have been sheltered, lying on couches or on the floors of the reading-rooms in times of great pressure.

The whole of the Navy is kept in touch. Each ship in the service receives monthly a parcel of our publications sufficient in number to allow several to every mess-table. The Merchant Service, American Navy, fishermen, etc., are remembered in the same way. 529,682 monthly letters and 380,670 Ashore and Afloat have been sent to seafaring men during the year. The Missions to Seamen, Missions to Deep Sea Fishermen, and British and Foreign Sailors' Society receive large grants.

Temperance work has been carried on with vigour; a branch of the "Royal Naval Temperance Society" exists on board each war ship, and the temperance men in our navy are numbered by thousands. The Royal Naval Christian Union has a large membership of godly men. Meetings, both Gospel and temperance, Bible-classes, meetings for sailor-boys, sailors' wives, etc., are carried on uninterruptedly at the Sailors' Rest, and are well attended, often crowded.

A band of devoted ladies assist Miss Wintz and myself in the work, giving their services gratuitously. My staff of paid workers is small; in this way we are enabled to accomplish a large amount of work at a small cost. The naval authorities give me most kind and constant help. The Duke of Edinburgh is the president, and has shown me much kindness. The buildings are vested in trustees, and all is secured upon a substantial legal footing.

Of the amount of good done morally and spiritually it is not for me to speak, but many a man in the Navy thanks God for our Sailors' Rests and the work connected with them.

BIBLE WORK IN CHINA.

Mr. F. R. Johnson, one of the agents of the National Bible Society of Scotland, describing a journey from Hankow to Amoy, says:—"I would like to mention a need which is continually before us, and which some would feel that they would like, in some measure, to supply. When selling Scriptures we have the opportunity (which we are only too glad to use) of also selling tracts, which greatly help the ordinary Chinaman in understanding what the Gospel means. Without, many a Chinaman who has purchased a Gospel will lay the book aside because he cannot understand it—sometimes, for instance, he will read all the names in the first chapter of St. Matthew, and, without going further, put it aside. A short Gospel tract, explaining the truths with which we are so familiar, greatly helps to remove these difficulties—in fact, there is only one other way, and that is to have a missionary in every city and town who would be able to explain the Gospel. That time, however, has not yet come, and we must not wait, for souls are perishing.

"This is the need, and how is it to be met? All Bible Society funds are exclusively devoted to the distribution of the Scriptures, and if we would distribute tracts we must get friends to supply us with the means to purchase them. It is a work in which everybody can have a share—the smallest sum of money will purchase a few tracts—and who can tell what shall be the fruit produced by the little silent messenger scattered 'like seed by the wayside, but not lost?' Subscriptions for this purpose may be sent to Mr. W. J. Slowan, 224, West George-street, Glasgow, mentioning that it is towards the 'China Tract Fund.'"

TRAINING INSTITUTE, GLASGOW.

When Mr. Moody was in Glasgow last March he inaugurated a movement for the better training of Christian workers, evangelists, home and foreign missionaries. The work was entrusted to the United Evangelistic Association of Glasgow, and the committee were fortunate in securing the services of Mr. John Anderson, of Ardrossan. Mr. Anderson has recently returned from an extensive tour in America, where he visited the schools at Northfield, Mount Hermon, Chicago, Boston, and New York, and gained much valuable information.

A preliminary meeting of young men and young women willing to take advantage of the instruction in evening classes was held in the Christian Institute on Wednesday, 16th inst. The meeting was large and enthusiastic, and at the close more than seventy young men and young women expressed their willingness to join the classes, which are to be held in the Christian Institute every Tuesday and Friday evening till the end of April. A small fee of five shillings for young men and half-a-crown for young women is to be charged for the instruction, and the amount raised by the fees is to be devoted to a scholarship to maintain one young man in the Training College.

The committee intend building special premises for the College, but in the meantime they have rented a large and commodious lodging in Blythswood-square, where it is hoped the work will begin early in December. In the meantime it is only intended to take young men into the College. When the new building is ready there will be accommodation for young women.

Already a number of applications have been received, and it is hoped that many more will apply. The terms of admission are £20 for board, the committee undertaking to pay the remainder that will be required for board and give instruction free. It is hoped that churches, Y.M.C.A.'s, Christian unions, and other organisations, will provide scholarships for young men with evident ability, for home or foreign work, so that they may be thoroughly trained. The instruction to be given will be entirely Biblical, the Bible being the only text-book. A thorough knowledge of singing will also be imparted, and the students will be guided in practical work, such as visiting, addressing open-air and evangelistic meetings, etc.

Mr. Moody was in Glasgow last week, and presided over the noon meeting on Thursday. There was a large gathering of Christian friends, many ministers being present in the audience. The following is a résumé of Mr. Moody's address:—

He said he had no doubt about the success of the Bible Training Institute, but he would like to say a few words to the fearful, and to those who have made some criticism about the enterprise. There is a class of people who feel it would be a mistake to send out men into Christian work who have had no regular theological training, as the country and the streets of the city might be flooded with preachers who did not know how to preach. Well, we are bound to have street preachers, many of whom have never passed through a theological seminary, and could not if they wished. If such young men have their hearts on fire with the love of God, the Institute will take them in hand and give them a start by imparting some instruction in Bible knowledge. Jerry McAuley, who worked with great success in one of the worst districts of New York, said when he came out of prison he met a man who asked him to go to church. McAuley said, "Why do you ask me to go to church? Does not the Bible say if you have two coats you should give me one?" The gentleman did give him a coat, with the result that McAuley went to church. He was converted at the age of thirty-three, and accomplished as much evangelistic work as any man has ever done in New York. Thieves were converted by the score, and even millionaires who went down to see the work were converted. Jerry McAuley lived almost wholly upon his own experience, but if he had been drilled in the Bible it would have helped him greatly. Can anyone lift up his voice against that?

When he (Mr. Moody) was converted he offered himself for Christian work, but they would not take him as a City missionary, so he went upon the streets and buttonholed men as best he could. But it would have been an immense advantage to him if he had been trained in the Bible. These street preachers will go to work anyway, and so it will be better if they have an opportunity of training. In Chicago some students were wakened up by their studies and went forward to take a theological course. He believed that the Bible Training Institute, instead of taking men away from the theological seminary, brought them into it.

Such men and women as have received Bible training are an immense help to ministers and evangelists. Trained people know how to handle their Bibles, and it is by this training that we can, as it were, weigh a man or a woman. No practical man can say a word against that plan, because by it a man will be a better preacher and a better missionary at home and abroad. If a man is found to do good work here, he will be all the better able to work in the foreign field. We want to reach people who do not care for the churches, and it is by these street preachers and missionaries that we wish to reach them. If the lapsed will not come to us we must go to them. Again, some mothers cannot go out to meetings because of the cares of the family, but a good woman can go to them and have a meeting with half-a-dozen.

The object of the Institute is, in a word, to train persons in the Bible, who may read it and explain it to others. He hoped the friends would not only give their money to this enterprise, but also their prayers that it may succeed, and that a band of workers be raised up. He thought that there was a great deal of bad music at meetings. If we are going to reach the lapsed masses there should be good music in the service of praise. If a man has got a good ear and a good voice, why should his gifts not be trained in the Bible Institute? Hundreds of ladies and gentlemen could come and learn music. He believed if every missionary society in Scotland sent their students to be trained in the Bible Training Institute they would be made better for their work.

YOUNG ENGLISHWOMEN IN PARIS.

During the year ended last March there were 447 admissions to the Mission Home, 77, Avenue Wagram. A bright and airy room, set apart for those who fall ill in the Home, has been much in requisition. The Infants' Kindergarten and Day-school has progressed satisfactorily. Many poor English mothers, who have to work for their daily bread, gratefully avail themselves of the loving shelter given to their little ones in this Home, walking long distances to bring them. Thirty-two children are on the school register, but more would gladly come could room be found for them. The Band of Hope numbers 211 children.

At the Mission Hall, 79, Avenue Wagram, 2500 poor persons have attended the mission services during the year. The attendance at the mothers' meetings during seven months has been 790. During the year over 2230 girls have attended the Bible classes at the Young Women's Christian Association and Home (26, Faubourg St. Honoré). Applications for admission to this home have in many cases had to be refused for want of accommodation. A large apartment at 14, Faubourg St. Honoré has just been secured, which will give an addition of seven more beds, which will quickly be filled. Attached to it is a hall and gymnasium, which will be available, not only as a place of recreation, but for meetings on week-days and religious services on Sundays. Such a place has been greatly needed, and will be much appreciated in that part of Paris.

In 1890 the admissions to the Governesses' and Artists' Institute (18, Rue de Milan) were fifty-eight; in 1891 they rose to 160, and yet fully thirty have been refused for lack of room. The Associates' Guild has increased from sixty to 170 members. This institute is nearer being self-supporting, as the weekly payments of the inmates provide nearly enough to meet the expenses. The interest on the sum due on the land has, however, still to be met by subscriptions. The work of the Homes reaches a thousand different people in Paris each week.

Lady helpers, with means and time to spare, and willing to help, are much wanted at the Paris Homes, and will be heartily welcomed. Mrs. Lewis will be thankful if friends will arrange drawing-room meetings during the coming year. Intimations of help may be sent to the Secretary, 22A, Queen's-road, Bayswater, London, W.

THE HOME OF INDUSTRY.

"Those women which laboured with me in th Gospel, and other of my fellow-labourers, who names are in the Book of Life."

Thus wrote the Apostle of his fellow-labourer and you, dear friends, who have laboured with these twenty-four years, to fill the young emigrant boxes in the spring time, would be encouraged hold on unto the end, could you but see the fruit your labours in the present well-being of so mar hundreds in Canada.

One of our "orphan boys," who has lately bee ordained a clergyman of the Church of Englan has just received a "call" to a congregation Canada. Two years ago, even before his ordinatio he was preaching with much acceptance in one the cities. Another young man (a motherless bo the son of a drunkard in our East End), who, wi his little sister, at the tender age of eight and s years, was emigrated fifteen years ago, writes th she is well married, and that he (now in the recei of a good income) is shortly to be married to young lady of good standing. His photo, ju received, gives us the purest delight; we quick recognise the broad, open brow of "little Willie and thank God that he is now a Christian and useful citizen of the great North-West.

Two bright intelligent young women have ju returned to England on a visit to their friend paying their own passage, and having the money f return fare laid by, as few care to remain lo in this city, where there is so much drink an misery. Another, after having been home to co fort and help her aged widowed father, has sail again to the land of her adoption.

Winter is upon us, not only full of sad forebodin of want and misery, but death on every side, leavi large families of young children wholly unprovid for. Others, both boys and girls, becoming whol unmanageable by overworked widows, or distract widowers, are brought under discipline in our Trai ing Home, and saved from being "overtaken in fault."

Immediately around us here, room for the ve poor and struggling becomes less; whole acres small dwellings are condemned for the new ere tions; but the scarcity of work leaves little hope f the poor to meet the necessarily increased rent During the struggle in the transition our sy pathies will be doubly taxed, hence our daily so copper will go on for months, and our sewi classes, where they earn an honest sixpence or sh ling, to aid them to get bread.

We entreat our friends to remember us dai in prayer, that the blessing in our midst, the deepe ing of spiritual life among our fellow workers, m result in the conversion of many souls this winter.

Annie Macpherson.

29, Bethnal Green Road, E.

At the Workers' Meeting at the Home of Indust on Wednesday evening, the newly gathered family from the training home made their first a pearance in public, and a truly bonny family it w of bright winsome, happy-faced little ones—fro the motherless boys and girls only received the pr vious day, having lost their mother only fortnight ago (and the sorrowing father le with five little ones, all under ten yea of age), to those who had been for sever weeks under tender loving care. Their swe hymns of praise attracted the kind friends gather to listen, and then Miss Macpherson gave a litt bright talk, telling how the Lord had led in eac case, and what the prospects were in Canada f carefully trained boys and girls. Mr. Smith led prayer for the children there assembled, and M Lane remembered the thousands scattered over th Dominion of Canada growing up in that land.

Dr. McKilliam gave a most searching and sou stirring address on "Holiness by faith in Jesus."

JEWS IN WEST LONDON.—The new mission roo of the West London Mission to the Jews, at 5, Gant street, Regent-street, W., was opened on Saturd afternoon. Dr. Bullinger in a short address spo of the importance of the work, and urged his heare to support it. Rev. J. Larzen, missionary, point out that the district is becoming crowded with Jew within a short time Jewish butchers, provision dealer and restaurants have increased wonderfully. Th Jews are more ready to listen to the Gospel tha they were ten years ago. Other friends commend the work.

THE GOSPEL IN THE OPEN AIR.

BY CHARLES COOK.*

III.—SOME RESULTS.

John Hambleton and I had been preaching on Yarmouth sands one summer evening from a Bible carriage. Among the audience was a butcher from London who was wont to open his shop on Sunday. He was awakened by the addresses, and wrestled with God in prayer on the sands all night long. Light entered his soul as morning dawned. Having found peace he went home; the next day (Saturday) confessed Christ as his Lord, and has never since opened his shop on the Lord's Day. To-day both he and his wife are in Church fellowship.

On a bitter cold Sunday afternoon in December our friends were singing in the Edgware-road before commencing our afternoon meeting in the hall. It came on to snow very heavily. We gave out the hymn, "Whiter than the snow," and then followed a sermonette of seven minutes' duration on "Snow." A few weeks later a lady said, "I was converted to God in that snowstorm when you preached on "Snow." The whole meeting did not last fifteen minutes; none of us were the worse for it, and an immortal was won to Christ.

We were closing our usual service in Hyde Park. "The Coming of the Lord" had been the subject of the address, and the choir sang very softly—

> Day is declining, and the sun is low,
> The shadows lengthen, light makes haste to go:
> Room, room, still room! oh, enter, enter now.

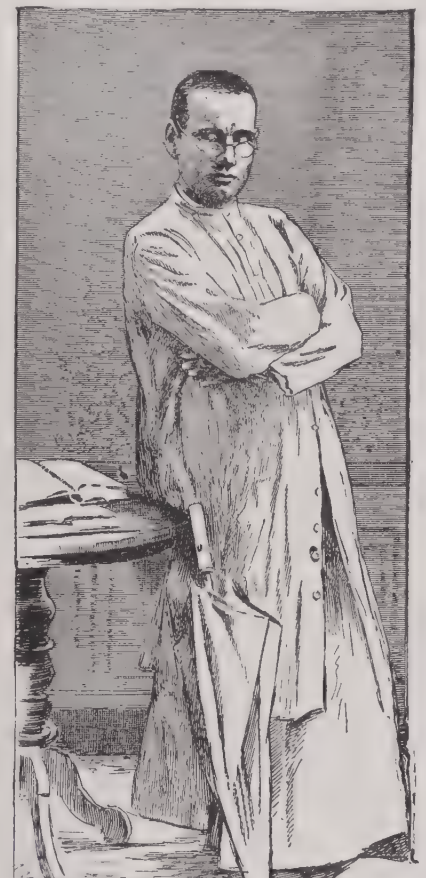
Our attention was called to a young lady weeping bitterly. A lady worker walked with her to the hall. She was an actress, with an engagement for the provinces in her pocket. She, however, accepted Christ, threw up her engagement on the Monday, found other employment, and was for years a faithful worker and valued member of our choir.

During one summer we held a six weeks' mission in Hyde Park without missing a night. One of the earliest converts was a Mrs. D——. She brought her husband, who also was converted; then her sister and her husband, who also accepted Christ. The blessing spread to every member of the household, and also to other relations and friends. Mrs. D—— asked at one of the meetings that special praise might be offered, as she knew "of twenty-four distinct cases of conversions in her own circle of relations or friends." We rejoice to know that this friend and her relations still follow our blessed Lord.

The following case is from a letter received:—

"I was a barman, and left the business convinced that it was not the right thing for me to do. I spent the last penny I had in the world, and, though well-dressed, I walked the streets of London for several nights, till I resolved to drown myself. Hurrying one evening to the Serpentine bridge in Hyde Park I waited, hoping that there would be no one about, but persons kept crossing and re-crossing, and I had no chance to jump over unobserved. How I cursed the people and myself that I could not do what I wished. I waited till I was tired; still I saw no chance, and then walked towards the Marble Arch. A sound of harmonious singing was wafted across the park, and walking in the direction whence the sound proceeded, I saw a large meeting, and on reaching it, listened, both to the singing and to the preaching. I followed to the hall, was spoken to by one of the workers, who prayed with me; and that evening, deeply repenting of the awful sin I had contemplated, and grateful indeed to God for his matchless grace, I gave my heart to God, and have since been seeking to win others to Him. I soon found employment, and am now in full work, and work which is far more congenial to my new life."

SANTO, NEW HEBRIDES.—Rev. J. Annand, of the Canadian Presbyterian Mission, writes:—To us who live among the same people week after week, year after year, the progress made appears slow, but to all our visitors our success here seems real. Certainly, to outward appearance, our natives are doing fairly well. On the Sabbath no persons visit their places of labour. Neither fishing nor hunting is now thought of, but the house of God is frequented. A very fair percentage of the people attend the services.



* The cases I have cited are naturally those that have come under my personal observation; doubtless other workers in the open air could furnish many similar instances

A NOTED BRAHMIN CONVERT.

Miss Margaret W. Leitch, of Jaffna, Ceylon, reports the conversion of a Brahmin of distinction. We give the substance of the story, which may be found in detail in the November issue of The Illustrated Missionary News:—

The name of this converted Brahmin is Seelhara-nantha-swamy. He is about fifty years of age, and a native of Parputy-puram, a village in the Nizam's dominions, in Central India. Like the Apostle Paul, he could boast of the observance of the most minute requirements of the religion of his parents, and at length took his place as a teacher of the Brahmins.

Soon after he took the ascetic vow he went to Benares and dwelt there five years. Subsequently he went further north to a place near the source of the River Ganges at the foot of the Himalayan mountains, where he was seven years in penance and meditation. A portion of the night in this stage is invariably spent in an undisturbed sitting posture, with both the eyes immovably looking at the top of the nose, constantly muttering worship to the Brahm, or God. According to the assurances of his guru (teacher) he was to be freed at the expiration of seven years from all tempting desires and to be filled with peace and happiness. When the time came for this result, he looked into his heart, and it was evil and unhappy as ever. He was deeply grieved and disappointed, and went to his guru to acquaint him with the failure. His reply was, "Wait; the growth of a child is only gradual; continue longer in meditation."

So he spent one more year in penance. Beginning to suspect the truth of the old system, he travelled southward and came to the Central Province. While there one afternoon, as he was walking with some Brahmin followers, he met a missionary engaged in street preaching in the Hindi language. His words drew his attention, and he listened to him with deep interest, for they were on the subject which had perplexed him. On the day following he stealthily visited the missionary, who read and explained to him our Lord's conversation with Nicodemus, and also gave him a copy of St. John's Gospel, with several tracts in Hindi.

Light began to dawn upon him. Travelling by rail still further, he reached Poona, and there met a catechist belonging to the Church Missionary Society, who had originally been a Brahmin. This man gave him a book written by another Brahmin convert, containing a comparison between the Shastras of the Hindus and the Christian Bible. The reading of this book added more light; yet it produced no thorough change in the man. He was reluctant to abandon his ancient religion, and sought to strengthen his faith by going on a pilgrimmage to the holy places, and crossed over to Jaffna, in Ceylon.

He landed in Jaffna in June, 1890, and hearing of Pastor Eliatamby, in the adjoining village of Panditerippa, made several visits to him. Through these visits his remaining doubts in the way of redemption through Jesus Christ were cleared. He began to associate with Christians, and had even been seen eating with them. This act aroused the Brahmins who had entertained him, and they entreated him to quit the country. They said to him, "We fell at your feet as our guru, the people know that we reverenced you; if you turn Christian, it will be the greatest disgrace that could be inflicted upon us. Go back to India, and we will bear all the expense and accompany you across the water." This failing, they began to abuse and threaten him, saying that they might themselves do him no harm, but their followers in the land were bigoted and might one day "nip off his head." Then he declared himself openly a Christian, and commenced gradually to preach the glad news of salvation.

"He is very intelligent," says Miss Leitch, "and extraordinarily fond of reading. He reads and understands seven languages. He has been with us for about eleven months. About two months ago he publicly professed Christ, and received the rite of baptism in our church at Batti-Cotta, accompanied by the missionaries and pastors of the three Protestant denominations. He is visiting the various villages and proclaiming the glad tidings of salvation. Several have been led by God's blessing on his efforts to see the truth of Christianity, and have made a public profession of their faith in Christ. He has also been preparing for circulation in Ceylon and India, among his former disciples, articles and tracts in refutation of Hinduism and in defence of Christianity. He is much opposed to caste distinctions, fond of reading the Scripture and scriptural books, apt to understand things and store them in his memory, and evidently destined to do a good work for Christ."

THE RUSSIAN STUNDISTS.

The following is from Mrs. Bishop's "Journeys in Persia and Kurdistan" in 1891 (John Murray. 2 vols.):—

"At the present time, when the persecution of the Stundists in Russia is attracting considerable attention, it may interest my readers to hear that one of the earliest promoters of the Stundist movement was Yacub Dilakoff, a Syrian, and a graduate of the Old American College. He went to Russia thirty years ago, and was so horrified at the ignorance and gross superstition of the peasantry that he studied Russian in the hope of enlightening them, and to aid his purpose became an itinerant hawker of Bibles. The 'common people heard him gladly,' and among both the Orthodox and the Lutherans prayer unions were formed, from which those who frequented them received the name by which they are known, from 'stunde,' hour.

"Dilakoff, whom the Stundists love to call 'our bishop,' has been thrown into prison several times, but on his liberation began to teach among the sect of the Molokans in the Crimea and on the Volga with such success that sixteen congregations have been formed among them. His zeal has since carried him to the Molokan colonies on the Amoor, where he has been preaching and teaching for three years with such remarkable results as to have received the title of a 'modern apostle.'"

FOREST GATE.—The convention here for the deepening of the spiritual life was a great success, in spite of unfavourable weather. The afternoon meetings were held in the Richmond Hall, attached to the Woodgrange Baptist Chapel, and the evening meetings in the Forest Gate Congregational Church. There were very large and earnest audiences. Among the speakers were Rev. G. D. Hooper, Rev. J. B. Figgis, Dr. C. Clemance, Rev. F. B. Meyer, Rev. F. C. Spurr, Rev. G. Turner, etc. A short but solemn consecration service, to which nearly the whole congregation remained, fitly and blessedly brought the convention to an end.

DEPTFORD MEDICAL MISSION.

In "A Crusade of To-day" Dr. Pring and his co-workers in the Deptford Medical Mission show the value of medical missions, and deal specially with the sad condition of things in Deptford. Some account is given of the origin of the mission and of the dispensary services, house-to-house work, and other operations. Many painfully interesting incidents are given, amongst them the following:—

A very sad case was that of a poor blind woman, living with her blind husband in one little room; she was the mother of nine children, none of whom had lived over the age of ten years. Her eyes had been operated upon when she was quite a child, and before the days of anæsthetics; she shuddered as she told me about it, and, although fifty years ago, she still retained a vivid recollection of the agony of those two futile operations. After conversing about her physical blindness I spoke about the "Light of the world," and the kingdom where there will be no blind eyes, and no need of the sun, for the Lamb will be the light thereof. Her face brightened in an instant, and as she raised her sightless orbs, she said, "I would not exchange the bright light of heaven for all the sights of this world."

"Keep your husband's strength up, and he will pull through. Give him frequently strong beef tea, and keep up a fire night and day." I did not mean to hurt the poor woman's feelings, but her eyes filled with tears as she looked at me and made no answer. I proceeded to sympathise with her, and to tell her that there was every hope of a speedy recovery, but still the tears stood in her eyes until, at last, they would run over. What can be the matter? The room looks so tidy and clean, with pretty ornaments here and there; surely they are not in want. Well, I asked the reason of her grief, and then out it came, half hesitatingly. "We've only been married twelve months, and he's been out of work, and now he's ill, and I shall have to begin to pawn the things already, or else, perhaps, he'll die." I shall not soon forget the depth of feeling in that "God bless you, sir," so quietly spoken, as I left that clean and neat one-roomed home.

A WASTED LIFE, BUT VICTORY AT LAST.

A sad case of a wasted life was one which I attended some time since. An elderly man whose mien and speech betrayed the fact that he had been in a better position than that of one who earned his scanty portion of daily bread by doing odd jobs. He had, I found, kept a school in a very good neighbourhood, and was reduced to his present position by drink. This one thing had engulfed every prospect and everything that makes like worth having. It was an Esau's bargain; a birthright sold to satiate an appetite. This man signed the pledge and kept it, through the help of a Power greater than that of his own enervated will, without which he would never have succeeded. He lived yet one short year, one spell of victory over the enslaving passion of fifty years, and died repenting of the sin and the folly of a wasted life, but trusting fully in Him who said—"Him that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out." Thank God there are no limitations in the glad promise, "To him that overcometh I will give a crown of life."

"TOMMY."

Tommy's lines are not cast in pleasant places. His home is not the brightest or the happiest; he does not always get enough to eat, but he is a jolly little fellow. His mother's careworn face is very sad, and her eyes are filled with tears as she stoops to smooth the pillow of her restless child, and moisten the parched lips with a little water.

His father is "on the drink," and has not been home for several days, and the money so much needed for the poor child is being spent at the public-houses. I think if it had not been for the Medical Mission, Tommy's bright laugh might never have been heard again. Day after day the mission nurse goes in and out. the mission medicine stands by the bed-side, milk and beef-tea are sent from the mission to supply the needs of the sick child, while he is wrapped in flannels sent from the mission clothing store. At last the crisis is reached, the short, painful cough gets better, the pinched, wan face of our little patient gets brighter, and Tommy sits up in bed looking at a mission picture book, with a bunch of flowers brought by some ladies from the mission by his side. After a while, Tommy's father comes home, and cannot understand why those mission people should be so kind to his neglected child, and by the bedside of that pale-faced boy promises to give up the drink. Tommy gets quite well, his mother looks glad, his father keeps sober, the home is tidier, and we trust may yet be brightened by the rays of the Sun of Righteousness, and the healing streams of Divine grace.

Details follow of the labour of the nurse and the lady helpers, of the relief work, of the Bible classes, lodging-house, and open-air services, and other operations, and the whole concludes with a stirring plea for help on behalf of the Mission, which is situated at 188, High-street, Deptford, S.E.

PERSECUTED JEWS IN ROUMANIA.

The accounts which reach us from a perfectly trustworthy source as to cruel persecution of Jews going on in Roumania are very serious. Evictions of Jews in thousands are being made, with the intention (and effect) of driving them out of the kingdom altogether. Some 30,000 who have hitherto lived in the country and in villages are being ejected, and forced by arbitrary decree to go into the cities. Within ten days two hundred and fifty families have arrived in Jassy (which has already 50,000 Jews), suddenly reduced to beggary. A still larger number were under notice of eviction last Sunday week. A petition to the Prime Minister for leave to remain in their homes till winter should be over was refused.

A sad case is reported, in which the mother of the family died within six hours, from fits brought on by the fright she had endured when turned with her children out of their home, in the father's absence. Another woman was taken with her infant nine days old, wrapped in a sheet, placed in a rough cart, and driven away. In this, and in other cases, the official who carried out the eviction locked the doors, not allowing the furniture and effects to be taken by their owners. In another instance, farm produce and seven cows were thus seized. In other cases the peasantry were prevented (some of them in the very act) from paying their just debts to the poor Jews, and in others, lads left in charge by their fathers, while the latter went to appeal for mercy, were cruelly beaten and marched off to prison. One Jew is believed to be dying from a beating inflicted by order, and in the presence of, an official notorious for his brutal treatment of Jews.

The winter is now setting in. It is most distressing to think of helpless men, women, and children, old and young, feeble and sick, thus hunted and done to death by illegal process. Publicity given to the facts may stir up public opinion, and move the persecutors to stay their hands. What is to become of the fugitives? Almost every country is closed against them. We are in great anxiety as to the refugees in Palestine, whose numbers increase as fresh companies arrive of helpless fugitives from Russia.

Mr. Scott-Moncrieff has seen the misery of the thousands in Palestine unable to get work, and who have to face the coming winter's cold, the storms of wind, and rain, and snow, without food, fuel, shelter, and clothing. He has visited Constantinople, Smyrna, and Salonica, and has everywhere found the thousands of refugees allowed to land by humanity of the Turkish Government, but starving and dying of disease caused by want. Mr. Scott Moncrieff, with Mr. Murray, visited many of these distressed people in Smyrna, and speaks of their "silent despair."

For these, and for all who look to us for Christian sympathy and aid, we appeal, if only that the morsel of bread and the cup of water may be given, in token of Christian sympathy, to those who till now have known nothing but ill-treatment at the hands of professing Christians.

Y.P.S.C.E.—Ten new societies have been registered in England, bringing the total up to 372 in the British section of the organisation.

IRELAND.—A correspondent requests us to urge Christian men and women, as missionaries and humble workers, to work in this country as Scripture readers, going from place to place, independent of creed, sect, and everything else but Christ and souls. The land and the people are open to such workers now to a very remarkable extent.

INCIDENTS AMONG PRISONERS.

The rescue work carried on by the St. Giles Christian Mission amongst prisoners and convicts as well as the rescue-preventive work amongst boys committed on a first offence, and likely, if left to themselves, to ripen into full-blown criminals goes on actively at the prison gates and the Brooke street office, where Mr. Wheatley daily spends hours interviewing men and lads anxious to live honestly and devising measures for their help. The work is toilsome and arduous, but the results are of the most cheering nature. I have been looking over numerous letters and inquiring into some illustrative cases, and out of the many which have passed under my notice may briefly outline three:—

A young man who fell through gambling, having suffered imprisonment, was got hold of by the St. Giles' Christian Mission, and on token of repentance was helped to a situation, writes: "I am deeply grateful to God for his goodness. My sin and punishment will ever be borne in mind. I trust now to do all in my power to serve Him faithfully and proclaim Him crucified. Accept my grateful thanks for your kindness. I pray God to bless your mission greatly to many fallen ones."

Another, who has gone on well for some time writes:—"Two years ago I served a term in Wandsworth Prison. I have to thank your valuable mission for the kind help granted, not only for the practical and monetary assistance, but also for kind Christian help and advice. When all frowned upon me, you were the means of putting me on my feet. You will be glad to know I hold now as responsible a position as when I fell."

A gentleman who had interested himself in the case of a poor erring man, writes to say he is now going on well, and gives promise of a new and changed life.

These, as I have said, are but illustrations of many such. They evidence real, deep, and abiding results amongst a class long abandoned as beyond hope. Such rescue work, however, means cost; not simply pains, labour, and love, which Mr. Wheatley and his helpers so willingly and wisely bestow, but also pecuniary. The outcome of such service is a genuine gain to the nation; but it means money, and it is much to be regreted that the mission is in great straits for funds. This surely is deplorable when one considers not only what has been done but what has now to be done for the rescue of those who have fallen into crime. Unless they are to be left to go on in sin, means must be provided to enable this fruitful Prisoners' Branch to be carried on. Communications should be made to the Superintendent of the St. Giles' Christian Mission, Mr. William Wheatley, 29, Brooke-street, Holborn, London, E.C.

A GLORY ECHO.

I know who died for me;
I know who paid the price;
I know who set me free
From sin, its stain and vice;
And so my ransomed life must sing
A glory echo to its King!

I know I am so weak
I cannot stand alone;
The daily strength I seek
Is given from a Throne;
And so my risen life must sing
A glory echo to its King!

I know that trial may come.
I know that doubts will rise;
This is the training home
For one beyond the skies.
And all my ransomed life must sing
A glory echo to its King.

I know not what the years
Are bringing fast to me;
The meaning of the tears
I may not always see;
But yet my ransomed life must sing
A glory echo to its King!

For underneath there lies
One sweet, untroubled thought,
Which drowns earth's poor outcries:
"Both life and soul are bought!"
And so my ransomed life will sing
A glory echo to its King.

A HINDU LADY'S LETTER.

(Concluded from last week.)

HINDU SUPERSTITIONS.

The Hindus, as a race, are very superstitious. If a cat runs across the road when a man starts on an errand, he will consider it a very bad omen and stop from proceeding any further. If a lizard chirps when two or three are talking on any subject, they will at once stop their conversation and consider the chirping as favourable or unfavourable to the subject of the conversation, according to the direction from which the lizard chirped. If one sneezes when a subject is under discussion, it is considered a bad omen. But if it is repeated a second time, then it is a good omen. There are auspicious and inauspicious days in each year, and auspicious and inauspicious hours in each day. The inauspicious hours of each day are as follow:—

Sunday—from 4.30 p.m. to 6 p.m.
Monday—from 7.30 a.m. to 9 a.m.
Tuesday—from 3 p.m. to 4.30 p.m.
Wednesday—from 12 noon to 1.30 p.m.
Thursday—from 1.30 p.m. to 3 p.m.
Friday—from 10.30 a.m. to 12 noon.
Saturday—from 9 a.m. to 10.30 p.m.

When they have marriages or ceremonies to perform they first go to an astrologer and consult him regarding the most auspicious day and hour, and fix the ceremony on the day and hour given by the astrologer, whether it be during the day or in the dead of night, irrespective of the inconvenience it may cause to all concerned. When they buy a cow or a horse or a bullock, the first thing they do is to look at the mark in the forehead, and if he has a bad mark they will not buy him, even if the animal is otherwise a good one, and the price cheap, for they have a superstition that the mark will bring them bad luck.

As an instance, I may mention that some years ago we had a good pony for sale. It was a nice-looking and hard-working animal, but those who came to buy would examine the marks on the pony, and then quietly go away without even making any offer, on the ground that it had bad marks. Though we assured them that we had the animal for several years, and that we did not experience any misfortune during the whole period, they would not change their mind, and only said that the case was perhaps different with Christians, but with them it was sure to bring misfortune.

They consider it a bad omen to meet a single Brahmin on the road, but it is a good omen to meet two instead of one.

I must not forget here to mention that there is a strong prejudice among Hindus against widows. The very fact that they have lost their husbands is a strong presumption that they are unlucky, and consequently they will not allow them to figure prominently on any occasion. In all their marriage ceremonies they will keep the widows in the background. They can't join other married women in their ceremonies or in any of the important functions in the house. From this you can imagine the state of the poor widows here. I have several girl widows under our instruction. These poor young widows are not allowed to remarry. Though the relatives and parents of these widows are anxious to get them remarried, yet they dare not attempt anything in this direction for fear of being excommunicated from their religion, and they have not sufficient moral courage to stand against all these persecutions.

In one of the families I visit, there is a pretty young girl of about thirteen years of age, who had the misfortune to become a widow when she was eleven. I often spoke to her people about her, and tried to induce them to have her remarried. The poor people were willing, but they were afraid of being excommunicated and made outcasts. For then they will have to stand alone, and no other young men will come forward to marry the other girls in the family.

I am afraid my letter is already too long, and that I will tax your patience if I should write more. I therefore refrain. In a future letter I shall endeavour to give you some idea of the dress, jewels, etc., worn by the people of South India, and of the system of caste which prevails here, which I believe is one of the greatest obstacles to the progress of Christianity in India.

Chituadrapeltah, Sept. 29.

A BOY'S LETTER.

A beautiful work amongst homeless and destitute children is carried on by Mr. L. K. Shaw, Strangeways, Manchester. He has been able to give many a poor lad a start in life. The other day he received a letter from one of them from Central America:—"A lad, after wandering about, hungry and wet to the skin, a stranger in a large city, laid himself down on the seats in front of the infirmary, and for the first time for months he prayed. He asked God to give him a home. Then something in him said, 'If God give you a home, what would you give Him?" Nearly despairing, he said, 'Oh, my God, I give you my life.' He fell asleep and was woke up by a policeman, who gave him some hot coffee at a stall, and said: 'You just go to the Boys' Refuge, and tell them all about yourself; but, mind, if you try your tricks with them, they'll have you out neck and crop.' Next night that lad slept in a bed. You will guess who he was, and after that proof of God's goodness my wish is to do some good to the dear old place. Here every one is Roman Catholic, and they go to confession, but I say, 'I take the road God led me to, and I am going to go that way till further orders; I confess night and morning to God, and not to man.' I have been told, 'If you die they won't bury you, because you are not a Catholic.' But I say that does not matter, for 'Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord.'"

We hope God will raise up some kind friend to this brave lad in that distant country.

AMONG THE KABYLES.

On a bright warm October morning, not unlike a summer day in dear old Scotland, I started on foot, with staff in hand and basket containing Bible and medicine, for one of the hitherto unvisited villages of Kabylia. After a pleasant walk along a plain covered with olive trees, with their oily berries bending down the slender branches, I came to the bed of what must be a big river in winter, but which when I crossed had but two or three tiny streams. Crossing these, I passed two villages which I had already visited. Going through the second of these I met two Kabyle men, who turned and asked if I were a doctor. On learning that I had medicine, and ascertaining the price at which these medicines could be had (without money and without price), they told me of a brother in their village, to which they were going, whom they would like me to see, offering to send a mule for me another day and conduct me to their village. Learning that their village was only about an hour and a-half distant (after their calculation, which I found to be much within the mark), I agreed to go with them and pass the night there. My basket was at once taken by one of them, and thus somewhat relieved, I stepped out with these brave mountaineers. The hill was long and the sun was high in the heavens, and though it was an October day, I was conscious of streams of perspiration running down my forehead, and otherwise making me feel like one in a Turkish bath.

On we went until, the hill top reached, we looked down into the valley, and there counted several large villages of the tribe of the Beni Mellikeneh, among which was pointed out to me the village of Jaggechen—my destination.

Just on entering the village one of my Kabyle companions led the way into an empty house in the corner of a field, which served as a kind of store-house during the fig season. Shortly after our arrival, my other "compagnon de voyage" came in with another Kabyle with a table and chair for my use.

A plate of grapes and a Kabyle water-jug were brought in, and I refreshed myself a bit before beginning business. Several men had now come in to see the "Aroumi" (Frenchman). I lost no time in explaining my mission to them, and told them the Gospel story—after which I sang in Kabyle, "God so loved the world." Medicines were asked for and given, along with the prayer that God for Jesus' sake would give healing.

These people are sometimes deceived even by their own co-religionists. They mentioned that some time ago a native doctor visited the place and sold medicines at a high price, which had proved useless. One man had given more than twelve shillings (fifteen francs) for some eye lotion. It was this man that I was specially invited to come and see. When these men heard how I gave medicine they appeared very grateful. One of them promised me almost everything if my medicines proved helpful. Others brought eggs and raisins and put them down before me on the table. One poor man almost obliged me to take a halfpenny, as he had nothing else to offer.

I went to a leading Marabout's house—that is, the house of a specially superior religious Kabyle—to see a young man who was ill. This house I found to be one of several owned by this nice-looking Marabout and his brother, in which they lodge and entertain young Kabyle students who come to study the Koran, the Bible of the Mohammedans.

In a clean room and on a neat and clean mattress I found the sick student. After making up some medicine for him, I explained to him, in the presence of one of these Marabouts, the Gospel, and prayed with him. He shook my hand warmly on leaving, and accepted a copy of the Gospel in Arabic.

Leaving this native college, I was conducted to the dwelling-house of my Kabyle host. Here I found the table and chair had been transported from the little hut I had occupied during the earlier part of the afternoon. A native oil lamp was lit, and soon a piled-up dish of native food, "couscous," with plenty of sauce, &c., was brought in, besides part of a fowl. This latter I had to carve with my fingers, as knives and forks do not enter into their dinner service. I heartily enjoyed my supper, which wound up with a cup of native black thick coffee.

Scarcely had I finished supper when the room filled up with Kabyles, who desired me to read to them from my Book. Although tired and more ready to lie down and rest than to read, I felt that the desire to hear had enabled me to cast aside for the moment any feeling of weariness, and I read and spoke to them for nearly an hour. One man, a shepherd, came close up to me and kept looking into my face while I read to him and others the tenth of John, about the Good Shepherd. Even when I had done I was asked by this shepherd to go on reading about the Good Shepherd.

At length my hearers, knowing I was tired, withdrew, while my host spread his best garments on the ground for me to lie on, and made up a wonderfully good bed, though it was hard and lively too. Sleep seemed to forsake me, as the rats overhead and the position of matters beneath vied with each other in keeping me awake. Twice some four-footed creature crossed my pillow in the dark. I was not allowed to sleep alone, as my host and another man shared the same room.

Next morning at daybreak I heard my kind host up and at his prayers. When I rose he brought me in a cup of coffee, which constituted my breakfast. With difficulty I got through the village, as one and another begged for medicine. Doubtless many from that place will find their way here to Akbou for medicine.

Accompanied by the mayor of one of these villages, I walked to the French village called Tazmalt, having opportunities on the way of making known the Gospel to my fellow-traveller, who, though the mayor of his village, condescended to carry my basket.

If young men who love the Saviour, and who possess health and strength, only knew the joy of such itinerating work in virgin soil, surely they would not withhold their services where they are so sorely needed, and where such work brings its own special reward.

Mr. Moody at Oxford.

[FROM SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS]

The evangelist had a splendid reception at Oxford. Nothing else could have stirred Oxford, both "town and gown," so deeply. The spirit of earnest prayerful desire, and of large expectancy, grew with the preparatory prayer meetings day by day, as the numbers in attendance also did. All believed that a great blessing was in store, and that Mr. Moody's Master would come with him, and manifest Himself through the instrumentality of his servant. As on the Day of Pentecost, the outside world caught the sound of what was passing in the upper room, and multitudes gathered when the hour approached.

Efforts had been made to gather large audiences from the very beginning, but, as it turned out, such efforts were scarcely required. Without invitation tickets, the people crowded the Corn Exchange on the evening of Friday. An equally crowded meeting was held simultaneously in the Town Hall adjacent in the evening, Lord Kinnaird presiding, and several local men taking part. The scene in the Corn Exchange was most impressive. Every spot was occupied. A large space was reserved for the "undergrads" immediately in face of Mr. Moody, and this was fully occupied with the "men," whose attention and interest were preserved throughout. Mr. Moody was at his best. His afternoon address on "The grace of God that bringeth salvation," and which comes of nothing else, was very emphatic and convincing. The evening address on "The Necessity of the New Birth" abounded with pointed statements, racy illustrations, and sallies of dry humour. The straightforward, manly appeals evidently took, with the young men in particular.

At the close Mr. Moody requested those who wished to hear more of the matter, and to have it further brought home to them, to go with him into the Town Hall, which had in the meanwhile been cleared of the overflow meeting. The Hall was speedily filled, and Mr. Moody continued his appeals, inviting those who were resolved to give themselves up to Christ, or who wished to be prayed for that they might be enabled to do so, to rise. Many did so, including a number of the "grads" with their college gowns. Some of these afterwards received the personal attention of the workers, ministers and others, who were scattered among the audience.

On Saturday afternoon the Wesley Memorial Church, capable of seating some twelve hundred people, was well filled. The service was with a special view to Christian workers, and Mr. Moody addressed them on their need of the Holy Spirit as a power for service. There was a large attendance of clergymen and Nonconformist ministers, and prayers were offered by both; the prayers, as well as the hymns, all bearing on the subject in hand. It was known that Mr. Moody laid great stress on this service as the pivot on which the real success of the mission would turn.

Saturday night, and that a pouring wet one, did not diminish the attendance. The "grads" were there again in force, and several distinguished personages were on the platform. The service took the usual form, and Mr. Moody thrust home upon the conscience the solemn fact that "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap"; maintaining that there are sins, which, though they may be forgiven, a man must suffer the consequences of.

The young men paid marked attention, and at the close streamed into the after meeting; some of them, when the question was put, "Who will break off his sins?" rising with others replied, "I will." Looking upon the upturned faces of these youths, one could not but think that here was the answer to many of their parents' prayers and loving entreaties.

On Sunday afternoon both the Corn Exchange and the Town Hall were packed. Mr. Moody spoke at the first with great effect on Christ's call to the weary and heavy laden. The evening meeting for men was a striking sight. Some two thousand were jammed into the Corn Exchange. About four hundred graduates were present. Mr. Moody's subject was "Excuses." At the after meeting 130 gave in their names as seekers, fifty-two of whom were undergraduates. The general meeting in the Town Hall was equally crowded. Lord Kinnaird led the meeting, and several of the town's ministers took part. Up to Sunday evening about 300 had given in their names as seekers.

It was announced at the Sunday meetings that Dr. Pentecost might be expected to assist at the overflow meetings on Monday, and to take up Mr. Moody's work for a day or two after Monday. It may be observed here that an excellent choir, under the direction of Mr. Grubb, has led the singing. Mr. A. J. Mayers, Lord Bennet, and Miss Agnew have sung solos.

As usual, the last day was the great day of the feast. The interest that had culminated day by day became enthusiastic. The singing was yet more hearty, and, it may be added, more heartfelt, the prayer yet more fervent, and the attention yet more engrossed.

The theme at the afternoon meeting was the boundless one of the love of God to man, and Mr. Moody's simplest statements were forceful, and his illustrative anecdotes most touching, while his appeals went home to many a heart. The closely-packed assembly in the afternoon was, if possible, still more closely packed in the evening. Some little disturbance arose from the pressure of the crowd, but under Mr. Moody's skilful management it was suppressed. Rev. F. J. Chavasse, Principal of Wycliffe Hall, offered a very fervent prayer.

Mr. Moody addressed the audience, with special reference to young men, and to believing with the heart the Lord Jesus and confessing Him with the mouth and never being ashamed of Him. It was a very urgent and direct appeal to confess Christ. At the close he called on the body of young men to rise if they were willing to confess Christ; in response to which all except three, who retained their seats, responded to the call. Mr. Moody called on Dr. Pentecost to take up the work, and with great effect he took it up, urging on all the question of Pilate—What, then, shall I do with Jesus, who is called Christ? You must do something; every man must, said the preacher. It is the crisis with which every man is confronted. The ages have proved that it is so. The question is not What must I do with Jupiter? that has been settled. Nor What must I do with Plato? He is dead, though something may be done with his writings. Never was there an age in which Christ was so essentially alive as at this day. He then instanced the three positions that might be taken. That of the infidel, which is at least straightforward, and can be understood; that of the man who believes and confesses; and that of the man who declares himself neutral, and this he could not understand. With powerful arguments he urged decision on the side of Christ, showing the folly of delay, as well as the peril of it. The whole service was grand and powerfully impressive.

Among those who have attended the meetings at one or more of the services, have been Canon Fremantle, and, of course, Canon Christopher with his horn, eager to catch every word, and several of the city rectors and others of the clergy from the country, beside numbers of the leading Nonconformists. High Churchmen were, of course, conspicuous by their absence, even curiosity bringing but few. The precious fruits of Christian union have appeared throughout, led by the large-hearted Canon Christopher, by whose persistency the visit of Mr. Moody to Oxford was brought about. The Evangelical clergy have worked in brotherly accord with the ministers of all denominations of like spirit. The result has been a blessed contagion which has spread through all the assemblies. The people have been of one mind and of one heart. It is to be hoped that this oneness will be both maintained and manifested in the city, where there is so much reason why Christians of like feeling should be one in expression.

Arrangements are made for continuing special services during the week in several of the churches and chapels simultaneously. The united committee will also continue to hold periodical meetings for special prayer, and for the sake of the opportunity that may arise for further evangelistic effort.

The marked difference between the rowdy reception which Mr. Moody met with ten years ago from the undergraduates of Oxford, and the respectful hearing which was accorded to him during the four days of his recent visit, is full of cheer. It not only indicates that Mr. Moody is better known and, therefore, more highly esteemed, but that evangelistic work is better understood and is regarded with the respect to which it is entitled.

Many friends had come, some from long distances to take part in the after-meetings. No one who was present will ever forget last Sunday afternoon and evening. On each occasion an overflow meeting, which itself overflowed, was conducted in the Town Hall by Lord Kinnaird and Major Liebenrood and many interesting cases of credible conversion were met with.

Mr. Moody's meeting on Sunday night in the Corn Exchange was for men only, seats being reserved for University men. The subject chosen was the "Excuses" made by those invited to the Marriage Supper, in Luke xiv. The address was full of points quaintly conceived and skilfully applied. Mr. Moody said that nothing impressed and inspired him so much as a meeting of men and towards the close of his discourse he was himself so deeply moved that for a minute or two which seemed much longer, he paused unable to proceed. Then with broken voice he urged upon his awed and solemnised audience the acceptance of the invitation with which he had been charged.

After some very racy comments on the excuses made by the three men in the parable, he spoke of eight common excuses which had often been made to himself. (1) There are so many things in the Bible I don't understand. (2) I don't believe in election. (3) I am afraid I couldn't hold out. (4) There are so many hypocrites amongst Christians. (5) I have no time now. I'll see you again. (6) I don't like this kind of preaching; it's too sensational. (7) I don't feel like it. I should like to go to the feast, but I haven't got the right kind of feeling. (8) I can't believe, I have intellectual difficulties. All these were charged upon his hearers, but two were added to which he knew they would not openly confess (9) Lack of moral courage; and (10) some one besetting sin. All were replied to, sometimes with sparkling wit, sometimes with indignant vehemence sometimes with subdued emotion and tender appeal until at last two forms of reply to God's invitation were suggested, one of which they would practically return:—

"To the Almighty King of Heaven,—While sitting in a religious meeting on Sabbath night, November 20, 1892, I received a pressing invitation through one of thy servants, to sit down at the Marriage Supper of thy Son. I pray Thee have me excused."

Not a man here would sign, but if you leave this house without accepting Christ you will practically make that reply. Will you, then, return this other answer?

"To the Almighty King of Heaven.—While sitting in a religious meeting on Sabbath night, November 20, 1892, I received a pressing invitation through one of thy servants to sit down at the Marriage Supper of thy Son. I hasten gladly and thankfully to obey thy gracious command."

Four texts were successively put before them John i. 12; v. 24; Isa. xii. 2; Rev. xxii. 17; and one after another the questions were asked, Will you receive Him? Believe Him? Trust Him? Take Him? And to each responses came quickly and decisively, "I will." "I will." "I will." "I will." I have never attended a meeting where the power of God's Spirit was more manifest.

After the evening meeting on Monday, Dr. Pentecost followed up his address with a very telling appeal. Practically the entire audience remained to this second service, and although the evangelist had already spoken twice at overflows, his vigour was unabated and his words struck forcibly home. Addressing himself to University men, he pressed the questions, What think ye of Christ? and What evil hath he done? with such sound reasoning and argumentative weight that the impression made was very deep.

But it was after the gathering had been formally dismissed that the most remarkable scene presented itself. An undergraduate rose spontaneously to testify to the blessing he had received during the mission. His example was forthwith followed by others. Then Dr. Pentecost asked all who thus desired to confess Christ to stand upon their chairs. Such a sight as ensued Oxford has never seen before.

Many are hoping that arrangements will be completed for Dr. Pentecost to visit the university next term, it being felt that his line of teaching and his method of presenting the truth would, in a special manner, command the respectful attention of the men.

REV. CHARLES HENRY WALLER, D.D.,

PRINCIPAL OF THE HIGHBURY COLLEGE OF DIVINITY.

WHETHER regarded from the standpoint of his work at Mildmay, or for his co-operation with the Bible classes of the Young Women's Christian Association, or as the Principal of an institution which prepares men for the ministry of the Church of England on a solid evangelical basis, or as the author of several religious and Scriptural works, the name of Rev. Charles Henry Waller is sure of a sympathetic welcome amongst our readers.

CHARLES HENRY WALLER was born in 1840. His father was a younger son of Rev. Harry Waller, of Hall Barn, Beaconsfield, Bucks., the residence of his ancestor, Edmund Waller, the poet. His mother was the eldest daughter of Mrs. Cameron, whose writings, with those of her sister, Mrs. Sherwood, were so much loved by the children of the last generation. He was educated at Bromsgrove, under Dr. J. D. Collis, and gained a scholarship at University College, Oxford, in his nineteenth year. He took a first class in moderations and a second class in mathematical moderations in 1861. He graduated B.A. in 1863, taking a second-class lit. hum., and third class in mathematics. Three years after taking his degree he gained the first Denyer and Johnson's University Scholarship in theology, and proceeded to the M.A. degree in 1867.

At the Bishop of London's ordination in 1864 he was appointed to read the Gospel, as the result of his taking the first place in the examination, and was subsequently licensed to the curacy of St. Jude's, Mildmay Park. Rev. W. Pennefather gave him his title, but the strain of parochial work proved too much for his health, and he was obliged to resign the curacy. After a few months' rest Mr. Christopher, of St. Aldate's, Oxford, recommended him to Dr. Boultbee as the first tutor of the London College of Divinity, and from that time he has laboured to send out men fully equipped for the work of the ministry. The college work left his Sundays free, and Mr. Waller, therefore, undertook the Sunday curacy of Christ Church, Mayfair, in 1865. He resigned this charge in 1869 to make way for a resident curate. He was then reader for a short time at Curzon Chapel for the present Bishop of Winchester. In 1870 he took charge of St. John's Episcopal Chapel, Hampstead, and to mention only one branch of his work, the results of his ministrations to the local postmen remain to this day. The double work of the college and the congregation proved too much for his strength, and after five years an alarming illness obliged him to resign in the end of 1874 his ministry at Hampstead. In 1880 the Bishop of Liverpool asked him to be his senior examining chaplain, an office which he still holds. Two years later he was appointed McNeil Biblical Professor at Highbury, and on the lamented death of Dr. Boultbee in 1884, Dr. Waller was appointed principal of the college where he had worked for nineteen years as tutor.

Any sketch, therefore, of Dr. Waller would be incomplete which did not take account of the chief work of his life in connection with the London College of Divinity. The College suffers from a dual name. It is officially styled "London College of Divinity," but it is often mentioned in various ordination lists by its secondary name, "St. John's Hall, Highbury"; and as all Churchmen do not know that these are different names of one and the same institution, it is not surprising that in statistics of the number of men ordained at different seasons of the year the number of men coming from this excellent college has been reduced and divided between what appeared to be two different institutions. Another cause of confusion is the liability to think that this college, which is often popularly called Highbury College, is identical with the Church Missionary College at Islington, which is quite a different institution, intended solely for candidates for the mission field. The present Church of England College at Highbury stands on the site of the Highbury Independent College, which was removed from Hoxton in 1826.

As many of our readers are interested in reminiscences of that college, a few words may be given to that institution before passing on to speak of the present Church College. The Independent institution began in a house at Mile End, rented in 1783 by Dr. Addington, for a few students to be trained for the ministry. The site at Highbury was purchased for £2,100, by the treasurer, Mr. Wilson, and given to the charity. The building cost upwards of £15,000. "The Congregationalist College at Highbury, an offshoot from the one at Homerton," says Mr. Howitt, "was built in 1825, and opened in September, 1826, under the superintendence of Drs. Harris, Burder, and Halley for the education of ministers of that persuasion. In 1850 the buildings and property of the college of Highbury were disposed of to the Metropolitan Church of England Training Institution, and the business of the college transferred to New College, St. John's Wood, into which the three dissenting colleges of Homerton, Coward, and Highbury, were consolidated."

The Metropolitan Training Institution was in turn transferred to Battersea, and the buildings at Highbury were purchased, and, under the name of St. John's Hall, Highbury, adapted for the use of the London College of Divinity.

Thus the mention of Highbury suggests at once the names of three different institutions which have done good work in the world of Christendom. But since 1865 Highbury has been the home of one of the best Church of England colleges in the kingdom. Indeed, as regards the theological course, it ranks second to none, the Universities included, and in the preliminary examination of candidates for holy orders, conducted by Oxford and Cambridge Universities, as well as in the various Bishops' examination lists, its students stand prominently high. In the practical work of the ministry it is no exaggeration to say that Highbury is a synonym for orthodoxy, earnestness, personal piety, and, as a rule, preaching ability. Its students have honourably distinguished themselves in parochial work in every diocese in the country, and its alumni have made their mark in literature as well as in the mission-field.

The college was founded and endowed by Rev. A. Peache and Miss K. Peache, at a cost to them of upwards of £100,000, for the purpose of training for the ministry of the Church of England suitable candidates, and also for affording systematic theological teaching to graduates of universities. Its fundamental principle is contained in the following extract from its trust-deed:—"The teaching and government shall always be strictly Protestant and evangelical, in conformity with the doctrines of the United Church of England and Ireland, as expressed in the thirty-nine articles, as now by law established, interpreted according to the plain and natural meaning thereof." The success of the college is due, humanly speaking, to the character of its first principal, the late Rev. Prebendary Boultbee, and to the men he associated with him on his teaching staff. Mr. Waller, who for nineteen years was the senior tutor, fairly won for himself a position in the field of Biblical exegesis, and it is owing very largely to his lectures that Highbury men are especially Bible students, and have such facilities in conducting and holding together large Bible classes throughout the country. The college buildings at Highbury are extensive and very complete, standing on about ten acres of ground. The course of study occupies three years, and the students undertake a considerable amount of Christian work in schools, and in conducting mission-room services, workhouse visitation, and other means of usefulness. Thus the ordained man from Highbury is fully equipped for the work of the ministry.

Last year the ordained and resident students of the college presented Mr. Waller with a testimonial, consisting of a handsome silver centre-piece and a sum of money, with which they requested him to take the degree of Doctor of Divinity. Mr. Waller's work at the college, and also in connection with the periodical examinations of the Bishop of Liverpool, naturally occupies his full time, but he is also in much request at various evangelical conferences throughout the country. He is a somewhat voluminous author. His "Grammar and Analytical Vocabulary of the Words of the New Testament," in two volumes, is one of his earliest works, and has been most useful to students. Dr. Waller's chief works are "The Names on the Gates of Pearl," a volume containing studies in the history of the twelve tribes of Israel; "The Silver Sockets and other Shadows of Redemption," being studies in Scripture; "Every-day Life, or the Uneventful Journey," and "When ye Pray, or Lessons on Prayer," two very thoughtful and suggestive books, full of instruction in personal piety and practical holiness; "The Authoritative Inspiration of Holy Scripture," with an introduction by the Lord Bishop of Liverpool. A "Handbook to the Epistles of St. Paul," written for the teachers of Bible classes for the Young Women's Christian Association, is worthy of extensive circulation. Among other works may also be mentioned Dr. Waller's "Notes on Deuteronomy and Joshua in Bishop Ellicott's Old Testament Commentary." There is a common ground between Dr. Waller and the majority of our readers which we thankfully record. His writings are characterised by a soundness of Divinity, an orthodoxy of utterance, an earnestness of purpose, and a spirituality of tone which are a combination unhappily too rare in the present day.

No record of Dr. Waller would be complete that did not mention his frequently expressed obligations to the late Dean Burgon, whose reverent and devout study of Holy Scripture influenced Dr. Waller's whole life, and made him from his undergraduate days a "Servant of the BOOK." He is, before all things, a Bible student. We ask our readers to unite with us in the prayer that he may be preserved in health and strength to carry on the great work to which he has consecrated his life.

ROME AND FREE SPEECH.

Sir,—There is a Roman Catholic society called "The Guild of our Lady of Ransom," which had the approval of the late Dr. Manning. In a letter to Rev. Dr. Hitchens, dated May 14, 1891, Rev. K. Vaughan wrote, "The Cardinal desires me to say that the scheme of the Society of Ransomers was not instituted by him, but, when laid before him, he gave it his approval." In his letter also of May 11, 1891, Dr. Manning, after saying that he did not approve of interfering with Protestant meetings at Exeter Hall, went on to say, "There is another kind of Protestant meeting in which scandalous and apostate priests [forgetting that he himself was one of these] and impostors describing themselves as ex-nuns falsely accuse the Catholic Church, etc.—these may be interfered with"

On Monday, Nov. 14, a lecture was delivered at Cambridge Heath, by the "Nun of Kenmare," Miss Cusack, on "Why I left the Church of Rome." At the beginning I explained, as chairman, that the object of the meeting was to hear a lecture, that no discussion would be allowed, but that if anyone wanted to ask any question, if it was sent up in writing, I promised that it should be answered by both question and answer being published in one of the local papers.

No one can assert that Miss Cusack is an impostor, and not an ex-nun. Her lecture was in great part taken up in proving from Romish authorised books what Rome actually teaches. She gave chapter and verse for all she said, having the actual books in her hand.

There were present some twenty Ransomers, who behaved in a most disgraceful manner, perpetually interrupting and refusing to obey the chair. They were treated with great forbearance, but persisted in giving a very clear object lesson of Rome's hatred of freedom of speech. Even during the concluding prayer they persisted in talking aloud.

After the lecture Miss Cusack's cab did not arrive, and another was procured, in which she drove off in an opposite direction to the one anticipated by the Ransomers, who were waiting for her (with a band which they had brought to disturb the meeting) at the end of the street. It was discovered the next day that the cab ordered did come, and that the Ransomers had taken out their knives and threatened to cut the harness, so the man had to drive away.

It is simply monstrous that such a state of things should be tolerated in a free country. Rome intends to take all and to give nothing.

There are two rules published in the monthly organ of the Guild, which is entitled "The faith of our fathers." The rules are:—1. There must be no interruption of the lecturer while he is speaking. 2. No disturbance either before or after the lecture is to be countenanced. The "Ransomer in charge" must support the chairman in preserving order.

Yours obediently,

W. P. Partridge,
Deputy Surgeon-General.

Beckenham, Nov. 16.

MRS. TANSER DAWSON has concluded a week's mission at Bexley Heath Wesleyan Chapel, the meetings being well attended. A large number passed through the enquiry room and confessed Christ as their Saviour.

SOLDIERS IN PORTSMOUTH.

On Wednesday last week the superintendence of the Portsmouth Soldiers' Institute was formally given over to Mr. J. Gelson Gregson by Miss Robinson. For that purpose a special gathering of the military and their friends was held in the Institute Hall. Mr. Gregson was formerly pastor of the Baptist Church, Kent-street, Portsea, and a member of the Portsmouth School Board, but of late years his principal work has been carried on in India.

Major-General W. Stirling, C.B., who occupied the chair, remarked that it was a matter of regret to him that he had not that evening with him some of the other trustees of that institution, that they might join in welcoming the new superintendent. The institution has been working for something like eighteen years with singleness of aim for the improvement of those for whom it was really intended. The superintendence and the management, and the raising of the enormous funds required for all the purposes connected, had fallen upon Miss Robinson. Mr. Gregson was no novice in preaching the Gospel or in camp and barrack life, and he now accepted the task of looking after the soldiers in that place, with the full consent of the trustees.

Miss Robinson assured those present that, so far as the house was concerned, there would be no alteration. The change was not a sudden one, for it was upwards of two years since she had placed her resignation in the hands of the trustees. On looking back at her work her heart and her thoughts were full of thankfulness to God. The arrangement, she explained, was that she should still reside in the house.

Mr. Gregson remarked that every soldier with whom he came in contact would be his friend in the truest and highest sense, but he wanted every man to know that there must be co-operation. Jealousy in general he hated, but jealousy in Christian work he abhorred as Satan himself; and though they did not want men to go about labelled as Christians, they wanted men to show their Christian profession in their lives.

General Sandwith spoke of the benefits conferred upon officers and men by the institute. He pleaded with the military to strengthen by prayer the hands of their new superintendent. Major Fawkes, in speaking of his four years' knowledge of the Soldiers' Institute, said if there was one thing more than another which had made him esteem Miss Robinson, it was that she had always acknowledged that the work was God's, and not hers.

As the soldiers passed out of the meeting Miss Robinson presented to each the book entitled "Yarns," her own composition. Mr. Gregson's address is: The Grand Parade, Portsmouth.

A MUCH-NEEDED SCHOOL.

There are 200,000 Pullayans in Travancore, and their condition is even worse than that of the parishes in the rest of the presidency of Madras. They work in the rice fields, are very poor, also ignorant in the extreme. The majority of the Pullayans are associated with the Anglican Church, but no boy from among them has been educated in one of the superior schools of the C.M.S.

A feeling of sympathy with this down-trodden people has of late been growing in Travancore, and the interest culminated in an enthusiastic meeting held in September last, in the Bungalow of the Cambridge Nicholson Institution, Cottayam. It was resolved to establish a central boarding school, in which, in addition to a sound elementary education, regular instruction should be given in such trades as will tend to bring the Pullayans more into contact with other men. The buildings and furniture will not, it is hoped, exceed 2000 rupees, or about £140, if paid in England. Students from the Normal School will attend to the teaching.

The treasurer of the enterprise is Rev. Jacob Thompson, M.A., of the C. N. Institute, Cottayam. Communications in England may be addressed to Rev. Handley Moule, Ridley Hall, Cambridge.

REST FOR YOUNG WOMEN.—"The Hawthorns," Framfield, near Uckfield, Sussex, is a small private Home of Rest for young ladies in business, post-office clerks, school teachers, etc. Particulars may be had from Miss H. Mason, at the Home.

The Revival in Ireland.

REV. JOHN McNEILL IN DUBLIN.

This gifted servant of God has continued his meetings in Dublin since the departure of Mr. Moody with a zeal and earnestness quite equal to that which characterised his illustrious predecessor. Great audiences gathered in Leinster Hall, Hawkins-street, daily from one till two p.m. The body of the building was reserved for University students and mercantile men generally, and was filled with a congregation which represented the intelligence and commercial enterprise of Dublin. The gallery was reserved for ladies. The Archbishop of Dublin occupied a chair on the platform at one of the meetings, and was surrounded by clerical representatives of all the Evangelical Church bodies in the city.

Mr. McNeill has a style of his own. His addresses abound with quaint and forcible sayings, and he illustrates his points with incidents quite as rich in humour and pathos as those which one enjoys in Mr. Moody's sermons. There is a force and ruggedness about his utterances which remind one of Carlyle. "Is it a thing to be surprised at," he exclaimed one day while preaching on the subject of the blind man in the ninth chapter of John, "for the Christ to have repaired that useless optic with clay, of which He made man at the beginning?" On another occasion when speaking of the unbelief of David which caused him to cry out, "I shall now perish one day by the hand of Saul," he exclaimed, "Drag out that doubt from your bosom, and tell it to God. Had David got down upon his knees," said the preacher, suiting the action to the word and bending his knee on the platform, "to express his fears, and say, 'O Lord, I shall one day perish by the hand of Saul,' the words would have died with a death rattle in his throat. You can neither say, pray, nor sing these words. You cannot make a song out of them. I defy Mr. Burke here," turning to his fellow-worker, "to sing them. If your doubts won't bear the light, away with them! If you don't, they'll get you into trouble."

Vast audiences assemble each night in the large wooden building constructed for Mr. Moody's mission in the Rotunda Gardens. The well-trained choir under Mr. T. K. Cowley sings from "New Hymns and Solos" for an hour before the meeting proper begins. Much interest is added to the proceedings by the sweet solos of Mr. Burke, "who was years ago," Mr. McNeill said jocularly one night, "an apprentice here in Dublin. I cannot tell you what he was apprenticed to, but if it was to singing his master has no need to be ashamed of him!" The stewards and the choir are composed largely of members of the Dublin Young Men's Christian Association, who are also constant in their attendance in the inquiry room.

Mr. McNeill has another experienced co-worker in the person of Mr. Merton Smith, who conducts daily the meeting for prayer in the Christian Union Buildings, Lower Abbey-street, at 11 a.m., and the men's meeting at 9 p.m., in the same place. The latter meeting has proved a valuable adjunct to the meeting at the Rotunda Gardens, and there is no doubt that a number have been led to seek God through the testimonies of the young men at this meeting. On Saturday nights a great temperance demonstration is conducted by Mr. Merton Smith, when all the leading temperance workers in the city rally round him. As a result, large numbers of men have taken the pledge and we trust have commenced to serve God also in their hearts and lives.

Mr. McNeill is expected to go on for another week in Dublin. He has won a name and affection for himself in the Irish metropolis, for he can speak to the Celtic nature of the people with a power and poetry which spring from his own kindred temperament. S. S. McC.

TIMES OF BLESSING IN THE NORTH.

At a time when the eyes of the whole political world are more or less fixed upon Ireland, it is particularly pleasing to know that God is doing a work which, if it continues to prosper and increase in depth and extent of influence, may well astonish those who are strangers to the power of the Gospel of Christ.

In many parts of the south and west of Ireland there has been a readier sale of the Scriptures on the public streets than has been known for many a day, and a Bible carriage has been allowed to pass about the country. In the north of Ireland things are looking especially hopeful. One cannot move in or out among Christians in this part of the country without being struck with the apparent desire in the hearts of so many for another such awakening as occurred in 1859. The general tone of the prayer meetings seems to indicate the coming showers of blessing.

At Ballymena, where the great revival of 1859 began, there is a remarkable work of grace going on. In September Mr. David Rea commenced a week's mission. For some five weeks the largest hall in the town, holding more than a thousand people, was crowded nightly by men and women eager to hear the Gospel. So greatly were the people convicted of sin that considerable difficulty was experienced in getting the hall cleared before midnight. Many left, but were too much distressed to go to their homes unsaved, and returned to the hall to cry to God for mercy. Others continued crying to God in their homes, and were able in the early hours of the morning to rest their souls upon the finished work of Christ. On Sundays especially, large numbers have been unable to get inside the hall.

After several weeks of continued strain of preaching night after night, and visiting and leading to Christ anxious souls in their own homes, Mr. Rea's health began to suffer and he was obliged to go away for a few days' rest. He returned to Ballymena again a few weeks ago. The Gospel Hall was again filled nightly, and on Sunday a larger hall was also filled. Good tidings are still reaching us, and some who are able to recollect the great revival of 1859 speak of the present awakening as in some respects as remarkable as that great movement. A friend writes: "They are having wonderful times in and about Ballymena; meetings more crowded than ever, places full long before the time of meeting, and a good many have been baptized."

Much blessing has followed the recent special Gospel effort in Belfast. Mr. Sims, of the United States, preached to crowded audiences in the Circus, and the meetings were continued in Victoria Hall another week.

Ragged School Union.

General Gordon's memory is still fragrant at the Gravesend Ragged School, where the great good man taught his rough lads, and won from them the revered name of "Kernel." The Chinese flags he presented to his old school adorned the walls on Wednesday evening last week, on the occasion of the Workers' soirée. There was a large attendance of friends, and a good deal of enthusiasm manifested. Major McKown appealed for helpers with the soup kitchen and halfpenny dinners, about to be resumed for the winter. Addresses were given by Mr. John Kirk and other friends.

A conference took place in the R.S.U. offices, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, on Thursday last, to which the workers had been specially invited. Mr. Charles Steinitz, the vice-chairman, opened the subject of sanitation under the title of "Healthy Homes and Safe Surroundings." He urged that much might be done in the local schools and missions to co-operate with the local authorities, and that an influence might be brought to bear upon the children on such elementary matters as cleanliness, fresh air and ventilation, light, and better cooking, all having a great effect on healthy homes and lives.

MADAME ANTOINETTE STIRLING has promised to sing at the W.C.T.U. Conference, which is to be held in Nottingham, December 13 and 14, at which Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard will be present, and give addresses.

BARNWELL MISSION, CAMBRIDGE.

The fourteenth anniversary of the Theatre Royal, Barnwell Mission, Cambridge, was held on November 17, and was well attended. The work is conducted on entirely unsectarian lines. The last year's report testifies to the continuance of the blessing which has been received through the preaching of the Gospel.

Rev. W. R. Mowll presided, and Mr. E. E. Vawser, hon. secretary, read a brief but excellent account of the work done. The speeches were interspersed with some bright singing and a cornet solo.

Rev. J. G. Dixon said there were three things necessary to a healthy condition of soul and body, good food, fresh air, and exercise. He urged upon his hearers to study prayerfully and meditatively the Word of God, to associate with Christian people, and to endeavour, by personal witness for Christ, to win souls for Him. He reminded his hearers of the saying of Rowland Hill, that the hedges of denominationalism should be cut down low enough so that all those who loved the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity could shake hands over the top.

Mr. Eames pressed home the heroism of life, and reminded all present that their daily duty faithfully discharged for the glory of God was sure of eternal recognition.

Mr. Griffin spoke of the necessity of a personal knowledge of Christ, which could only be obtained through the medium of the Word, by the teaching of the Holy Spirit.

Mr. Barton and Mr. Tarn also spoke. The latter touched upon the importance of aggressive Christianity, and concluded with an earnest appeal that each one would ask the question, "Am I on the Lord's side?"

Mr. W. K. Vawser, the hon. superintendent and treasurer, made a financial statement, and added humorously that, "as they were living in the fens, there was no need for hedges, and they could easily jump over the ditches." He referred to a dissolving view apparatus which had lately been purchased through the kindness of several friends, and which would be of great service in furthering the work of the mission. The Chairman concluded with a short address on the prayer, "Lord, save me." Altogether a very profitable evening was spent.

SEAMEN AT DUNKERQUE.

Sir,—There is a statement in a letter which appears in the issue of November 10 of your valuable and widely-read periodical, under the heading "Sailors at Dunkerque," which is so misleading that I cannot allow it to go unchallenged. The passage I allude to is this:—"Everything is done to facilitate the shipping interest, comparatively little is being done for the welfare of our merchant seamen." I maintain that a great deal indeed has been done in past years, and is being done now, for the welfare of our merchant seamen in this important port.

We have a Sailors' Home with a Seamen's Institute attached to it. Here there are comfortable reading rooms both for officers and men, well supplied with daily and weekly newspapers, magazines, periodicals, and books; writing materials are supplied free of charge, and here, free of all cost, to use your correspondent's words, "Sailors can come and go without encountering the ever-present temptation of drink." There is a large hall capable of seating some 200 persons, in which entertainments are given and religious services held, specially for sailors, regularly every week. The use of this hall is freely offered to any Christian worker who may wish to hold a meeting in it. The Institute is supported entirely by voluntary contributions, at a cost of upwards of £200 per annum. Then there is also my own work among the sailors, in part of which I have been cheerfully and ably assisted by not a few of our resident English families. I visit, as far as time and circumstances permit, both in summer and winter, every English ship, large and small, on its arrival in port. I converse with those on board whom I find disengaged; distribute great quantities of religious and moral literature among the various crews, and cordially invite the officers and men of each vessel to attend the religious services at the English Church, to make use of the reading-rooms and come to the entertainments, meetings, etc., which are so frequently held in the Seamen's Institute. In this way a large number of ships are visited every week, and I would humbly hope much good influence is brought to bear upon the several crews. I pay visits to the Sailors' Home almost every day, and often find opportunities of saying a word in season to those staying there. I visit regularly at the hospital whenever, owing to illness or accident, English sailors are to be found there, and the prison when—as is sometimes, alas! the case—English sailors are detained in it.

Yours faithfully,
W. J. Drought, English Chaplain.

Dunkerque, Nov. 17.

INSPIRATION AND REVELATION.

Three important addresses to Bible students have been given on Thursday afternoons at Mildmay by Canon Girdlestone, the subjects being, "Inspiration and Life" (Nov. 10), "Inspiration and Revelation" (Nov. 17), and "Inspiration and Scripture" (Nov. 24).

The first address was devoted chiefly to laying the foundation of the series, showing how nature abounds in spiritual phenomena, and how the workings of God may be traced in nature as well as in man. Supernatural gifts and manifestations are by no means confined to old time. Nature itself, in every form of life, witnesses to God.

The second address dealt with God's utterance of truth—Revelation. God communicates with man in various ways. He has spoken directly from heaven, as in the giving of the law the testimony borne to Jesus at his baptism, at the transfiguration, and again as in John xii. 28. A second method has been by the mysterious Being, "the Angel of his Presence," who, we believe, afterwards revealed himself on earth as "the Son of God." Thirdly, God communicates his mind by angels; that is "workers," a race of intelligences differing from man, capable of appearing in human form, though not taking human nature.

Lastly, and more directly bearing on the present subject, God speaks to men through men—men selected and raised up by Himself—and speaking under the direct influence of the Holy Spirit. Men, that is to say, inspired, and usually called prophets. The Old Testament terms employed signify—a flowing up or issuing forth, as a fountain; a seer, one who sees; and one who beholds visions. Prophecy includes, but is not confined to, prediction. When the seventy elders, or when Saul and his companions, are spoken of as "prophesying" they were not foretelling the future, they were rather preaching, exhorting men or praising God. Interesting out-of-the-way examples of prophesying may be found in 1 Chron. xii. 18, 2 Chron. xv. 1-7, and 2 Chron. xx. 14-17. Prophets were men chosen by God for the communication of his mind and will, and inspired to speak for Him. There may be inspiration without revelation; there cannot be revelation without inspiration. If it be a revelation it must come from God, by the inspiration of his Spirit.

God revealed Himself to the prophets by three processes: first in dreams, whereby He has in all ages communicated with men; secondly, through visions, carefully to be distinguished from dreams; and thirdly, and most usually, through impressions on the mind, like hearing, impressions so simple and apparently natural as to be described as speech. There are in such passages as 1 Chron. xxviii. 12 and 19 indications of another method analogous to writing—but as to this we know little. The whole is summed up in such a passage as 2 Peter i. 21, "Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

A very important question is, What is the substance of revelation? The answer is, It gathers more or less round redemption. Redemption is the key of Revelation. If God had not purposed to redeem, there would have been no need for revelation at all. Redemption springs out of love, and Revelation springs out of wisdom.

The special purposes of Revelation are: first, to convey to man things needful for him to know, and which he cannot know of himself; secondly, to remind him of what (owing to his fallen nature) he is liable to forget—this is legislation and commands; thirdly, to convey special knowledge as required—this is doctrine.

Remember, God exercises his own prerogative as to mode, agent, and period of revelation. The thought may be God's, and the words man's; or the message may be given to be delivered word for word. The prophet must know the message is from God, and must be faithful to deliver that message. "Speak the words I give thee." "Preach the preaching I bid thee"

EVANGELICAL EDUCATION.—The Church of England Evangelical College and School Company (Lim.) has been founded in order to promote institutions in which the rising generation shall receive, together with a thoroughly good general education, religious instruction in accordance with the Evangelical principles of the Church of England. The company appeals for funds to enable it to purchase Trent College, in the Midland counties. It hopes to carry on its operations at a profit to shareholders, but in the meantime capital is urgently required on distinctly religious and philanthropic grounds. The High Church party, a good while ago, established schools, which have flourished, with results deplorable to Evangelical Christians, though cheering to their promoters. Communications regarding this new scheme may be addressed to Rev. H. W. Webb Peploe, 25, Onslow-gardens, London, S.W.

WYFFIE.

By T. J. Barnardo, F.R.C.S. Ed.

"The man Watson was imprisoned for neglect and cruel ill-treatment of his infant daughter, only three years old."

Such was the brief and pregnant record which I received of little Wyffie's father. He was a licensed hawker earning from 12s. to 15s. a week when on the tramp, and a man of violent temper, given at all times to excessive drunkenness.

I have no doubt but that in God's sight there rests on Watson's guilty soul the deeper stain of murder, the murder of his patient wife, done to death in childbirth after a long course of his brutality, which culminated in the neglect and misery of the last few hours of supremest agony.

Three children were left to mourn—ah! how bitterly and hopelessly—their mother's loss: Tom, aged nine, Jim, six, and Wyffie, sweet little Wyffie, only three. Well might they weep! The heavy blow of the fist, the heavier kick of the boot, they have henceforth to endure at their tyrant's will and pleasure, and there is no pale, shrinking form, with loving, anguished face, to throw itself between them and the threatened violence, and to ward off its brunt only by sharing it. For never afterwards is there the consoling "Never mind, dear, father was vexed," or "Hush! there, don't cry any more; mother loves you," nor the infinite comfort of the motherly arms tenderly thrown round the little victim of brutality sobbing itself to sleep on her lap. Ah! no—all such protection, all such compensations, are for ever at an end; for their dear mother is dead. So also, happily for it, is the little creature, ushered so sadly into being in that squalid room. Its tiny spark of life fluttered and flickered for a while like an ill-lit candle in the socket, and presently it went out. Thank God!

And now the three little unresisting victims who remain are given over to the ceaseless brutality of an "English savage." Poor Tom! wee Jim! sweet little Wyffie! Ah, how we pity you! So do the neighbours, though their apathy allows the licence of cruelty to be carried to extremes. It is only when the ill-treatment of Wyffie reaches a climax that sympathy is roused to fever-heat, and information is tardily and reluctantly given to the authorities. Then the Law steps in, and for the neglect and cruel treatment of his three-year-old daughter (too easily proved, alas!) John Watson receives a wholly inadequate punishment, much less then he would have suffered had he stolen a half-sovereign from the till of the publican round the corner, in whose saloon his brutality has been often stimulated by strong drink.

The State, from motives of short-sighted economy, resulting in hundreds of like cases, refuses to assume the future care of Wyffie and such as she; so on coming out of gaol Watson resumed the guardianship (yes, he is her guardian still, save the mark!) of his unfortunate offspring. And it is not perhaps to be wondered at that in a short while things went on much as they had done before. Neglect, cruelty, starvation, foul language, and filthy surroundings were meted out unstintedly to the three motherless children, while their father continued to spend his money and to feed the fierce fires of savagery in his bosom at the bar of the aforesaid licensed victualler round the corner.

And the law stood by with folded hands, helping neither directly nor indirectly. Directly? No: the children could not invoke the policeman. Indirectly? No: Her Majesty's Treasury can make no allowance to any legally established or voluntary institution for the support of a child under five years of age. But what the law should do, yet what it did not do, the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ can do and has done in the person of his devoted servants.

One day a benevolent lady ventured into the foul and filthy den in which dwelt the English savage and his victims—poor Tom, wee Jim, sweet little Wyffie. All three were discovered with scarce any clothing, Wyffie lying in a corner of the dark room infested with vermin, with grievous ophthalmia, due to dirt and neglect, affecting both eyes, and with a running sore on her leg unattended to. The hospital was the only fitting place for Wyffie at first. Then, after a while, a touching appeal came up to me in East London. Could I receive Wyffie and cherish her and teach her, giving her the mother's love she had lost, and the hope of virtue and goodness, and the Christian care that might draw her young feet into the narrow way?

Ah! yes, our store might be empty, and our cupboard bare, while nearly 5,000 other waifs now in my care need daily support; but who would dare to shut the door in Wyffie's face? Not I, nor you; and so the small maiden, with her large bundle of want—prolonged surgical care, good food and nursing among the number—enters the charmed circle of God's little children under my roof. There for the present I must leave Wyffie until such time as, in his providence, another home-life and other duties shall claim her for their own.

As I look at Wyffie's sweet childish face, and recall the circumstances of her sad story, I feel more and more persuaded of the reality and preciousness of that old-time promise:—"Whoso receiveth one such little child in My name, receiveth Me."

WINTER IN SPITALFIELDS.

Mr. Charles Montague, hon. superintendent of the King Edward Schools and Mission, reports a somewhat gloomy outlook for the coming winter. The schools, which the late Dr. Tyler had a chief share in commencing in a disused cowshed nearly fifty years ago, have now large stations at King Edward-street and Albert-street, the entire area being a poor and crowded one. In the past, in time of sickness or exceptional distress, the King Edward teachers have well acquitted themselves in meeting the crisis, and it is hoped that they will be enabled to become equal to the present need. They have about 1,100 families identified with their missions and schools, and among these are many widows with whom life is a sore struggle on account of their having children dependent on them who are too young to work.

There are numbers of sick also requiring daily attention, many of whom are recovering from fever, etc.; and such need nourishment and warm clothing to get them strong again. The aged poor have also a claim upon our sympathy and help. Mr. Montague says that "These and the forty operations carried on for the moral, intellectual, and spiritual welfare of children and adults require immediate assistance, or some of the more useful agencies for doing good will have to be dropped." In some respects Spitalfields is one of the most interesting districts of London. On the average the people are exceedingly poor, and some might think that there is a tendency for them to become poorer; but all the while we see evidences of what are called better days.

The weavers are fast disappearing, though some are left whose names tell that they come of good French Huguenot families. The Sunday morning market in Brick-lane, the enormous brewery in the same locality, and the Sunday bird fair, seem to be institutions which time does not greatly influence; but the vast influence of the King Edward Ragged-school and Mission are apparent on every hand. The well-attended Sunday morning service, the Bible-classes, the crowded Sunday-schools, the week-evening meetings, all tend to tell the same story, that the poor are being reached and helped by the only kind of agencies which are capable of reaching them.

KAISERSWERTH.—The Deaconess Institution recently celebrated its fifty-sixth anniversary. During the festival thirty-eight sisters were consecrated, a larger number than on any such occasion hitherto. There are now in association 664 deaconesses and 192 novitiates. The cholera attacked some of the nurses while they were caring for victims, but in no case did a nurse succumb to the malady.

Y.M.C.A. Notes.

Mr. F. H. Burt, State college secretary of Illinois, writes: "Fall work is opening out in the colleges far better than ever before."

At Milwaukee, Wis., invitations to Sunday meetings are left at the hotels in sealed envelopes, one for each guest on the register.

The Camden-road Association are making special and successful efforts to reach young men who spend Sunday evenings wandering aimlessly about the streets.

At Hamilton College, N.Y., two volunteer classes in Bible study have been formed. Professors William H. Squires and William G. Dodge will be the teachers.

The old-established Association at Islington is, we regret to learn, contemplating the necessity of parting with the "Priory" premises owing to the financial pressure upon its work.

At Brown University, U.S.A., three quartets of students have been organised to work in city missions in Providence, R.I. The members sing, speak, and work personally in the missions.

The semi-annual meeting of the Associations of Ohio was held in Columbus on the 18th ult. The reports submitted indicated that the six months have been unusually blessed in the work among the young men of Ohio.

At Lafayette College, Easton, Pa., a committee of the college spent Columbus Day in identifying the spot where David Brainerd erected his missionary cabin among the Delaware Indians in 1744; it is seven miles from the college.

The twelfth California State Convention, held in Pasadena, from October 12 to 16, attracted fifty per cent. more delegates than any convention ever before held in the State. It was thought to be the most practical convention in the experience of many of the leading workers present.

At Mayfield, Sussex, a branch was opened on September 7. There has been much blessing and souls brought to Christ. The Gospel services are well attended with young men and lads, and numbers cannot get in for want of room. There is great need of a hall for the meetings.

A conversazione of the Exeter Hall Association was held on Thursday, by the invitation of Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Perks. Speaking of the social work with which the gathering was mainly concerned, Mr. Kennedy gave details of what is being done in various ways to make the place a real home to young men.

Since the opening of the new premises at Ipswich on September 29 upwards of a hundred new members have joined the Asssociation. A most successful ambulance class has been started, and the Sunday afternoon Bible class has averaged an attendance of eighty. Sunday evening "at homes" have been organised.

During the week of prayer the Wimbledon Y.M.C.A. was greatly blessed, six young men deciding for Christ and many members being stirred up to greater zeal in the service of their Master. The gymnasium started this season has proved a success, numbering now between thirty and forty members. Lord Kinnaird presides at the annual meeting on Dec. 5.

The annual meeting of the Hull Y.M.C.A. was held recently. The history of this Association is most encouraging in relation to Christian work within Polytechnics and similar institutions. The Association was launched inside the Young People's Institute. It now numbers 207 members on its roll, and reports a gratifying increase in the attendance at all its meetings.

An important meeting of the committees of the N.W. Metropolitan District took place on the 15th inst. at Stafford Rooms, Mr. E. Parker Young occupying the chair. Mr. Mills gave a brief account of the progress of the work in the district, referring to efforts at Chiswick, Rickmansworth, and Cricklewood, and a new Association at Harlesden was formally admitted to the Union.

Mr. Mason Kidner, of Ealing, opened a conference on "Our Sunday Afternoon Work for Young Men," Mr. Walter Wild, of Westbourne Grove, following. The need of bright and interesting services and care in the choice of subjects for the conversational Bible classes was emphasised, and a proposal to promote a periodical conference of Bible-class leaders met with cordial support from all quarters.

Canon Garratt presided last week over the annual conference of the Eastern Counties Y.M.C.A. District, held at Needham Market. Reports were presented showing the work of the district to be in a most satisfactory condition, In the evening there was a crowded public meeting in the Town Hall, Mr. G. A. Clowes presiding. Addresses were delivered by Mr. W. Hind Smith (National Council), Mr. N. R. Hughman, and Rev. A. J. Begbie, late vicar of Framsden.

Mr. Aladar Szabó, member of the International Y.M.C.A. Committee for Austria-Hungary, writes from Budapest:—"Our little union in Hungary aims at the welfare of our young friends, in full assurance of the fulfilment of the promises of our Saviour. As we have now many pastors preaching the Lord crucified, we can hope that the special work of the Y.M.C.A. will very soon make great progress. I hope you will remember in your prayers our work among the young men, that in Hungary many souls may be won for our Saviour."

Dr. J. Gordon Gray writes from Rome:—"The Young Men's Associations are drawing together. Among the many congresses that have been held at Genoa during recent weeks there has been one also of Young Men's Associations. The movement is yet in its infancy, but it grows, and is bound by-and-by to draw the Churches still closer. Co-operation is thus an actual fact. I am one of those that believe it could yet be made more thoroughgoing to the advantage of all the Churches as well as to the great benefit of the whole work."

Says the Young Men's Era:—The Y.M.C.A. is nothing if not a missionary agency. As truly as an anti-mission church, or missionless church, is bound to stagnate, so an Association that fails to catch the missionary spirit, after its eyes have been opened to the awful need of the millions of young men in non-Christian lands, is bound to deteriorate in spiritual power. For these two reasons, therefore, every Association should seek to cultivate a missionary spirit: (1) Obedience to the Master's last command; (2) its own growth in spiritual vigour.

"A good start," says Association News, the organ of the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A., "has been made with the Winter Session of 1892-93, and there is every prospect of a successful work being accomplished. Never have the rooms in the 'Old Home' of the association been more crowded than during the past month. Never has it been so difficult to find accommodation for the various meetings, classes, societies, and clubs. Never has it been so clearly shown that the first and most pressing need of the work is a new and well-adapted building."

The Croydon Y.M.C.A. has observed specially the week of international prayer, and the meetings throughout have been times of spiritual refreshing, the number attending being over five hundred persons. Special sermons were preached to young men from the different churches in and around Croydon. One special feature was a missionary farewell meeting. Mr. F. B. Webb, one of the members, having been accepted by the China Inland Mission, gave testimony as to the great help and benefit the Association had been to him in fitting him for the service which he was about to enter upon, and expressed a hope that be might not be the last to go forth from that Association to the foreign mission fields.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

CAMBRIDGE.

On Sunday week Rev. H. C. G. Moule gave his third Bible Reading this term in the Henry Martyn Hall, the subject being "Spiritual Fulness." With great clearness and earnestness he showed by the Scriptures that this was no mere abstraction, but a definite blessing, which God meant for all who trust Him and comply with his conditions.

The speaker at the Alexandra Hall was Rev. Neville Sherbrooke, who gave an excellent address to many. Mr. H. E. Geary, of King's, uses his sweet tenor voice in singing the Gospel message with much taste and sympathy.

Dr. R. N. Cust, of the British and Foreign Bible Society, gave a most interesting address at the C.M.U. on Monday night, taking for his subject "The continuity of Bible-translating." He showed how each translation of the Scriptures—from the Septuagint, made about the third century before Christ, to the latest New Testament in an African dialect—was essentially a missionary work and had for its object the winning of men to the Kingdom of God.

Dr. Cust and Rev. Edward White, of London, also spoke at the public annual meeting of the auxiliary branch of the Society, in the Guildhall. There was a good attendance. The report showed that the receipts of the branch were £352 for the past year.

The Master of Trinity presided on Friday night at a crowded meeting in King's College Hall, which was assembled to hear addresses from Canon Scott Holland and Rev. C. Gore upon the Christian Social Union. The Master read a very thoughtful paper upon the subject, and he was followed by the two members from the sister university. The speakers emphasised, as the great need of the present day, the necessity for an earnest study of social problems and our duty generally towards our neighbour.

Mr. George Ling, the well-known temperance advocate, we regret to say, is now reported to be in a very precarious condition.

IRISH NOTES.

A movement has been set on foot for the consolidation and extension of Methodism in the city of Cork.

The annual appeal on behalf of the Jewish mission was made last Sunday in the various Presbyterian churches.

The Belfast City Mission has recommenced, under hopeful auspices, its fourth annual series of Saturday evenings for the people.

The Hibernian Band of Hope Union has arranged to continue its Gospel temperance meetings every Saturday night during the winter in the Metropolitan Hall, Dublin.

The fifth annual Methodist Young Ministers' Convention has just been held in Tullamore, King's County. Forty ministers were present from various parts of Ireland, and the Convention was a season of blessing to all.

Gospel services have been held by Rev. Jas. Kirkwood in the Methodist Church, Parsonstown; similar services have been held in Tynan, co. Armagh, by Rev. Jas. M. Alley and others; and in Ballygowan, co. Antrim, by Rev. W. B. Merrick.

A Students' Missionary Union has been formed in connection with the Presbyterian Assembly's College with the object of supplementing the income from the Fleming Stevenson Fund, and has been stirring up the missionary zeal of the various congregations to which its members belong or which they visit from time to time.

One of the dailies in Belfast that gave special prominence to reports of the recent meetings held there by Mr. Moody and Mr. M'Neill, was the popular halfpenny paper, The Evening Telegraph. We notice with much pleasure that it has commenced to give in its Saturday issue a series of brief religious articles under the heading of "Our Portfolio." The first is a short and sharp Gospel talk on "What is a Christian?" by Dr. H. M. Williamson.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

It is proposed to establish a home in Edinburgh for working young women during illness or when out of work.

A new Free Church has been opened at Motherwell; Dr. Stalker, of Glasgow, preached the opening sermon.

The death is recorded of Rev. John Ingram, of the Free Church, Uist, one of the pre-Disruption ministers.

Mr. H. Warszawiak and Mr. J. G. Wooley were among the speakers on Saturday evening at Carrubber's Close.

Many of the old town churches in Edinburgh are being depleted by the removal of members to the suburbs as well as by the lapsing of others.

The Moderators of the Established and Free Assemblies of next year are to be Dr. Marshall Lang, of Glasgow, and Dr. Walter Smith, of Edinburgh.

There are many regrets in the Dundee community, outside his own congregation, that Rev. W. Houston, of the Steeple Kirk, is leaving the city for Cambuslang.

The Hon. Misses Kinnaird had a hearty reception at a social gathering last week in Edinburgh, when they spoke of Zenana work, as they had witnessed it in India.

The Border Counties Christian Conference, held at Hawick on Saturday, was well attended. Addresses were given by various friends on "Divine strength in human weakness."

Sermons on working men and the Church were preached in Edinburgh on Sabbath by Dr. Landels, Baptist, and Rev. George Jackson, of the Wesleyan Church. The latter spoke strongly on the evils of the drink.

At a temperance meeting in the Edinburgh Free Assembly Hall, Professor Blackie said that though legal prohibition had not been an unqualified success in Ontario, it prevailed in other parts of Canada with good results.

Mr. Joseph Connellan addressed a meeting in Dundee on Sabbath evening, on behalf of the "Scottish Association for Irish Missions." He told the story of his own conversion from Romanism, and described the openings for Gospel work in Ireland at the present time.

LORD BENNET, we regret to say, is suffering from an affection of the throat, and has been ordered to a warmer climate for the winter. All his present engagements are therefore cancelled.

THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR MOVEMENT has excited the lively interest of friends in France. L'Eglise Libre and Le Christianisme discuss its character and merits. The title is somewhat difficult to express in French. In 1890 M. Saillens suggested Société des Jeunes Serviteurs de l'Eglise; among other proposed names are L'Activité Chrétienne, L'Effort Chrétien, and L'Emulation Chrétienne.

Letters to the Editor.

SPIRITUAL POWER.

Dear Sir,—In reply to "One Who Would Do Good," in your issue of the 17th, may I write a few words? Like the writer, I have never been to Keswick, Mildmay Conferences, or such meetings, but in answer to prayer of several months' duration, of determined search in God's Word as to the conditions for receiving a filling of the Holy Spirit, God was pleased to answer my prayer—to show me that the receiving the Holy Spirit was a gift—to ask and receive, and thank God for (see Ez. xxxvi. 27, and Luke xi. 13). My experience has been a very joyous one; but I should be very sorry indeed to think or say that "One Who Would Do Good" was not filled with the Spirit (lit.: being filled, Πληροῦσθε, Eph. v. 18, denoting continuous action). A man is not filled at once and for ever, but must look for the stream of the Holy Spirit, ever flowing and filling.

There is great danger in the present day among many devoted Christians, who misquote verses and phrases in the Bible without reference to either the text or context.

I think your correspondent would find definite help from a little booklet, "Filled with the Spirit," by Rev. Ernest Boys, published by Nisbet and Co., 21, Berners-street.

Yours very sincerely,
A Rowing Man.

In reply to "One Who Would Do Good," I would venture to pass on how the lesson was learned, under a similar longing. I found that as one "lays hold of Christ" for eternal life, so one lays hold of Him for power to live that life; and with full recognition of this came the power to seize it. Theodore Monod's "Looking Unto Jesus" (price 1d.) and Mrs. Prentiss's book, "Urbané and his Friends," which is devoted to this subject (price 3s. 6d.), were my instructors, and God's agent of blessing. The obtaining of this coveted power may cost much.

"A broken and emptied vessel,
For the Master's use made meet,"

may mean a severe schooling for the poor vessel; but oh! the joy of being emptied of so much which hinders the "power to do good" (1 John ii. 27).

LUKE XXI.

Sir,—I am not about to enter into controversy, but to write down impressions made on my mind by the above-mentioned chapter as we read it aloud by portions a few days ago at household prayers, because it appears to clear our Lord's great prophecy from obscurity as to the periods intended thereby.

From verses 12—24, Jesus clearly predicts earlier events pertaining to the generation then living: first, persecution of his servants, trials, martyrdoms; then Jerusalem compassed with armies, flight from Judea, woes befalling her people, and, finally, Jerusalem trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.

In the next verses these Gentiles reappear, though the connection is a little obscured by the translation "nations." Woe is now seen transferred from Jews to Gentiles, whose times have been fulfilled. An age has passed over. The armies, which were the source of distress before, have disappeared; now it is the sea and the waves that roar an affright, "the noise of their waves (of insurrection), and the tumults of the people." Revolution is abroad, thrones of powers are shaken to their bases, kingdoms are moved and all, that the Kingdom which cannot be moved may remain. "Then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud with power and great glory."

In Matt. xxv. we read further that when the Son of Man shall so come in his glory, before Him shall be gathered all nations (or Gentiles) in judgment, and give acccount of their treatment of his brethren among them, the flock which He loves. Such features as the above, given us by the two evangelists, cannot by any possible stretch of interpretation be connected with Jewish judgment and the fall of Jerusalem. The conquering nations are now themselves distressed and judged. Each division of mankind in turn has had its era, as schools have their terms and instructions, followed by examinations at the end of term. Divine ways are unchangeable in that respect. First privileges are afforded more or less, and probation is conducted, then full and final account is taken. In the earlier part of Luke xi., we see the times and opportunities of Israelites closed by desolation and their olive tree cut down to the lowest stem. In the later part, the overcoming nations close their term; their olive graft is placed in trial.

A few more verses follow, in which our Lord speaks of the signs and expectation of such end, and adds, "Verily I say unto you, this generation shall not pass away, till all be fulfilled." No one can suppose the whole times of the Gentiles and long desolation of Jerusalem to be included in these words. (As usual, our Lord's reference is limited by his necessary meaning, and applies to the former part of his prediction concerning the Church then alive, and Judea and Jerusalem.

This is all I have to say, and I commend it to the dispassionate judgment of readers. St. Luke tells us he endeavoured to furnish accurate reports of our Saviour's sayings and doings, and represents in this case two distinct events separated by the period of Gentile supremacy, and affecting different races of mankind. I am satisfied, therefore, to understand Christ's discourse in this light, as English Christians have usually done.

C. S. B.

MONACO AND ITS PRINCE.

Dear Sir,—In L'Eglise Libre for November 18, published in Nice, M. L. Pilatte, the editor, contradicts the statement which you recently reproduced, to the effect that the Prince of Monaco is expending the sum annually paid him by the director of the gambling tables, in building a cathedral, etc., and that he does not intend to renew the concession, which expires in 1913. M. Pilatte says that the money is expended by the Prince on his own pleasures, and that the churches are built and the clergy are paid by other grants from the director. At the time of the marriage of the present Prince the story was put forth that the concession would not be renewed, but that was intended simply to produce a sensation.

As for the cathedral, the truth is, that when, years ago, Charles III. sold to M. Blanc the right to set up his gambling hell, he thought he would get some more money out of him for the benefit of the Church! He induced the Pope to separate Monaco from the bishopric of Nice, and to consent to the appointment of a bishop for Monaco. Then M. Blanc was applied to for the money—1,250,000fr.—to build a cathedral, and dared not refuse the amount, large as it was. And more, Charles III. said he must have the whole sum at once! This, too, M. Blanc could not, dared not, refuse. The money once in hand, Charles III. began to build, but he took care to spend every year only the interest of the money, and so when, at the end of thirty years, the cathedral was built, the sum of 1,250,000fr. (£50,000) was still intact! So the Church of Rome is maintained in Monaco. How the devil must laugh!

I am, yours truly,
R. S. Ashton,
Secretary of the Evangelical Continental Society.
Southsea, November 19.

WHAT IS "THE REST"?

Dear Sir,—I observe that Mr. Meyer, following, I believe, the usual line of argument of those who hold that the rest spoken of in Heb. iii. and iv. is the inward rest of faith, refers to the words, "We that have believed do enter into rest," as indicating that the rest in question is a present one. But this is to lay more stress on the words than the original (eiserchometha) will bear, for it is well known that erchomai and its compounds have very commonly a future signification—i.e., not "I am come,' but "I am coming." Thus, for example, in Heb. x. 37 we have "ho erchomenos hexei, kai ou chroniei." Compare also Matt. iii. 11, Luke xii. 54, xxiii. 29, etc. Alford says on the text before us, "We do enter (are to enter, as ho erchomenos, and the like)."

I would not venture to say that a Greek writer, wishing to maintain the same view as Mr. Meyer's, could not possibly have written eiserchometha, but it would certainly have expressed his meaning much more exactly and clearly to write eisĕlthomen or eiselĕluthamen.

I do not wish for a moment to deny that there is such a thing as present inward rest for those who believe. But I think it is a great mistake to build the doctrine on this passage in the Epistle to the Hebrews. It seems to me that those who do so have failed to enter into the spirit which pervades the epistle from end to end. Let anyone study this epistle as a whole, and he will see that the writer is animated and pre-occupied with one grand aim and purpose, of which his heart is full: namely, the anxiety which he feels to keep from falling those of his brethren who, under the pressure of long-continued persecution, were in danger of drawing back to perdition. It is not a question of higher life or lower life, but of life or death, with which he has to deal. He sets before them in solemn language the awful consequences of apostasy, and the blessed result of perseverance. Nothing could be more appropriate to his purpose than to repeat the warning of Psalm xcv., and warn his brethren to beware lest through unbelief they should become like those whose carcases fell in the wilderness. Surely it is a lamentable weakening of the awful force and appropriateness of this passage when it is viewed merely as a warning not to come short of the present rest which the children of God are called to enjoy. I do not deny the importance of this latter warning, but I would not begin with it in the case of a man who was trembling on the edge of apostasy.

I can easily believe that the condition of one Christian as much excels that of another as that of Israel in Canaan excelled that of Israel in the wilderness. But I am not at all inclined on that account to throw overboard the idea that the earthly Canaan, the inheritance of the seed of Abraham, was a type of the heavenly inheritance promised to the spiritual seed. It is very true that the resemblance is not perfect, inasmuch as Israel had enemies to encounter, even in the promised land. But no type is perfect in all points. If ever any man was a type of Christ, Moses was so. But Moses was very little like Christ when he was compelled to resign his charge to Joshua, and died before entering the land of promise.

I remain, dear Sir, truly yours,
Horace Noel.

Obituary.

ALDERMAN RAMSDEN, OF HALIFAX.

By the death of Mr. Alfred Ramsden, J.P., which occurred a few days ago, Halifax has lost one of its most useful and respected citizens. The Sunday-school movement in the town and district has also been deprived of a warm sympathiser and most earnest worker. As a local preacher amongst the New Connexion Methodists, as a platform speaker, a magistrate, a member of the Town Council, a newspaper editor, and as a Christian man, the deceased will long be held in loving remembrance.

PASTEUR RECOLIN, PARIS.

French Protestants are mourning the loss of another eminent pastor. M. Recolin came of an old Huguenot family, having been born at Vigan in 1826. He was successively pastor at Montauban and Montpellier, and in 1873 was called to Paris, where he exercised a blessed ministry in the parish of the Oratoire. He was a man of firm evangelical convictions, having come under the influence of the renowned Vinet. He was president of the Paris Committee of the Evangelical Alliance, and was altogether superior to sectarian prejudices or jealousies.

MDLLE. BOURGOUGNON.

The death is announced of Mdlle. Elise Bourgougnon, aged sixty-three, directress of "La Famille Evangélique," in the celebrated John Bost institutions at Laforce. She joined the work in 1849, and watched its very remarkable development. M. Rayroux, general superintendent of the homes writes: "Our sister pursued her task during forty-three years with a devotion that never flagged. She had energy and goodness, and was of a motherly heart. Our young girls, after leaving the home found in her a good counsellor and a valued support."

COLONEL MARTIN PETRIE.

This true-hearted servant of God has just been called to his eternal rest. He died at his residence, Hanover Lodge, Kensington Park, on November 19. As an officer of the 97th Regt. he is remembered for his standard work on the "Armies of Europe," and for his gallant rescue of the French ship Vesta. As a Christian, he took a deep interest in religious and philanthropic work of various kinds, especially in Mrs. Meredith's Institutions, of which he was for many years trustee, and in the Latymer-road Mission. He was a devoted and regular Sunday-school teacher. He married Eleanora Grant, youngest daughter of the late William Macdowall, of Woolmet, Midlothian, one of the ancient family of Macdowalls of Garthland, and leaves two daughters, both of whom are active in educational Christian work.

MR. JOHN WARNER.

This veteran evangelist, who laboured for many years in the Home Mission field, lately passed away at Stoke Newington, in his sixty-ninth year. Mr. Warner, a native of Cambridgeshire, was one amongst others who were deeply stirred in their hearts by the arousing appeals made by the late Rev. James Caughey, the successful American evangelist, and finally assisted him in the great revival that resulted from his preaching.

After a time he relinquished business, and gave himself to evangelistic work, in which he was aided by his wife and daughter. As an evangelist of the Evangelisation Society, he was in great demand, travelling in every county of England, and was honoured of God in the salvation of many souls. Subsequently he laboured at Fordingbridge and Epsom, and later on did the work of an evangelist in the Birmingham Wesleyan District. Through failing health, he was obliged to vacate that post in 1884, and returned to London, taking only occasional services.

Evangelistic Notes.

Rev. George Eddy has concluded a series of encouraging Gospel services at Midhurst.

Lambeth.—A very interesting mission has been held in Stamford-street by Mr. Sampson. At the concluding thanksgiving service testimony was borne to much blessing.

Reading.—In continuation of the mission conducted by Mr. Moody, services were held last week in the Baptist church by the pastor, Rev. C. A. Davis. Much blessing attended the meetings.

Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker are having much joy in their present mission at Ilford. At each service the interest and power have been manifest. Christians are entering into fuller consecration, and sinners are being converted.

York.—A successful eight days' mission has been held in the Centenary Chapel. The missionary band and other workers entered into the effort with great spirit, consequently the congregations have been very large, while in the inquiry room many profess to have decided for Christ.

Mr. Charles Minor, who last week assisted Major Liebenrood in his special services at Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A., is during the present month preaching on Sundays in the Assembly Rooms, Reading, where he has had good gatherings and evidence of decisions for Christ.

Sheffield. — Rev. T. J. Madden, vicar of St. Luke's, Liverpool, has held a very successful mission at St. Mary's Church, Sheffield. On Sunday afternoon the address was to men only, when about 2,500 men assembled to listen to a discourse, entitled "The Mark of Cain."

Mr. James Wharton has, since his return from the United States, been evangelising in Scotland, first at Meigle and Almond Bank, then later holding a three weeks' mission in the Shetland Isles, with good results. He asks prayer for a mission he is about to hold in Lerwick.

Mr. George Hefford has concluded a twenty-one days' mission at the New Mission Hall, Hendon. This is his second visit here. Great things were asked for and expected, nor were the expectations disappointed. The meetings were well attended, much interest was shown, some hundreds of booklets, tracts, etc., were distributed, and definite blessing received.

Mrs. Baeyertz continues to draw great audiences at Dr. Barnardo's Edinburgh Castle Mission Church, where she is the preacher for November. Her last meeting will be held on Monday, 28th inst., at 8 p.m. After the evening service, Sunday last, when the great hall was again packed, nearly a hundred professed anxiety, and were dealt with in the Inquiry Room. W. R. N.

Mr. W. H. Dawe has conducted a ten days' mission in Sermon-lane Mission Hall, and from the first night the power of God was seen in saving souls. Several of those who entered the inquiry room were of the roughest class, but are now "sitting at Jesus' feet." It was indeed a great joy to see on the closing night upwards of forty standing up who during the mission had given themselves to Christ.

Brinscombe, Glos. — A successful mission has lately been held here by Mr. Chas. Inglis. Every afternoon his Bible readings were warmly appreciated by large numbers, so that the room was filled. These meetings were felt to be most fitting preparation for the Gospel work in the evening. A splendid gathering of over 300 men was held during the week, and amply demonstrated the power of the Cross to draw sinners together. All round many believers have been refreshed and encouraged, and much people added unto the Lord.

Bridgwater.—Mr. Newton Jones has lately conducted a twelve days' mission in this town and several villages around. The mission was preceded by a week of united prayer, to which the blessing that ensued is very largely attributed. The afternoon Bible talks were much appreciated, and the meetings throughout were well attended, the result being manifest in the deepening of spiritual life in many of the Christian teachers and in the large number of elder scholars who expressed a desire to find the Saviour.

Mr. J. M. Scroggie has held a fortnight's mission at the Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth-road. Considering the weather, the attendance was good throughout. On Sundays the gatherings were specially large. Christians were helped and encouraged, while not a few profess to have accepted Jesus as their Saviour. On the last evening a tea-meeting was held, when addresses were given by Rev. D. Cameron, Rev. T. Hanger, Mr. Robert Paton, and Mr. G. Hefford. Mr. Scroggie gave a closing address from 1 Cor. xv. 58, specially urging the converts to be "steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord."

Springburn, Glasgow.—Mr. George Clarke has just conducted a four weeks' mission in the Springburn Free Church. For the last ten days the church, which is capable of accommodating about 1000, has been crowded nightly with a throng of eager listeners, and last Sunday it was necessary to break up the usual evening service into two, so that instead of one service at six o'clock, there was a meeting for women only at four, and another for men only at seven. At both these services the church was crowded. Since the mission commenced over 700 men and women have made open profession of conversion. Mr. Clarke gave a farewell address on Thursday, but the interest is still so great that Mr. Soutar (the pastor) has decided to carry on the meetings, with the assistance of some of the other ministers in the district.

Mr. Alexander Clark has been conducting a mission at Garstang and Pilling in the Wesleyan chapel. On Sundays especially the chapels have been crowded, and the people have eagerly listened to the Gospel preached. A genuine work has been done; Christians have been blessed and quickened, the hesitating brought to decision, and the careless aroused. At the closing meeting most encouraging testimony was given to great blessing received. On Monday afternoon the missioner preached to women only, when 2,500 women assembled together. Straight midday talks to men were given, the average attendance being 260. There were also afternoon Bible readings and mission service each evening. God's Holy Spirit appears to have been at work, and a number stood up at the after-meeting to confess Christ, while Christians have received a deeper blessing.

Personalia.

Rev. Dr. Stephenson has resigned the vice-presidency of the London Wesleyan Council.

Mr. Albert R. Fenn's address during his stay in England is 45, Beresford-road, Mildmay, London, N.

Dr. Henry Soltau, now on his way to the Neilghery Hills Mission, has reached Bombay, where he has given several addresses.

Dr. W. J. Adams, who recently resigned the rectorship of All Saints', Dorchester, owing to the decision in the Lincoln case, has taken temporary charge of Loughborough Park Congregational Church, Brixton.

Dr. A. T. Pierson has given an absolute denial to the statements made in an interview published some time ago in the New York World. No such interview ever took place, and hence the words attributed to Dr. Pierson were never uttered.

Rev. John Stevens, with his family, arrived safely at Aden on the 30th ult., having had a most pleasant passage so far. Mr. Stevens is deriving great benefit from the voyage, and all were well. They hope to reach Shanghai on the 29th inst.

Mr. Joseph W. Leng.—Many of our readers will learn with regret that Mr. Leng, whom they have been accustomed to meet at the Publication Depot of the National Temperance League, has been compelled, through advancing years and failing strength, to resign the position he has worthily occupied during the last sixteen years.

Lady Radstock has, we hear, become very much weaker, and the doctor thinks that her time is very, very short; but the Lord gives her perfect rest as to whichever way He leads, and He gives her husband also restfulness and a quiet anticipation that He will delight to answer the prayers of so many hundreds of his dear ones.

AN IRISH COTTAGE HOME.

The report of the past year's work at the Cottage Home for Little Children has reached us. It is satisfactory to see how the work is progressing from year to year. From forty to fifty children have been kept in the Home through the year, the greater number of these being under three years of age and therefore requiring much care. Many were admitted whilst their mothers were under treatment in hospital. In other cases named in the report several mothers, some of them ladies left penniless, have been enabled by a little temporary help and training to earn their living instead of becoming a burden to the community.

The committee is obliged for the first time to close the year with a deficit, owing to the great increase in their work, and also to the fact that last winter was unusually unhealthy, thus increasing the expenditure. In this difficulty a lady has offered to give £40 if other friends will raise the balance of £100 before the close of this year. Copies of the report will be forwarded by the honorary secretary, Miss Barrett, 6, De Vesci-terrace, Kingstown, County Dublin.

Temperance Notes.

The Hackney and East Middlesex Band of Hope Union consists of 192 societies, with a membership of 26,000.

Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Caine have been conducting a very successful Gospel Temperance Mission at Wallasey, Cheshire.

Some correspondence appears in the Kidderminster Shuttle on the extravagant expenditure on alcoholic liquors in the workhouse, which is said to be more than double what it was in 1871.

At the recent anniversary of the Latimer Abstinence Society (Mile End), Rev. J. W. Atkinson presided, and the secretary gave details showing that during the past year good work had been done, and steady progress made.

At the recent Conference for Women Workers at Bristol, Dr. Kate Mitchell read an excellent paper on "Inebriety," and Mrs. Byers, of Victoria College, Belfast, gave an interesting account of the work done in connection with the Belfast Ladies' Temperance Association.

The society for the study of inebriety publish an important paper by Dr. H. W. Williams, on the duty of the State with regard to the compulsory detention of habitual drunkards. He maintained they (whether men or women) ought to be so detained for their own sakes, for their families' sake, and for the sake of society at large.

We are pleased (says the L.M.S. Chronicle) to record a decided advance in the temperance cause in Fianarantsoa. Strong drink is no longer allowed to be brought into the town by the Malagasy; and, after another enthusiastic band of hope meeting, held on August 11, sixty-eight names were added to the list of total abstainers.

The W.C.T.U. Convention recently held in Denver was an enthusiastic and memorable gathering. The White Ribbon Women of America are on all occasions manifestly in earnest; but in Denver the crush was so great at the opening meeting that two overflow meetings were obliged to be held. Miss Willard gave her annual address to the 154,213 members whose representatives thronged the church.

Careful investigations disclose the fact that in the German Empire alcoholic drinks absorb twice as much money as bread, three times as much as lodgings or house rent, eight times as much as fuel. Public education and the army each costs a fourth of the sum spent on alcohol. All the direct taxes of Prussia, and all the indirect taxes of the empire, taken together, fall short by a great deal of the sum expended annually upon alcoholic liquors.

Beer and skittles rob home of victuals.
God made man upright; drink upsets him.
Of ale-sellers and tale-tellers beware.
He that is always drinking is always dry.
Don't put your best clothes on the brewer's back.
Dramshops and pawnshops are not far apart.
The green man goes to "The Greenman."

Children receive truth with avidity. They learn quickly. A little girl who holds a Demorest Medal, aged about thirteen, gave a speech of Lady Henry Somerset's in excellent style at the recent anniversary meetings of the United Bands of Hope. A "Y" branch in connection with the Young British Women's Temperance Union was recently started successfully in Birkenhead by Miss Helen Hood, the secretary of the World's W.C.T.U., England.

Through the agency of the London Police-court Mission of the Church of England Temperance Society, 1,500 men, women, boys, and girls were last year found situations, restored to friends, sent to homes, or practically put in the way of living honestly and soberly. By means of the home and labour yard at Ealing, 158 men were assisted, and of the 130 who had left at the end of the year, 102 were working industriously in situations found for them by the mission.

The Sheffield Women's Christian Temperance Association has a membership of 1,300 women, and is carrying on a very vigorous work. In addition to holding meetings of various kinds, the members of the Association do a good work in visiting the common lodging-houses. Two missionaries regularly attend the police-courts, and visit those who come before the magistrates for drunkenness and similar charges: other missionaries visit more generally those who sign the pledge, and from house to house.

Nothing gives brighter augury for the future success of the temperance cause than the universal effort now being made to spread temperance truth in the thought of children. Miss Anna Gordon, Miss Willard's private secretary, will, while residing in England with Miss Willard during the present winter, lend her valuable aid in the children's cause. Meetings are already being arranged for Miss Gordon (who is superintendent of juvenile work for the World's W.C.T.U.) in Middlesbrough and Nottingham.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

Old Jonathan (new volume, 1s. 6d. and 2s. 6d.) is a familiar friend. The editor, Dr. Doudney, is within a few months of completing his eighty-second year, having for nearly thirty-seven years conducted this useful and wholesome serial, which is appropriately designated a "district and parish helper." (W. H. and L. Collingridge, Aldersgate-street.)

Sunday Reading for the Young is always a very attractive serial. The new volume (3s.) is replete with illustrations, large and small, and good reading-matter, all "just the thing." The bright cover is in harmony with the cheerful contents, and the volume may be strongly commended as a Christmas present for little folks. (Wells Gardner, Darton, and Co.)

The Fireside Annual (7s. 6d. "Home Words" Publishing Office). Mr. Bullock is careful to produce a handsome as well as readable volume. He provides an illustrated evangelical magazine, which has found, as it deserves to find, a welcome in many homes. The Day of Days (2s.), coming from the same house, is well known as an unpretending but useful paper for Sunday reading.

The Temperance Mirror is a good magazine for the home circle. The twelfth annual volume (1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d., according to binding, National Temperance League Depot), like its predecessors, is a budget of good stories and sketches, and gives poems and dialogues that will be welcome to those who conduct juvenile temperance societies.

Faithful Words for old and young, is a high-class monthly, which, in volume form (1s. 6d. Holness), would take spiritual light as well as social pleasure into many a home. The contents cover a wide field of missionary interest, and are sound in substance as well as admirably illustrated. This old friend has now exercised its evangelical ministry for twenty-one years.

The Indian Female Evangelist, the quarterly magazine of the Zenana, Bible, and Medical Mission (2, Adelphi-terrace, Strand, W.C.) is always replete with interesting missionary intelligence. The twelfth volume presents a year's parts in a form convenient for preservation. We commend it to the notice of all who follow the progress of the Gospel among the women of India. (2s. Nisbet.)

The Leisure Hour and Sunday at Home Annuals (7s. 6d. each. Religious Tract Society). That these volumes are handsomely bound, ably edited, informative, and readable, goes without saying; their high reputation is well maintained. In the varied contents there is something to suit every wholesome taste. Present interests, the current topics of the day, are always kept well to the front, while themes of deeper import, as well as scientific, historical, biographical, and similar matters are well and worthily handled. Both magazines ought to have a place in every home, a corner in every library.

Messrs. John F. Shaw and Co. issue a beautiful and attractive series of annuals for the young folk. Our Darlings (3s. and 5s.) is very handsomely bound. Its coloured plates and illustrations, with pleasing stories and bits, render it a singularly acceptable gift book for the little ones for whom it caters so admirably. Little Frolic (2s.), in matter and type, picture and story, is evidently designed to amuse and delight the tiny folk just learning to spell. Sunday Sunshine (1s. 6d.), as its title denotes, supplies something for the children on Sundays; many a mother or governess will be thankful for such a book to aid in interesting restless and tired juveniles. By Sea and Land (1s.) is a collection of stirring adventures amongst wild beasts and savages, in storm and in war. It is a real boys' book.

The Lady's Pictorial has issued a Christmas number with very fine coloured supplement from a painting by F. Vinea, which latter is alone well worth the shilling charged for paper and picture.

Messrs. James Clarke and Co., send Rosebud Songs (1s.), simple children's pieces, words and music; and Rosebud Rhymes (1s.), homely and familiar nursery rhymes. Both are quaintly and curiously illustrated in a pleasing style.

Jack Forrester's Fate. By Catharine Shaw. (John F. Shaw and Co. 2s.) A bright, well-conceived story of a sailor lad, with a very thorough Gospel ring. Jack, we doubt not, will win the hearts of many by his frank, generous, Christian spirit and bearing.

Fever Nursing: a course of lectures on the nursing required in cases of ordinary fever, by Mary Harris, matron of the Suffolk General Hospital, Bury St. Edmunds. (1s. The Record Press, 376, Strand W.C.) These are pages well worth the attention of such as tend the sick.

Avice: A Story of Imperial Rome. By Eliza F. Pollard. A tale of the days of Caligula, of the early Christians, of their persecutions and martyrdoms; bringing out in a real and vivid manner their simple faith and readiness to endure and die that they might witness a good confession. (Partridge and Co. 2s.)

A Long Chase. By R. M. Eady. (Sunday School Union. 3s. 6d.) We have read with considerable interest these eventful chapters in a lad's life, full of African adventures. The vileness of the slave trade is strongly set forth, and much is told of what our brave seamen are doing to check the traffic in human beings. The boys will find it a charming book.

Glaucia: the Greek Slave. A cheap edition of a capital historical tale. How the simple faith of the Christians won its way among the heathen; how the believers bore and forebore, even unto the death, is very simply told. A slave girl first gives her own self and then becomes the means of winning others to the Saviour. (Religious Tract Society. 2s. 6d.)

Nursing Handbooks.—Messrs. Cassell and Co. have issued two shilling manuals, which should have a large circulation. They are both from the pen of Florence Stacpoole, diplômée of the London Obstetrical Society, and are entitled, Advice to Women on the Care of their Health Before, During, and After Confinement, and Our Sick and How to Take Care of Them.

Wild and Tame (2s. Shaw and Co.) is a series of delightfully simple sketches of animal life. Young people, and many who are no longer young, will con these "pictures and pages" with genuine interest, receiving much reliable instruction and entertainment. Harrison Weir's coloured pictures are worthy of that master hand. Altogether an admirable Christmas gift to a studious child.

Faith, Hope, and Charity. By Anna Lisle. (Hutchinson and Co. 5s.) The story of Gabrielle, a much-tried girl, misjudged and suspected, yet eventually fully vindicated. Gabrielle and one or two others are capitally sketched, but in the portrayal of some of the characters there is a trace of bitterness. It is to be regretted that the hardness is suggested as being due to particular views of truth.

Ourselves and Others. By Samuel B. James, D.D., vicar of Northmarston, Bucks. (5s. "Home Words" Office.) Here are twenty-two short essays on out-of-the-way but interesting topics, by one who wields a facile pen, and draws with excellent judgment upon large resources of curious knowledge. Whether writing on "Notice to Quit," "Hear, Hear," "Visiting Cards," or "Perorations," the author is always entertaining and instructive.

It is pleasant to note the fact that such a delightful and helpful record of youthful consecration as Joyfully Ready, a sketch of the life of Harry MacInness, by his mother, has gone into its tenth thousand. A new edition is published by Messrs. Seeley and Co. at the remarkably low price of ninepence. We trust that in this popular form the little book will be a message and a channel of blessing to tens of thousands more of our boys and girls.

Uganda: Its Story and its Claim (6d. Church Missionary House), is a pamphlet bearing the appropriate sub-title, "A Handbook for the Present Crisis." As told by Rev. G. Furness Smith, M.A., acting editorial secretary of the C.M.S., and illustrated by Lancelot Speed, the story is as engrossing as a romance, and exceedingly eloquent in its appeal to the conscience of British Christians. The book should be vigorously circulated by friends of mission work in Africa.

Mr. D. B. Wiemann, of Barmen, has issued German versions of "The Veil Lifted" and "The Confessional," by Eliza Richardson. They were translated by E. Spliedt, and have been entitled Der Aufgehobene Schleier and Der Beichtstuhl. Mr. Wiemann has so far received but little encouragement in his brave testimony for Protestant truth; but as there is much need to-day for the circulation of such literature in Germany, it is hoped that his publications will not be overlooked.

Keswick Christmas Cards: We have from Marshall Brothers a pretty and varied series of cards, booklets, and calendars, prepared for the coming season, when they ought to be in very general demand. Amongst these we may mention Perfect Peace (six for 2s.), with very fine designs by Avon Houbald; also The Garment of Praise, by Anna Simpson (six for 1s.), The King's Birthday (six for 1s. 6d.), designed by J. Mierendorff, and Trusting (six for 1s.) All these are really choice. Cheaper cards are provided in Joyful Meetings, Glad Tidings, and Words of Life (6d. packets), while a yet cheaper set (still very pretty), are issued at 1s. 6d. per 100. Blessings may be mentioned as a lovely example of chromo-booklets, while a tiny and really pretty daily calendar is also provided. The whole Keswick series is characterized by the pains evidently spent in the selection of suitable texts.

The Scripture-Subject Searching Almanac for 1893 has been compiled on a suggestive plan, by E. L. S. (1d. Marshall Bros.)

Syllabus of Sunday-School Lessons. (3d. Atkinson and Pollitt, Kendal.) This is the twelfth annual issue of a handbook designed specially for use in Church of England Sunday-schools.

Our Watchword of Hope: Maranatha. By E. J. Allnutt. (6d. Nisbet.) Here are well-arranged thoughts on a subject of sublime interest, from the pen of one who is thoroughly instructed in the Holy Scriptures.

The Church of England Almanac for 1893, compiled by Mr. Henry Miller, is a useful manual. It may be had in two forms, with paper covers for a penny, and neatly bound in cloth, interleaved for notes, at sixpence. (Shaw.)

Lady Beaujolais Dent has issued two more very instructive booklets: The Crucified, Living, and Coming One; or, Thoughts on the Lord's Supper; and The Will of God, or, God is Love; a New Year's Address. (1s. per dozen. Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling.)

Cassell's New Technical Educator, the first part of which has been published (6d.), is a very useful serial. Many important subjects are dealt with, and the pages show material improvements upon the well-known Technical Educator, which is deservedly held in high esteem.

The Church Association, 14, Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C. has published a penny pamphlet, with the significant title Ritualism Rampant in the Diocese of St. Albans. It gives a list of parishes, with names of incumbent and patron, date of appointment, and details of "practices." It is a sorry picture.

Dr. Cunningham Geikie's The Life of Christ is being translated into Russian by one of the dignitaries of the cathedral in Moscow. The first volume will be published in that city this Christmas, three others following at short intervals. In America, the sale of this well-known book has been enormous: five editions of it, issued by different publishers, competing with each other among our Transatlantic brethren.

From the office of The Polytechnic, 14, Langham-place, W. comes a very attractive compilation, A Scamper through the States (1s.). It is published in view of next year's cheap trips to the World's Fair. To those who purpose going there it will of course be indispensable if they wish to have an intelligent enjoyment of the month's tour. Friends who are obliged to stay at home may console themselves with a study of this profusely illustrated and well-written account of some of the wonders of the Great Republic and of the coming Exposition.

William Taylor, the Navy Evangelist.—Our readers will remember the memoir of this devoted evangelist in our issue of March 17. His life and work, written by members of the family and prepared for the press by an experienced editor, will be ready for publication by the close of this month. The book contains many incidents of Mr. Taylor's early career, and thirty years' experiences as a preacher of the Gospel to the masses. For circulation amongst working men it will be exceptionally suitable. It will be illustrated and will contain two photos of Mr. Taylor. The introduction has been kindly written by Captain W. E. Smith, Hon. Superintendent of the Evangelisation Society. Copies (1s. 6d. post free) may be ordered from his son, Mr. W. J. Taylor, Evangelist, care of Evangelisation Society (Scottish Branch), Grove-street Institute, Glasgow.

PAMPHLETS.

The Elder at the Plate, by Nicholas Dickson (1s. Morison Bros., Glasgow) is a collection of humorous anecdotes and incidents bearing on the matter of the church collection—a serious religious function north of the Tweed. The author's historical and anecdotal industry has been rewarded, for his wise and witty brochure has reached its tenth thousand.

Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton publish in a shilling vol. a number of sketches of "Modern Anglican Preachers," by "Camera Obscura." They are lacking in literary polish and very partial in the distribution of space. All are more or less laudatory, but the little book embraces many interesting facts. The introduction contains some weighty thoughts on preaching.

A very appreciative sketch of the life of the late J. G. Whittier, by W. Whitten, forms No. 2 of the "Friends' Shilling Biographical Series." (Hicks, 14, Bishopsgate Without.) There are many choice extracts from the poems of this minstrel and laureate of America's ante-emancipation days, and whose songs of freedom and justice did so much to strike the fetters from the slave.

Rev. Jas. Wells, of Pollokshields, Glasgow, has prepared a Jubilee Story for the Young, in which he gives briefly and in simple language the history of the great Disruption in 1843, out of which the Free Church of Scotland was born. Portraits of John Knox, Thomas Chalmers, Alexander Duff, and the Apostle of the North, and a reproduction of the famous picture of the first F.C. Assembly, brighten the pages of an instructive and inspiring record of devotion to religious conviction. (1d. Oliphant, Anderson and Ferrier.)

Stranger than Fiction is the title of a short but intensely interesting history of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland, by Rev. John Pollock, of Glasgow. (3d. R. Sutherland, Haddington-place, Edinburgh.) The graphic narrative begins with the Reformation in 1560, and traces the vicissitudes of the reformed faith through prelatic persecutions, covenanting protests, and the various "secessions" from the Establishment and reunions that resulted ultimately in the formation of that branch of Scottish Church polity now known as "United Presbyterian." Within brief compass a wonderful amount of church history has been compressed. The author is a strong "Liberationist," and looks forward to the day when disestablishment shall pave the way to the reconstruction of a great "free united Presbyterian Church" in the land of his birth.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 27.—JUDGES XI.

How often it has happened that in our extremity we, like the elders of Gilead, have turned to Him whom we refused. But there is only one condition on which the Lord will fight for us against our overmastering foes. He must be our head; we must put Him on the throne.

It is important that we should vindicate the cause we espouse, that those who oppose us may know that they are in conflict not with us alone, but with the eternal principles of God's righteousness. It is a great thing to be able to say 'I have not sinned against thee, but thou doest me wrong." Even if we do not wrong people by act, let us guard against speaking treacherously or unkindly. It is amazing with what ease Christian people stab at the honour and nobility of those whom they call friend. Let us beware of making bargains with God. We do not need to bribe Him to do aught for us. Not the burnt-offering as an inducement for God to deliver, but God's deliverance an inducement to the burnt-offering. Whether or not Jephthah did really offer his child is not material to our present consideration, for it must have been as great an agony to shut her away from the cherished hope of an Oriental woman, as to see her consumed on a funeral pyre. How strange it is that Christian parents refuse to give their children to missionary or other work at the call of God!

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 28.—JUDGES XII.

Men are very unreasonable; like these children of Ammon, they are reluctant to take up a difficult cause. Then they are annoyed not to share in the glory when it has passed out of its straitnesses into a large place. This comes of calculating results, and considering what will make for name, or fame, or prosperity. Our Lord described this state of mind as having double sight. No man can live happily or honourably who has one eye towards his own interests and the other towards God's. "If thine eye is evil, thy whole body is full of darkness." Oh, for the single eye, the united heart; the devoted purpose fixed on doing the will of God! When once the soul elects to seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, he is indifferent to human praise or blame, success or failure, as the world may deem it, and turns away from the heated faces and words of critics and opponents, saying "I put my life in my hands, and the Lord delivered."

There are many amongst us who might pass as allies and brothers, but they cannot frame to pronounce certain words which to us are as dear as life. They utter them, indeed, with their lips, but there is a certain dialect, a colour, an indefinable defect which we can instantly detect, and which betrays the false professor. God help us to speak plainly!

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 29.—JUDGES XIII.

What parents are, children become. If a mother has no other inducement to live a noble life, let her do so on behalf of her children. Well would it be for father and mother often to use the words of Manoah, "Teach us what we shall do unto the child, what shall be the ordering of the child, and what shall be his work?" God has a plan for every child, and parents should be fellow-workers with him. Can we doubt who the angel was, when we discover (v. 18 marg.) that his name was Wonderful. No doubt it was the Angel of the Covenant himself, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father. He is not far away from any who seek Him or need His help. He does wondrously, and His nature ascends like the altar-flame.

The reasoning of Manoah's wife was very wise, and one that would help us in many an hour of alarm. Let us not always fear that God means harm, but look back upon the past, the services which He has permitted us to render, the offerings He has received, and the things He has shown us. Would He have seen all this, and then fail us! Would He have begun if he had not counted the cost, and foreseen that He was able to complete? There are no unfinished houses in the Eternal City; no incomplete busts in his workshops; no half-cut jewels in his crown. It is not his nature to thwart yearnings that he has instilled, or to cancel hopes that He has excited. What He has told us is a guarantee of what He will yet do for us.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 30.—JUDGES XIV.

Samson is the type of a man who, guarding against ceremonial laxity, and so keeping the Nazarite vow intact, is at the same time extremely lax in his morals. Though he touched neither wine nor strong drink, and ate no unclean thing, he was carried by passion, like a leaf before the autumn wind. It was quite enough for a woman to please him well, and he insisted that his father should get her to be his wife. God overruled the results, though that did not relieve Samson of blame. (Comp., Acts ii. 23.)

Not once or twice in our lives have we met with a close analogy to this old story; circumstances which have roared against us, threatening our lives, have finally yielded honey and meat. We think as we meet them that they will involve us in unmitigated disaster, but as we look back upon them in after years, we count them the sources of unutterable delight. Everything depends upon how we meet them. It is only they on whom the Spirit of the Lord comes mightily, to whom the strong yields sweetness.

The end of this chapter shows how weak human love may be, unless it is a sacrament of eternal love, and a chalice in which the wine, the true wine of life, which is God's love, is communicated to us. The love of the newly-married wife may fail, unless it is possessed by a stronger passion, and held true by a mightier hand.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 1.—JUDGES XV.

In the roll-call of God's heroes, Samson is spoken of as a man of faith (Heb. xi. 32.). It is so strange to find him classed with David, and Moses, and Enoch, for as we look upon the deeds recited in this chapter they seem to us altogether so stormy and boisterous and savage. We find it hard to think of him as being animated by the same holy purpose as filled the hearts of the saints, and that the hand of faith was indeed there beneath the plated armour of the warrior. Truly, "God fulfils Himself in many ways." And yet it is comforting that God's children are clad in very different guise, speak many dialects, and are not expected to live higher than according to the light they have. There is a sense in which we may emulate Samson, who, when he had completed his act of vengeance, went down and dwelt in the cleft of the rock. There we are secure from the attempts of faithless friends and the assaults of bitter foes. There, too, deliverance will be given; the Spirit of the Lord will come mightily upon us; and living water will flow for our thirst. If any should read these words who have been bound by strong ropes, and rendered powerless to do God's work as aforetime, let them trust and not be afraid, for there is that in the mighty descent of the Holy Spirit which shall set them free. There is a great contrast between the ropes on the hand of a true Nazarite, and those on the limbs of him who has broken his vow (xvi. 12).

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 2.—JUDGES XVI.

This story always reminds me of the death of Christ. In his weakness as He hung upon the Cross, the power of hell compassed Him in, and anticipated an easy victory, but He laid hold on the doors of death, the gate into the unseen, and plucked them up, bars and posts and all, and put them upon his shoulders and carried them up to the top of the everlasting hills, which lie towards the city of Rest. How necessary it is that a woman should use her influence over those she loves, to augment rather than to sap their strength! This evil came to Samson because he sought love outside the limits set by religion, and whenever men or women act thus they forfeit their purity, and hand themselves over to the enemies of God and of their souls, for their undoing. When temptation comes it is a mistake merely to evade it, and to adduce excuses, or to parry attacks, as if to throw the tempter off the scent. These lines of defence are taken one after another, and the foe presses into the citadel, which in turn must yield Let us beware of scissors, even though apparent love holds them, as they steal over the locks whilst we are steeped in unconsciousness of the havoc that they make, lest our strength goes from us, and we become like other men. There are hours in our life when, though we know it not, our strength departs. Ah, the horror of he wist not! We think that we are as we were. and wist not that we have passed from strength to weakness, and that the Spirit of God, as anointing for service, has left us.

But what comfort to know that in solitude the hair may grow again.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 3.—JUDGES XVII.

The family of Micah's mother might be outwardly religious and accustomed to speak familiarly of God, and yet was evidently eaten through with lying, deceit, and such like sins. We should be very careful that with a form of godliness in our homes, we also have its power, and train our children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Here for the first time we meet the phrase which often recurs in the latter chapters of this book, "there was no king in Israel, every man did that which was right in his own eyes." It is always so when Christ is not on the throne; we do as we like, and perhaps are more careful than ever in the observance of a ceremonial and outward religion. Micah thought that God would do him good, because he had made a house of gods, an ephod and teraphim, and had secured a Levite to be his priest. How little he knew that disobedience to the second commandment did him more harm in God's sight and in his own soul, than these externals could do him good. Neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but a new creation and faith that worketh by love. How strange this yearning of man's heart for a priest! It is almost the deepest instinct in man's nature, destined to lead men to the true Priest, who alone can stand between us and God, and the King also. F. B. M.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 4

WORK AMONG THE GENTILES.

Acts xiv. 8—22.

GOLDEN TEXT: Matt. xii. 21.

THE story this lesson tells is one of deep and even exciting interest, and furnished the subject for one of Raphael's famous cartoons. From the narrative itself we can gather some particulars concerning Lystra and its inhabitants. Its site is uncertain. All that can be determined is that it was in Lycaonia, some miles from Iconium in a south-easterly direction. Jews do not appear to have been numerous in the city. It was with Gentile idolaters that the apostles had to do. There was evidently a temple to Zeus (Jupiter) before the city (13). Hermes (Mercury) was associated with Zeus as his frequent companion during his supposed rambles on the earth. Legends as to the appearance of these two in human form were widely believed. The inhabitants of the city were evidently of a fickle, faithless, and excitable temperament, as the story shows.

The miracle (8-10). It would appear that at first the preaching of the apostles made but little stir, for the word "heard" (9) is in the imperfect tense, and denotes continuous, persevering, attentive listening There was no great excitement until God performed this miracle of power through his servants. The lame man is an example to many. He had true faith. "Faith to be healed" (9) is more than mere intellectual assent to historical facts. It includes, as all true faith does, consciousness of need, and expectation of help. He expected a Divine work. What else could meet his need? He had grown from infancy to manhood a helpless cripple. If human power could save him it has had all his lifetime in which to do it. His faith came through hearing (9). Persevering and submissive listening is the way to obtain faith (Rom. x. 17). Faith is not a mere emotion born of excitement, but an intelligent understanding of truth and a quiet confidence in it. The manner in which Paul performed the miracle made it appear wonderful (10). A single word of command was followed by an immediate and perfect and manifest healing. This is a type of what the Gospel is still doing, and of what it was able to do in a spiritual sense for the people of Lystra.

The apostles deified (11-18).—Picture the whole scene—the enthusiasm of the people, their wild shouts, and the attempt of the priest of Jupiter to do homage to the apostles. Underlying their idolatrous mistake there was something good. They attributed the miracle to Divine power, and were eager to pay their homage and to express their gratitude to those whom they conceived to be gods. Thousands who know the truth concerning the living God are not nearly so eager to recognise Him and to offer Him their grateful worship. Pagan errors have their root in a true deep need of the human heart. Unhappily, men who are the subjects of that need are more ready to believe a lie than to obey the truth (2 Thess. ii. 9—10).

The apostles' rejection of this homage contrasts with the conduct of Herod (xii. 22, 23). They repelled it with indignation and grief, and with all the energy possible. They were alarmed for the people who were about to commit so great a sin, and for themselves lest they should be betrayed into the sin of accepting for themselves the worship that properly belonged to God. How many plausible excuses they might have urged in favour of such a course. How easy to have pleaded that consideration for Lystrians demanded it. Alas! what sin is there for which Satan cannot find some plausible excuse?

But instruction was necessary also (15-17). The best way to combat error is to oppose it with truth. To the vain gods of the heathen Paul opposes "the living God," as the Creator of the universe, as the unfailing source of all temporal blessings, and as sending to them a gospel which commands them to turn from vanities to Himself. The belief of the truth is death to the idolatrous lies of Satan (1 Thess. i. 9).

Paul stoned.—(19) How soon this fickle people changed in their treatment of the apostles. Deified yesterday, stoned to-day. The disciples are like their Lord in this. Hosanna soon changes to crucify. Unhappy is the man who lives to please fickle, faithless men. (20) "Disciples" gathered round Paul. There were some who believed in spite of the idolatry of the people, and the opposition of the Jews. During the Decian persecution, A.D. 249, God delivered the martyr Numidicus as He here delivered Paul. He had been severely burned, and then overwhelmed by a shower of stones, so that he was supposed to be dead. But when his daughter came to bury him he arose and went with her into the city. The servant of God is immortal till his work is done. (22). By teaching and exhortation he sought to strengthen the disciples in every place.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

A general Church mission is being held this week in all the churches of Bury and the neighbourhood.

The Bishop-Designate of Nyassaland (Rev. W. B. Hornby) will be consecrated in St. Paul's Cathedral on Dec. 21.

The Rupertsland Gleaner announces the retirement of Rev. J. F. Wilson from his well-known work at the head of the Chingwauk, Wawanosh, and Ikhorn Homes.

Dr. Wheeler and Rev. J. Jamal have visited Hebron. As many as 150 patients were seen, amongst them being the chief Rabbi's son and grandson of one of the Chief Rabbis.

The first of the monthly meetings for prayer on behalf of the London Jews' Society was held last Friday at Palestine-place. These meetings are to be held on the second Friday in each month at 3.30 p.m. in the same place.

Rev. A. C. Adler reports the baptism of two Jewish inquirers in Amsterdam. One of them is a German and forty well-educated Jew of twenty-five years of age; the other is a little younger, and hails from Russia.

Rev. S. T. Bachert, of Hamburg, has baptized three of his inquirers in the mission-chapel. He writes:—"Those who witnessed their joy at their baptism will not easily forget the deep impression they made on all who were present."

The special effort being made this week on behalf of the Church Pastoral Aid Society—that is the Home Mission of the Church of England—was inaugurated on Sunday by a sermon from Dean Lefroy in St. Margaret's, Westminster.

The C.M.S. Committee has accepted the following for missionary service: Rev. Henry Richard Sugden, B.A., Exeter College, Oxford; Mr. Henry W. Weatherhead, B.A., Trinity College, Cambridge; and Mr. John O. Summerhayes, L.R.C.P. Lond. and M.R.C.S. Eng.

Canon Scott Robertson, who publishes an annual statement of British contributions to foreign missionary work, states that last year the total amount collected was £1,421,599. Of this sum Church societies contributed £539,510; joint societies, Church and Nonconformist, £205,330; Nonconformist societies in England and Wales, £456,348; Scotch and Irish Presbyterian societies, £210,306.

During the past week Rev. T. J. Madden has been holding a series of special services in St. Mary's, Sheffield. On Sunday last over 2000 men assembled in church to hear an address on "The Mark of Cain," in the course of which the preacher spoke of the awful consequences of a sinful life. The congregations at the evening mission services have been very large, and large numbers of men have gathered at the midday services for twenty-five minutes.

On Monday meetings were held in Manchester in connection with the general Church Mission, which is to be held in Manchester and Salford from January 28 to February 7. In the afternoon Archdeacon Donne addressed a meeting of the clergy in one of the rooms at the Y.M.C.A. Archdeacon Wilson presided. A special service was held in the Cathedral in the evening. There was a very large congregation, composed chiefly of those who intend to take part in the mission.

The sixty-first anniversary of Christ Church, Salford, has just been held, the preacher being Canon Stowell, the former rector. At the public meeting Rev. Fergus Hill, rector, in reviewing the work of the past year, said that there were 1375 scholars attending the day-schools, and 1636 the Sunday-schools. The staff of teachers numbered 120. There were ninety-one visitors at work, who distributed 6,000 tracts monthly. Addresses were delivered by Revs. F. Wainwright and Canon West.

The Record publishes a statement from Rev. R. H. Walker, who has just returned from Uganda, and an account of an address delivered by his old companion in trial, Rev. Cyril Gordon. These plain, unvarnished stories from the two men who, without affectation, must be held to know more about Uganda than any other Englishmen, must help to educate the public mind on this crisis. Mr. Walker and Mr. Gordon are both men with a well-justified reputation for speaking their views frankly, and their long residence in the country adds weight to every word they say.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A special mission held at Boxmoor has produced good results.

Hawley-road Chapel Sunday-school reports 250 scholars, with thirty teachers.

Doddridge Sunday-school and branches, Northampton, have a total of 1759 scholars, with 132 teachers.

Selby Church has decided to make all the chapel sittings free and open, and adopt the free-will offering system.

Bethel Church, Sheerness (Rev. C. F. Bone), reports 325 members, of whom fifty-five have been admitted during the year.

Cannon-street Church, Preston (Rev. B. Nightingale), reports 360 members. Seventeen have been added during the year.

A church has been formed at Ilford under the auspices of the London Congregational Union, and services have been commenced in the reading room.

Rev. Charles Goffe, after a ministry of nearly half a century, is retiring from the pastorate of North Walsham Church, which he has held since 1862.

At the meeting of the London Congregational Board on Tuesday, Dr. Parker withdrew his letter of resignation which had been received at the previous meeting.

The Earl of Radnor has very generously promised Rev. J. J. Palmer a most valuable and the only eligible site for a new Congregational church in the West End of Folkestone.

New Sunday-schools are being erected at Ampthill in connection with Union Church. Memorial stones were laid on behalf of Viscount Baring and others. The day's proceedings realised £85.

Special missionary meetings in connection with the Forward Movement of the London Missionary Society have been just held in all the churches in the Camden and Tentish Town group of the North-west District.

Rev. Isaac Davies, who has held the pastorate at Mill Hill, Blackburn, since 1875, has been compelled to resign his charge through ill-health. He had a paralytic stroke some two years ago, from which he has never entirely recovered.

The anniversary services of Lancaster Centenary Chapel (Rev. H. W. Smith, pastor) have this year been combined with a week of special missions, conducted by Rev. R. Balarnie. All the services were well attended. Many young persons connected with the senior classes in the Sunday-school have been brought to decision for Christ.

Rev. O. K. Hobbs, at the Huddersfield and Heckmondwike District Conference, discussing the question "How to make our churches more efficient for the work they have to do," said that many of the churches were getting to be more or less proprietary clubs, where men met for a pleasant hour and called it service. But there could be no service like that. Their great work was to go out into the world and bear witness to the Gospel.

BAPTIST.

Rev. J. Morgan, late of Merthyr, has been welcomed as pastor at Pisgah, Tulywain.

Interesting and encouraging anniversary services have been held at King's-road, Brentwood.

During the past week special services have been held in many of the Birmingham Baptist chapels.

Mr. T. E. Titmus, of the Pastor's College, has entered on the charge of the Spring Hill Church, Birmingham.

An interesting mission has just been held at Edenbridge by Revs. W. Townsend, E. Roberts, and W. Pattman.

After many difficulties during the past few years, the work at Tetley-street, Bradford, has lately been greatly revived and strengthened.

On Sunday last Rev. H. Thomas, late of Beulah Chapel, Thornton Heath, entered upon the duties of the pastorate of Kingsgate-street Church.

Rev. W. C. Bryan has resigned the pastorate of Bluntisham, Hunts, after nine years' successful service, and accepted an invitation to Union Chapel, Hunstanton.

The anniversary of the flourishing church under the care of Pastor C. D. Crouch, at Worthing, has just been held, with many delightful tokens of blessing and awakened interest.

The annual meetings of the Preston Auxiliary of the Baptist Missionary Society were held on November 6 and 7, when Rev. J. L. Rogers, from the Congo, was the deputation from the parent society.

Messrs. G. Wilkins and F. Davy sailed for India last week. Mr. Wilkins will be the first missionary that has been sent to Orissa by the Baptist Missionary Society since the recent fusion. Mr. Davy is destined for Agra.

A conference of the Young Men's Missionary Society (Baptist) was held last week in the Baptist Mission House. Representatives were present from the L.M.S., Young Men's Missionary Band, and Mr. A. Shepheard, the president, spoke.

A new Baptist Chapel, which has been erected at Rawdon, near Leeds, where the denomination has had a "cause" for nearly two centurics, was opened on Wednesday. The new building, which provides accommodation for 436 persons, has cost £3600.

The quarterly meeting of the Metropolitan Tabernacle Sunday-school Missionary Fund was held on the 15th inst. Mr. Thos. H. Olney, who has been connected with the school for the past forty years, presided. Interesting addresses were given by Mrs. E. Pearse and Mrs. Hudson Broomhall, of the China Inland Mission, and Rev. G. H. Rouse, M.A., LL.B., from India. Mr. G. H. Judd reported that £58 had been sent to missions as the result of the past quarter.

METHODIST.

Evangelistic services have been conducted by Mr. D. Dodsworth, at Rotunda, Ash-road, and Cove, Aldershot.

Four evangelists have been engaged for special mission work in the West Midland district during the winter months.

For some time a very decided work of revival has been going on among the Primitive Methodists in East Ham and Canning Town.

Last week a new Wesleyan chapel was opened in Gipsy-lane, Upton Park, as the result of earnest work carried on for nearly ten years.

A fortnight's special evangelistic services have been conducted at West-street, Hull, by Mrs. Evison, the Lincolnshire evangelist, assisted by Rev. W. Alton, and have been productive of blessed results.

Rev. Dinsdale T. Young has conducted a very successful mission at his chapel in York. The building has been packed. Fifty persons publicly professed conversion, and, in addition, a number have joined the church.

With one or two exceptions, all the foreign missionary annual meetings have been held in the Wakefield Circuit with most gratifying and cheering results, the attendances at the public meetings on the week-day much larger.

By the kindness of a gentleman connected with Oxford-road Chapel, Manchester, all the halt, the maimed, and the blind to be found within the radius of a mile were invited to a free tea on Thursday week. Nearly 200 were present.

A remarkable tea meeting has been given in connection with the Belper Social Bible-class by Mr. Frank Robinson, the guests being all the crippled and infirm poor of the town: 125 attended, and those who were prevented by the inclement weather were provided for at their own homes.

The Manchester Wesleyan Mission reports constant progress. The Sunday evening congregations amount to 7000 people. There are 1450 meeting in class, 1600 Sunday scholars, 1200 Band of Hope children, 800 men and women in Bible-classes, and 480 enrolled voluntary workers. This, and much more, is now taking place where a few years ago Methodism was almost non-existent.

A movement is on foot to form a memorial to Mr. Malkin, Wesleyan missionary, and Mrs. Burgess, wife of a Wesleyan missionary, both of whom perished with the Roumania some weeks ago. Various suggestions have been made to the Missionary Society, but that which appears to find most favour is the raising of a fund for enrolling native mission agents. Mrs. Burgess took a special interest in this branch of missionary enterprise, and Hyderabad, where Mr. Burgess is still engaged, offers a wide field for its employment.

The annual meeting of the Mission Band at the London Central Mission has just been held, the report showing four different departments of work carried on—viz., tract distribution, open-air services, lodging-house visitation, and a public-house brigade. The latter, consisting of a band of devoted workers, well supplied with interesting and helpful literature, under the direction of a captain, regularly visit the many public-houses in the immediate vicinity of the chapel between the hours of 2.30 and 4 on the Sunday afternoon. The lodging-house visitation is undertaken by a number of young people. Three houses are visited every Sunday before evening service, and short, bright services of about thirty minutes' duration are held in each. There are at present seventy tract districts worked by eighty-eight distributors.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The Conference on Christian work held at Greenwich last week proved very practical and suggestive.

In the anniversary services at Trinity Church, Clapham, held on Sunday week, Revs. Dr. Stephenson and Mark Guy Pearse took part.

Rev. A. B. Grosart, D.D., has now formally resigned his charge at Blackburn, owing, as we have previously intimated, to ill-health.

Anniversary services were held in the Presbyterian Church, Harrington, on Sunday week, when Rev. A. Dalrymple Gray preached.

The old church at Cheltenham, now known as the Central Hall, and used for years as an evangelistic centre, is about to be sold, other buildings being provided for the purpose.

Discussing the future of Whitefield Church, Drury Lane, which has suffered greatly since the death of Mr. Burton Alexander, Mr. J. R. Lyell suggests that it should be made a mission centre, and worked by a capable missionary and Bible-woman.

Rev. Dr. Johnstone, Moderator of Synod, preached on the occasion of the anniversary celebration at Howard-street Church, Sunderland. Rev. D. Tasker presided at the social meeting, when addresses were delivered by Revs. D. Christie, S. M. McClelland, and M. Cameron.

With regard to "Self-denial Week," shortly to be held on behalf of Presbyterian missions, a lady writes that at a sewing meeting the question was raised, "What shall we deny ourselves?" "One suggested doing without flesh meat that week. Another said that would be no self-denial to her, if she got pudding; so she suggested that all pastry and extra courses should be given up. Someone else proposed to do without sugar and butter, and to travel third class. One lady thought to deny ourselves in some article of home ornamentation, and give the price. 'Well, I thought,' spoke out another, 'of giving up my afternoon tea, not for the sake of the price of it, but because it would be real self-denial, and then give an offering.'"

SALVATION ARMY.

Amongst the crowds assembled at Belper fair the local corps has been doing a very special work.

Mr. Bramwell-Booth has been laid aside for a week or two, but it is hoped he will soon be fit for duty again.

In Manchester Free Trade Hall a series of meetings are being held this week in connection with the Social Scheme.

At a recent converts' meeting, at the "Lighthouse," fifty were present, who testified with no uncertain sound of what God had done for them.

A series of eight or nine meetings in connection with General Booth's "Darkest England Scheme" was held last week in St. James's Congregational Church, Newcastle, when Commissioner Booth-Tucker gave an account of the work.

A poor friendless fellow, who was helped to his feet again by means of the Army Shelters, writes: "It was when I first entered the Shelter that I realised I had still somebody in the world who cared for me, and who was unwilling to see me sink lower than I had already done. To my dying day I shall never forget the kindness with which you treated me."

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

J. C. Kingzett has been visiting the ancient capital of Madagascar and lecturing on temperance.

A new meeting-house has been opened at Radcliffe. A little society has grown out of an Adult School carried on for some time.

The Countess of Portsmouth, speaking at Andover in connection with the Friends' Foreign Mission Association, avowed herself a Friend, and spoke sympathetically as to missions.

The Kansas Committee on evangelistic and pastoral work reported ninety-three revival meetings held, and seventy-nine two days' meetings during the year. There are thirty-three recognised pastors in the yearly meeting, of whom six support themselves, twenty-one are partially supported, and six wholly.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Cardiff, aged forty-three, Mr. J. L. Jenkins, a useful and valued labourer in the Sunday-school and Baptist Church.—At Worksop, on 11th inst., Mr. D. Taft, aged seventy-six, an earnest Christian and worker.—At South Molton, Mr. J. C. Turner, one of the earliest scholars in the Congregational Sunday-school, and for many years a devoted teacher and worker.—At Reading, Mr. Thomas James, for thirty years superintendent of the Sunday-school at Trinity Church.—At Llanfair, Rev. Thomas Thomas, for forty years a faithful minister.—In Belfast, Mrs. J. W. Pell, beloved of many for her faithful service.—At Newquay, Col. Mitchell, J.P., C.C.—At Derby, Mr. G. Beesley, an active worker.—At Georgetown, Demerara, on the 9th inst., Rev. W. R. Austin, Bishop of Guiana, aged eighty-five.—At Southsea, on 19th inst., Dr. Argles, the Dean of Peterborough, aged seventy-seven.

Doncaster "Do-Without" Missionary Society.

I have read with interest the letter of "A. G." in The Christian of November 10. In order to show that the method he advocates is thoroughly practical, I will tell you of the progress of our "Do-Without" Society.

At the close of an address by Rev. J. Heywood Horsburgh in the Y.M.C.A. hall two years ago, it was proposed that we should support a representative in Inland China, and soon afterwards this society was launched.

All the members, who now number 700, are expected to pray every day for the society, and for each evangelist; also every week to "do without" something which they really like, in order to give at least a penny through one of the collectors without reducing their regular offerings.

The society supports Mr. E. B. Vardon (C.M.S.) and Mr. E. Fryer ("Joyful News" evangelist), and pays half the expenses of Mr. J. W. Pell (J.N.E.), who are all working in Mid-China; also Raino Kotomanga, native evangelist in Madagascar; and Kallu Ram in Central India, who are doing good work. Two women are being trained at the Converts' Home, Allahabad. A subscription of £10 is paid towards the support of Miss Janson (C.E.Z.M.S.). Gospels have been sent to Uganda at a cost of £15, and the grant is repeated. Miss A. E. Wells, who is going to sail on the 17th inst. in connection with the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, in order to engage in village work in the Punjaub, has been adopted and her outfit paid for.

About 26,000 "Do-Without" papers have been scattered, and societies on similar lines have been started in England, Scotland, and Ireland; if the principles of prayer and fasting were adopted by churches, Y.M.C.A.'s, and adult schools, 2,000 proxy missionaries might be placed on the foreign field next year. I shall be glad to give further information to any of your readers who desire it.

A. Christy Wilson, M.D.,
President of the Doncaster Y.M.C.A.

The Fog Question.

NOVEMBER is a terrible month to numbers whose lot is cast in England, and those who dwell in towns, where the evils of fog are intensified by smoke, have indeed cause for dreading this season. Whether science will ever cope successfully with the fog problem remains to be seen; we hope such a desirable end may be achieved, but in the meantime it is well to recognise and adopt measures that are available for counteracting the ill-effects of our climate.

The following statement affords ample evidence that though science has not yet succeeded in ridding us of fogs, it has, nevertheless, secured a means of protecting us against many of its ill effects. Appareil Magnetique provides a channel for the application of an invigorating influence which directly reaches the respiratory organs, removing congestion, and giving them power to throw off all that is foreign to their welfare. Even where consumptive tendencies have been unmistakably apparent, Appareil Magnetique has so increased the recuperative powers of the system as a whole that the symptoms have been completely and permanently eradicated.

MISS BAKER, 15, COMPTON-AVENUE, BRIGHTON.

SEPTEMBER 11, 1891.—"I must heartily thank you for the marvellous benefit I have derived from your Treatment. When I was advised to consult you, I had been suffering for many years in the upper part of my spine, my head and shoulders, from excruciating pain which paralysed my mental and physical powers to such an extent that it was impossible for me to write a letter, as the exercise of thought caused the sensation of numberless pins piercing my flesh. An hour's rest upon my pillow would produce rigid pains in my head that made me dread to move it, for as soon as I began to raise it, the pain seemed to expand, and was simply agonising. After using Appareil Magnetique for a short time the pain commenced to diminish, and this has gone on during the fifteen months over which my trial of the remedy has extended, till now my health has so improved that, instead of being bent, I am almost quite erect. I have none of the pains, unless at any time I over-strain my powers, and this summer I have surprised my friends by my ability for, and enjoyment of, long expeditions in the mountain districts of Switzerland, which were utterly impossible before I adopted your Treatment.

"Among many other ailments that troubled me (which were, in fact, so numerous that I despaired of ever being well) was Bronchitis. About 18 years ago I had severe inflammation of the left lung, and after that I was chronically subject to Bronchitis as soon as cold weather set in, or even during summer months if I sat out of doors in the evening. Since wearing your Apparel I have lost every sympton of this.

"I have not failed to make known my happy experience, but I have highly recommended your Treatment everywhere I have travelled, especially as many have expressed surprise at my mountaineering achievements at the age of sixty-five."

Writing on October 25th, 1892, Miss Baker said:

"Your Treatment has been a greater relief to my sufferings than I can express. Do make use of my testimony in any way you like, for I cannot thank you adequately for the benefit I have derived from your Treatment."

Full particulars of the Treatment, and form for gratuitous advice, sent free on application to Mr. B. COPSON GARRATT, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C. Consultations, personally or by letter, free of charge.

'THE CURE OF CONSUMPTION,'

BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA, & CATARRH.

By E. W. Alabone, M.D. Pa., U.S.A., F.R.M.S., late M.R.C.S. Eng., late Consulting Surgeon to the Lower Clapton Orphan Asylum, &c., Lynton House, Highbury Quadrant, London, N.

By the success of this treatment all barriers have been broken down, and it is now an acknowledged fact that CONSUMPTION, BRONCHITIS, and ASTHMA are curable through this discovery, many thousands of cases abandoned as hopeless having been successfully treated.

Dr. CRONIN, M.D., L.S.A., writes:—"You have done wonders for my patient. I hardly thought he could have improved so much under the treatment."

Dr. FAIRBAIRN, M.D., L.R.C.S., writes:—"The success of your treatment of Consumption is simply marvellous. I have had no less than Sixty Cases of Cure." "Your remedy for Consumption has proved a success in my own case, after having been given up by several eminent physicians."—T. YOUNG, L.R.C.P., L.R.C.S., &c., &c.

Dr. WATSON DAVIES, M.D., L.R.C.S., writes:—"I have great pleasure in stating that a near relative of mine, who was in an ADVANCED STAGE OF CONSUMPTION when I commenced your treatment (several members of her family having died of that disease), is now wonderfully improved in all respects, and has entirely lost her cough."

Dr. C. (M.R.C.S. Eng., L.R.C.P. Lond.) writes—"I was invalided in 1882 as unfit for further service, owing to consumption. I placed myself under Dr. Alabone's treatment, and have been able to pursue the practice of my profession, having been actively at work for six months and in good health."

Dr. CAMPBELL, L.R.C.P. Edin., L.R.C.S. Edin., writes:—"My wife has very greatly improved since she commenced your treatment."

Evangelical Schools at Pisa and Cisanello.

THE last report of the excellent work so long and successfully carried on by Miss Carruthers, bears evidence to the ever-increasing efficiency of these schools. Last year, Miss Carruthers added a new and important development of the work by opening a Female Normal Training School, which promises to supply a much-felt want.

The neighbouring priests and nuns do not like the work of Miss Carruthers, and have brought opposition and unfounded charges to bear upon it, with a view to its discredit, and, if possible, its extinction. But in this they have signally failed; for, after a careful investigation into the whole work done, and the quality of the teaching given in these schools, the Minister of Public Instruction has paid Miss Carruthers the high compliment of presenting her with a valuable gold medal, in testimony of the benefit to the State conferred by the excellent institutions associated with that lady's name.

CYPRUS.—A lady who is shortly leaving London to reside in the Island of Cyprus would be glad of information as to any opening for undenominational religious work there. She asks: "Are there any missionaries? What kind of tracts and papers would be most suitable to take for general distribution?" Communications may be addressed to "Hopeful," at the office of THE CHRISTIAN.

AFFLICTIVE SCENES.

Acute suffering is just now being silently borne by large numbers of deserving poor under the notice of the North-East London Gospel Mission. Sick mothers and children with fireless grates enduring direst privations, and others are parting with their already scant furniture and clothing for food.

The Factory Girls and other branches are in full activity. Contributions would be most gratefully received, and may be sent to Mrs. F. A. BEVAN, 59, Prince's Gate, South Kensington, S.W., or to the Director, Mr. WM. CHORLEY, 6, Clephane-road, Canonbury, N. Parcels should be sent to Canonbury.

THE PARIS CITY MISSION

Has for 12 years published Salvation in the capital of France—chiefly to its owvriers. From house to house, in Mission Halls and in cemeteries, by Bible and Gospel tract distribution, in and out of season, its TEN Missionaries have worked on with proof of blessing. Fourteen of its supporters have recently been called HOME. The work is therefore languishing for want of funds. Who will take their place by casting into this part of our Lord's treasury?

THE LONDON FEMALE GUARDIAN SOCIETY.

Founded at Pentonville A.D. 1807, for the RESCUE, RECLAMATION, and PROTECTION of BETRAYED and FALLEN WOMEN, from all parts of the United Kingdom, with IMMEDIATE and FREE ADMISSION to APPLICANTS. Supported by Voluntary Contributions.

President: The Lord KINNAIRD. Chairman: D. MARSHALL LANG, Esq.

TEN THOUSAND Friendless and Fallen Young Women have been welcomed to these HOMES, shielded from evil, instructed in the way of righteousness, and freely supplied with food, clothing, education, and residence for eighteen months. Persons interested in Rescue Work are invited to send cases.

SIX THOUSAND have been placed in service or restored to friends; very many have given clear evidence of true conversion; and a large number continue to enjoy the loving supervision of the Christian Workers of the TRAINING HOME.

THOUSANDS OF CASES unrecorded have also been temporarily helped and sheltered. The Annual Report contains particulars of the great good accomplished, and will be sent on application.

FUNDS ARE MOST URGENTLY NEEDED

To maintain this Christ-like work, and will be thankfully received by the Bankers, BARCLAY, BEVAN, RANSOM, & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C., & 1, Pall Mall East, S.W., and by Mr. W. EDWIN PAGE, Secretary.

Testamentary BEQUESTS are earnestly solicited.

GUARDIAN HOMES, HIGH STREET, STOKE NEWINGTON, N.

"The Children's Bread."

Dear Friends and Fellow-Workers,

Will you help the cause of Christ's Little Ones by sharing to some extent in my well-nigh crushing burdens?

Nearly 5,000 Orphan and Waif Children to-day in the Homes under my care look to me for food and maintenance. These figures are easily written, but hardly anyone outside can realise their weighty import.

Through God's goodness and His people's gifts, all the wants of my children have been hitherto supplied; but now the funds at my disposal are quite exhausted, and I am sorely in need of immediate help.

Meanwhile, my doors still stand open to all the world; every week from 40 to 60 destitute little strangers take their places among my rescued sons and daughters, and the growing volume of their needs can only be met by corresponding self-sacrifice and sympathy on the part of the Lord's servants.

I am now compelled afresh to lay these heavy burdens at the feet of our Master, Christ, and of His servants everywhere; and though my children's necessities are pressingly urgent, I cannot doubt but that the response to their cry through me will be alike prompt and generous.

Our winter's work is growingly imperious in its demands. I cannot, I dare not, close my doors to the timorous knock of a single destitute child; and even beyond the call of the children there arises a wider plaint from thousands of East-End dwellings where the hearth is fireless and the cupboard is bare. Devoted Christian ladies living in our Deaconess House and labouring among the poorest will gladly carry your gifts of love to those whose lives are so cheerless and so wretched.

Who amidst the November fogs will send through me the sunshine of Christian beneficence into the hearts and lives of homeless Little Children and of the thousands beyond them who are needy and suffering?

Who will respond quickly? £30 will give 1,000 of my children food for a single day, or £150 will do the same for all my family; while £3 will spread the table three times for 100 of my Little Waifs. Any gift, however small, will be gratefully acknowledged by our Treasurer, Mr. William Fowler, or by the undersigned.

Ever your faithful fellow-worker in Christ's service
among His Little Ones,

THOS. J. BARNARDO.

Appeals.

Miss Child and her co-workers have resumed their free suppers for poor unemployed seamen during the winter. The distress is already great. Any help towards these suppers will be thankfully received by Miss Child, 173, St. George-street, London, E.

Hospitals in Ceylon.—Several Christian soldiers, trying to work amongst sailors and others in the Colombo General Hospital, are greatly in need of good illustrated and other tracts, both for soldiers and sailors. Parcels may be addressed, No. 2270, Corporal Miles, C Company, 2nd Royal Warwickshire Regiment, Colombo, Ceylon.

Mount Hermon Girls' Orphan Homes, 47, 49, and 55, Cambridge-avenue, Kilburn, N.W.—Mrs. Paddy regrets to say that for some months the money received has fallen far short of the expenditure, and there are heavy bills to meet for painting and repairs that were absolutely necessary to be done. "We are needing at least £400 to enable us to close the year free from debt."

Shoreditch Tabernacle Missions.—Pastor Wm. Cuff writes: "Our poor fund is empty. We urgently need help, and I feel moved to make it known. Here is strong band of trained and experienced workers doing the work. Every one is a voluntary worker. There are about 300. Left-off clothing, money, or food may be sent to the pastor at Shoreditch Tabernacle, Hackney-road, E."

French Evangelical Mission in Soho.—Mesdemoiselles Mathilde and Georgine Barbier, daughters of the late lamented director of this mission, write:—"With our other pressing engagements we cannot carry on the work after Christmas. In order that we may clear all expenses, we shall need £110. As soon as the donations and subscriptions reach the amount estimated, we shall issue a balance-sheet, audited by Mr. Sydney Weatherley, 51, Gordon-square, W.C. Donations may be sent to Mlle. M. Barbier, 67, Oakley-square, London, N.W."

Home for Erring Girls.—Substantial help is asked for the Rescue Home opened at Brixton in the year 1887. We need money, bales of flannel, and other materials for clothing, for left-off clothing of every description, not excepting babylinen. We want also writing and working materials and readable books. Except for the small income derived from the laundry, the Home is entirely supported by subscriptions and donations. Therefore we are thankful when anyone who is sending a girl will give or collect 5s. a week towards her support while in the home. Further particulars may be had from the Lady Superintendent, Miss Stacey, at the Home, 143, Brixton-hill, to whom all parcels of clothing or books should be sent direct. Subscriptions or donations will be gladly received.—Maria Bowden McArthur, Treasurer, 79, Holland-park, London, W.

Ragged School Union.—Mr. J. R. Diggles writes on behalf of the Poor Children's Aid Society, which, in order to reduce the working expenses to a minimum, has been incorporated with the Ragged School Union, an old-established organisation, well adapted for carrying on its special work. In addition to its large operations in aid of the children of the Ragged School Missions, the Union is now working on behalf of the ill-clad and ill-shod children in the poorer Board and non-Board Schools. There are, as the teachers, superintendents, and School Board visitors well know, many such on whose behalf they plead for liberal aid. The special need at this season is, warm clothing and boots, together with medical attendance for destitute sick children. The Union would be grateful for gifts of clothing or for donations to buy suitable clothing and boots for those children who either are attending, or ought to be attending school, but who stand in need of this help. Donations and gifts of clothing may be sent to Mr. John Kirk, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

Suited for Clergymen and Laymen engaged in Mission Services or evangelistic work of any kind. Also for Candidates for Confirmation, Sunday-school Teachers, and District Visitors, or for Parents who want to give their grown-up children an attractive-looking book which will help them to a right understanding of the simple plan of salvation.

CHRISTIAN.—"This book has been written specially for the purpose of bringing home the Gospel to those who are unsaved. We trust that it may be circulated among educated people, for which class it is more especially suited."

RECORD.—"It is a great comfort to find a distinctly evangelistic book sound on the nature of sin, sound on substitution, sound on holiness, sound on regeneration, sound on conversion, sound on the means of grace. We are glad to know of a book like this to put into the hands of those who are seeking 'the way of the tree of life.'"

CHURCH MISSIONARY INTELLIGENCER.—"The book will be a capital one to give to those who have come under the power of the Gospel at parochial missions, and are asking their way to Zion; and it may also be profitably used by speakers and teachers."

ENLARGEMENT of

CASSELL'S MAGAZINE.

NOTICE.

CASSELL'S FAMILY MAGAZINE is enlarged to 80 Pages Monthly, with the DECEMBER PART now ready, price 7d.

CASSELL'S FAMILY MAGAZINE occupies a unique position amongst the Monthlies of the present day. Throughout the United Kingdom and abroad it has won for itself a foremost place as a magazine in which every member of the family takes an individual interest. The success of the Magazine has been so pronounced that its circulation has more than quadrupled in recent years. Messrs. Cassell and Company have now determined to permanently enlarge the Magazine, without increase of price, by the addition of 16 pages monthly, commencing with the December Part, 1892. By means of the additional space thus placed at his disposal the Editor has been able to arrange for a Series of New Features of the highest importance and interest, some particulars of which will be found in the Prospectus of the New Volume, which can now be obtained of all Booksellers. CASSELL AND COMPANY, LTD., Ludgate-hill, London.

THE FORTY-FIRST SERIES OF CASES.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

DISEASED RIGHT LUNG.

Mr. W. H. [illegible], Grocer, of BUDE, NORTH CORNWALL, on the 24th June last, writes me as follows:—"Several years ago, when residing at Meddon-street, Bideford, Devon, I was under your treatment, and I believe that under God I owe my present state of good health to you. I came to Coombe Lodge, and received more hope and encouragement than from any other physician."

On referring to the case in my patients' book I find that he had for 12 months been out of health, and had just had hæmorrhage. He was still spitting blood with phlegm, and was in a very weak state. There was disease of the apex of the right lung, well marked, and slight disease in the left. He had been treated with hypophosphite of lime, malt extract, and cod liver oil.

Having recovered under my treatment, he has been anxious to do good by making it known. "I have recommended it," he says, "to a great many, and it has proved of the greatest service in restoring health and strength."

The Gift of God.

A SERIES OF ADDRESSES

By Pastor THEODORE MONOD.

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"To the anxious inquirer, the new convert, the seeker after holiness, and the mature believer, we heartily recommend this book."—Wesleyan Methodist Magazine.

"These addresses are clear as a sunbeam, and full of spiritual force. The source, nature, reception, and consequence of the gift of God are treated, and the last chapters relate to its purpose and how to use it. Our counsel is, by all means get the book."—King's Highway.

Calls to Christ.

A SERIES OF GOSPEL ADDRESSES.

By Rev. W. R. NICOLL, M.A., LL.D.

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"The addresses are marked by much freshness and vigour, as well as earnestness and warmth. The writer has the gift of putting familiar truths in new aspects, and of making admonitions strike and tell which, coming even from earnest lips, are sometimes pointless and unimpressive. We heartily commend the book."—Presbyterian Messenger.

"Force and freshness are eminently the characteristics of these 'Calls to Christ'; they are also brief to a proverb, and hence they may be of great service to an earnest evangelist who knows how to use another man's thoughts. . . But for all readers this collection of addresses contains admirable instruction, counsel, and stimulus."—Rev. C. H. SPURGEON in The Sword and Trowel.

CONTENTS:—

ABRAHAM; or, The Obedience of Faith.
ISRAEL: A Prince with God.
JOSEPH: Be'oved—Hated—Exalted.
MOSES: The Servant of God.
ELIJAH: And the Secret of his Power.

REVIEW:—

"The studies in the lives and times of Biblical characters which the Rev. F. B. MEYER has from time to time issued during the last few years have been marked by great care in preparation, and a suggestiveness that has made them very acceptable to preachers and teachers."

—The Quiver.

Each Volume contains Nine Original Engravings, and is neatly bound in Cloth Boards with Gilt Lettering.

 Any Volume of this Biographical Series may be had separately, in Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.; Cloth Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

OTHER WORKS BY REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

EXPOSITORY SERIES.

The Life and Light of Men. Expositions of John I.—XII. 5th Thousand. Cloth, 2s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

Review from The Presbyterian, August 26th, 1892:—

"These 'Expositions' are not critical; they are practical. They do t deal with the 'text,' nor with 'readings,' nor with any of the difficult cological problems of the Fourth Gospel; but they are evidently signed to be suggestive, to be helpful, to ordinary everyday readers of e New Testament, and it is certain that in many instances this end will attained."

er a candid critical survey of the whole volume, the reviewer sums up:—

"But while we have said all this, we are free to confess that on the ole we like the book. A good healthful spirit pervades its entire aching; and there is such a manifest sympathy with the life, and ork, and words of Jesus that we cannot but heartily wish it success."

Tried by Fire. Expositions of the First Epistle of Peter. 10th Thousand. Cloth, 2s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

Review from The British Weekly:—

"The popularity of Mr. Meyer's Expositions is a good sign of the s. This, on the First Epistle of Peter, is one of the best, and is full nder Christian wisdom. There are many unobtrusive signs of thought culture throughout; but the chief charm of the book is its earnest plicity."

DEVOTIONAL SERIES.

The Shepherd Psalm. Meditations on the 23rd Psalm. 30th Thousand. Cloth, 1s. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

A Review from The Irish Congregational Magazine:—

"We have never read anything so charming on the twenty-third Psalm as this volume from the pen of Mr. Meyer. The devout reader will find it one of the most comforting, cheering, and inspiring books he can read."

Christian Living. Practical Counsels concerning the Christian Life. 27th Thousand. Cloth, 1s. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

A Review from Footsteps of Truth:—

"A choice book of nine chapters, into which is condensed a mass of helpful instructions and wise practical counsel on various topics relating to the Christian life."

The Present Tenses of the Blessed LIFE. 28th Thousand. Cloth, 1s. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

A Review from The Record:—

"An excellent little book, full of practical Christianity; a pocket companion which will be valued by those whose dearest aim it is to walk daily more closely with God."

The Future Tenses of the Blessed LIFE. Uniform with the Devotional Series. Cloth boards, 1s.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

Extract from Preface:—

"If by the constitution of our minds we must anticipate the future, then let us believe that it is radiant with His presence, filling each moment to its outermost rim. No day, whatever it takes, can deprive us of Him. Each day will utter to the next some speech of His love. All the days linked together and entwined with His present grace will make a golden chain of holy and blessed living."

The Psalms. Notes and Readings. Pocket Edition. 8th Thousand. Cloth, 1s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s.

This volume is also published in demy 8vo size, as one of "THE CHRISTIAN BIBLE READINGS" Series of Expositions. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt, 2s. 6d.

A Review from The Cambridgeshire Congregational Magazine:—

"A pocket commentary on the entire book of Hebrew song. The treatment of each Psalm is brief, plain, and well planned. The divisions are usefully suggestive for public addresses, and the fillings in are the pith and marrow of Gospel truth. For private devotional use also it is a little treasure."

LONDON: MORGAN AND SCOTT, 12, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, E.C., and may be ordered of any Bookseller.

Bynin LIQUID MALT, is another valuable ailment in consumption and wasting diseases, being not only a highly concentrated and nutritious food, but a powerful aid to digestion, and is a useful adjunct to Cod-liver Oil.

The Lancet writes: "A highly diastasic Malt Extract. One ounce of BYNIN will digest perfectly one pound of starch. This is a most favourable result, and, coupled with the fluidity and pleasant flavour, renders this preparation a most valuable one."

In Capsuled Bottles ONLY, at 1s. 9d. and 3s. each. Sold Everywhere.

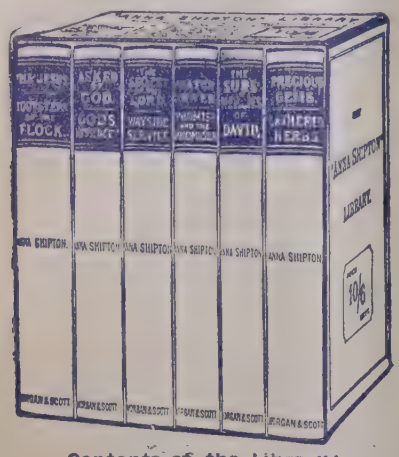
SOCIETY FOR RELIEF OF PERSECUTED JEWS.

MOST SERIOUS DISTRESS AMONG JEWISH REFUGEES IN PALESTINE.



Mr. R. SCOTT MONCRIEFF also reports severe persecution, barbarous cruelties, with loss of life and forcible eviction of hundreds of families in Roumania (while their leases are unexpired). Constantinople, Smyrna, Salonica, are full of Refugees—kindly treated by Turkish Government. Jewish Refugees continue to arrive in Palestine DESTITUTE. Our house, built for first shelter at Jaffa, is now open and occupied. We ask for funds, that we may extend relief during this winter's rains, storms, and snows as last winter, when above 7,000 were fed daily; also for employment at Abraham's Vineyard, Jerusalem, in cultivation, stone quarrying, olive oil soap making, and for PURCHASE OF LAND in Galilee, NOW offered at moderate price, which must be bought promptly if at all. Prices are rising now that Jaffa Railway is open and others being constructed.

"Anna Shipton occupies a niche all her own; for, while all her chapters could be described as sermons, they are unique sermons—after the order of those of Frances Ridley Havergal. The volumes embraced in the 'Library' are simple, cultured, persuasive. They are gems: and no single reading can reveal their many and varied excellences. No more helpful present could be made to a young lady, a Sunday-school teacher, or a Sunday-school library."—Oldham Chronicle.

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND EVANGELICAL COLLEGE AND SCHOOL COMPANY, LIMITED.

Was formed in December, 1890, under the auspices of the Central Committee of the Union of Clerical and Lay Associations for the purpose of establishing and maintaining Colleges at the Universities and Boys' and Girls' Schools in different parts of England, to be carried on in accordance with the Protestant and Evangelical principles of the Church of England.
This object is secured by the Memorandum and Articles of Association.
DIRECTORS.—Rev. Claude Bosanquet, M.A.; Rev. Canon Brooke, M.A.; William D. Cruddas, Esq.; Sydney Gedge, Esq., M.A.; General G. Hutchinson, C.B., C.S.I.; Rev. W. E. Rowlands, M.A.; Rev. A. J. P. Shepherd, M.A.; P. V. Smith, Esq., M.A.; Rev. H. W. Webb Peploe, M.A.; Rev. G. F. Whidborne, M.A.; Rev. J. W. Marshall, M.A.
The Directors receive no remuneration.
The freehold of Monkton Combe School has been bought, but the school is at present carried on at the Head Master's own risk.
The Company have now obtained from the Trent College Company, Limited, the option, until the 20th December next, of purchasing on very favourable terms, Trent College, near Derby, and all the property of that company, consisting of about 21 acres of freehold land, school buildings, with good accommodation for 240 boys, chapel, head master's residence, hospital, gymnasium, &c., and also fixtures, furniture, and school appliances, and the goodwill of the school and all prize and scholarship funds.
It has cost nearly £40,000 to buy the land and erect and equip the School Buildings, Chapel, &c., but as a part of the purchase money will remain on mortgage and a part will be paid in shares of the Company, a sum of £5,000 only is needed to complete the purchase and carry on the School.
It is intended that the education shall be equal to that given in first-class public schools fitting boys to enter the Universities, the Army and Navy, the Professions, or the Civil Service, and it will be based upon the Scriptures and principles of the English Reformation; and the reasonable terms of purchase will enable these advantages to be supplied at a moderate annual cost.
The Directors appeal to all who value such education to enable them to carry into effect this most desirable purchase either by giving donations in money or by subscribing for shares in the Company. These are of £1 each, and Prospectuses and Forms of Application may be obtained from the Organising Secretary, Mr. W. H. WATHEN, 12, Matheson-road, W.; or the Secretary, Mr. W. G. BARTLE, at the Company's Office, 1, Poet's Corner, Westminster, S.W.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving a portrait and sketch of the late Rev. DAVID SAUNDERS, D.D., Welsh Presbyterian minister, Swansea.

☞ We beg to call attention to the Special Announcement made above with reference to Subscriptions for the ensuing year. It will greatly facilitate our work at this season if friends will kindly note the particulars.

☞ Will those of our readers who receive THE CHRISTIAN direct from the Office by post, and who have not recently communicated with us, kindly send their present full postal address; especially Missionaries and others in foreign countries.

We have received several communications with reference to our recent notes on Nurses and Homes and Institutes for Nurses. The subject in all its bearings is an important one, and we shall return to it in an early number.

We would direct the attention of London readers to the important series of meetings to be held at Exeter Hall, on Wednesday next week, for the furtherance of Protestant principles, and for a consideration of the bearings of the recent Lincoln judgment.

"A Bible-class teacher" writes to us inquiring whether a Bible training institute, similar to the one recently established in Glasgow, could not be set on foot in London. We see every reason why there should be one, and trust that some generous friend in the south will imitate the example of Mr. Campbell White in the north, and give such an institution a good start.

Mr. A. C. P. Coote, secretary of the Orphan Working School (73, Cheapside, E.C.) writes suggesting that a yearly Christmas morning collection should be organised in London, for the benefit of Orphanages, as the summer collection is taken for the hospitals. Such a collection in churches, at the private breakfast table, and in other ways would, if properly distributed, go far to relieve orphan institutions from financial pressure.

A Chamber of Arbitration for the settlement of trade disputes has been formed through the joint efforts of the City of London Corporation and the Chamber of Commerce, and was inaugurated a few days ago. We trust, therefore, so far as the metropolis is concerned, that we shall in future see fewer of the unhappy strikes which have brought so much distress upon the workers and have done so much to widen the gulf between employers and employed.

Our readers are earnestly requested to remember in prayer the Decennial Conference of Missionaries in India, to be held in Bombay Dec. 29 to Jan. 4. There are signs of great promise of an ingathering to Christ in India, and it is hoped that those who attend this important gathering will receive such a baptism of the Holy Spirit that they shall be strengthened for their work, and drawn more closely together in a common effort for the evangelisation of the country. The programme of the conference is very comprehensive one.

We report on another page last week's meeting of the National Vigilance Association. The facts mentioned from the platform and detailed in the printed report, abundantly prove that the society is doing a valuable and sorely-needed work. In suppressing open and shameless vice, it has earned the public gratitude; as a terror to evil-doers, it has been the means of saving many young girls from peril, while it has also been a ready helper of not a few cruelly betrayed and wronged. Such an association ought surely to be able to rely fully on the sympathy of all.

The letter of "Fellow-worker" on p. 20 expresses the actual experience of many mission superintendents. On all hands we hear of stress and anxiety. The allegation that this state of things is consequent upon the Churches being increasingly intolerant of "independent" enterprise is proper matter for debate. Doubtless there are among our readers many whose knowledge and experience would give weight to any contribution they might make to this important discussion.

In the November issue of Night and Day, Dr. Barnardo wrote an article on the now famous Gossage case, expressing somewhat freely his views as to the effect of the recent decision in the House of Lords, which referred the case back to the Lower Court for further consideration. This article was construed by the other side as a contempt of Court, and they obtained a rule nisi, which was argued before the Divisional Court on Monday last. Dr. Barnardo appeared in person, and disclaimed all thought or intention of committing a breach of the law; he believed he was merely commenting legitimately on a past decision of the Court of Final Appeal.

In giving judgment, the Lord Chief Justice spoke in the very highest terms of Dr. Barnardo's work, and said he did not impute to him any unworthy motive or intention in the writing of the article complained of. At the same time he had contravened a wholesome and necessary law that, in the interests of justice, all cases sub-judice should not be commented on in the public press. For this offence he would have to pay £25 and the costs of the proceedings. We are sure that no one will regret more than Dr. Barnardo himself that he has been unwittingly betrayed into a legal offence; we trust the inadvertence will not cause any slackening of the flow of public support to his institutions that are just now in circumstances of special need, but the reverse; and that the expenses of this suit will be contributed by his friends. It is worthy of note that the Gossage case largely contributed to the passing of the Custody of Children's Act, which prevented the recurrence of such vexatious proceedings.

An extraordinary and almost incredible story of priestly intolerance and oppression comes to us from our Irish correspondent. As the narrative is given at length in the Donegal Independent of Nov. 11, it would appear that because a Mrs. M'Goldrick, residing at Belleek, co. Fermanagh, had not "attended to her religious duties," a conspiracy was formed to deprive her of her personal liberty. She was cited to appear at the local petty sessions on a warrant procured by her husband, charging her with being of unsound mind. The magistrates unanimously agreed that she was not insane, and discharged her from custody. Notwithstanding this decision the woman, on her return from the court, was waylaid by a mob, headed by the priest, and was bodily carried off, being afterwards consigned to the lunatic asylum at Omagh.

A more monstrous outrage on the liberty of the subject, in a free country, can scarcely be conceived, but when the minions of the Church of Rome desire to carry out their purposes law is treated with contempt, wherever that is possible to them. We do not wonder that the friends of freedom in Ireland are about to move the courts for a writ of habeas corpus. In order to do this monetary help will be needed, which we trust will be forthcoming without delay. Any who can sympathize should communicate with Mr. Thomas Connellan, editor of the Catholic, Messrs. Mecredy and Kyle, Lower Abbey-street, Dublin.

The artisan's son is better educated than his father. His mother instils into him the ambition to "earn his living without taking his coat off." Accordingly, he seeks to become a clerk or an assistant in a shop. Bad for him and bad for the country. Bad for him, because the ability to exercise a handicraft often makes the difference between living and starving; bad for the country, because there are too many clerks and countermen already, and because the man whose hand is educated as well as his head is a more useful and less burdensome member of society.

But the London Y.M.C.A. receives a clerk and excludes an artisan. In this it helps to perpetuate a mischievous class distinction. When the association was formed, this was perhaps inevitable. But the School Board is working a revolution. One of the necessities of the present day is to dignify labour. The Y.M.C.A. has a great opportunity to help or to hinder this useful consummation. This cannot be done at once, but little by little, line upon line, precept upon precept, it can teach its members that a well-conducted mechanic is not the inferior of a well-conducted clerk, but is in fact more essential to the community at home or abroad.

We do not lose sight of the fact that many Y.M.C.A.'s do throw open their membership to artisans and mechanics, as well as to commercial young men, stipulating only that they shall be suitably dressed. When difficulties arise, the fault is often as much on the side of the artisan as the clerk or the assistant. But we believe that an harmonious solution may be found if men inside the Association and friends outside will exercise Christian patience and forbearance, considerateness and common sense.

Another observation. It occasionally happens (we hope very occasionally) that young people employed in associations which exist for the well-being of employés, are less considerately dealt with, and have longer hours, more onerous duties, less holidays and less pay, than they would in a house of business. This is an evil needing speedily to be remedied, especially in the case of the weaker sex.

Van dwellers are feeling the pressure of those who desire that van children should receive a proper education. A proposal has been made by one of them to place a school van on the road to follow the fairs which the showmen frequent. Mr. Acland, the Minister of Education, is to be asked to give the proposal his consideration. The method for reaching the same end proposed by Mr. George Smith, of Coalville, seems much more effectual. He would open the school doors to all gipsy and van children by a free passbook on simple, easy, workable lines; and would make the registration of vans compulsory. It is detrimental to the best interests of those thousands of nomad children that they are still outside all educational legislation, and beyond the reach of regular religious training.

A pathetic letter from "No. 15,481" in The Daily News of December 22 on the reclamation of criminals, goes straight to a point which has yet to be solved on this all-important subject. This poor unfortunate detailed his private history—how he had squandered fortune, committed forgery, and suffered two years' imprisonment. He found others in prison like himself who hoped, on their release, to regain by honest work the characters they had lost. But within the prison walls plots began to be laid by their degraded fellow-prisoners, which they were to work out together on their release, and which only men of education could carry through. Happily, when the hour of freedom arrived, he was able to remain two or three hours longer, and escape the friendly offices of old companions who were waiting for him at the prison gate. For such as he the Prisoners' Aid Society can do nothing. For eighteen months he has been leading a wretched existence, going days without food, walking the streets by night, unable to find employment.

This poor man, still under thirty years of age, has found that the way of transgressors is hard. But surely our penal and social systems should not make it harder than it need be. Could not some remedial method be introduced whereby such a life might be made useful and happy? The powers of Christianity in this direction are yet to be developed.

A suggestion made by this unhappy man deserves the best consideration of the authorities. He urges that under no circumstances persons undergoing their first term should be allowed to associate with hardened offenders. This association, he declares, is the fruitful source from which comes the "habitual criminal." We hope the prison authorities will be able to do something in the direction indicated, and so give these first offenders a chance of returning to honest paths.

Judging from a recent letter of the Vienna correspondent of The Standard, Hungary appears to be on the eve of a struggle which will not be without interest as an object lesson to other European Powers. The Roman Catholic Church is up in arms against a proposed bill introducing compulsory civil marriage. We read that the whole paraphernalia of Ultramontane warfare is to be brought out by the fanatics of the Vatican. Among other methods of intimidation compulsory civil marriage is to be decried from every pulpit as a sacrilege. Those united by the civil authorities are to be regarded as living in concubinage. Girls at school are to be warned of the sin of marriage before a registrar, and the services of women are to be largely engaged in carrying on the agitation. It is earnestly to be hoped that the Government will be firm and strong enough to withstand this Popish aggression.

The writer of an article on Japan in The Times of November 22nd, touches upon the progress of Christianity in that country. He states as the result of his observation that although the State has withdrawn its sanction from Buddhism, the lower classes cling to its absurd rites, and among the lettered classes "the advance of knowledge has brought a widespread scepticism." He considers that there is much waste of missionary power owing to its being spread over so many churches, societies, or sects.

We are justified, however, in taking a hopeful view of the prospects of Christianity in Japan. It is through native agency that the great mass of the people must be brought into the light of the Gospel. There are already several native Christian pastors and many students for the ministry, and those who know can testify how willingly and effectually the native converts spread the glad tidings of great joy among their fellow-countrymen.

In a thoughtful article on "The Christian a Trustee" in the current issue of The Homiletic Review, President M. E. Gates, of Amherst College, Mass., points out what is obviously true, but not uncommonly overlooked—that there is no essential difference in the responsibility that attaches to the use of small or large means.

No Christian can feel that the warnings and responsibilities that attend the possession of wealth do not concern himself. Who has not felt the tendency to pass these warnings on to the very wealthy? Yet the essential nature of wealth lies not at all in its quantity, not at all in the amount of money at a man's disposal. When Christ cautions his followers as to the deceitfulness of riches, as to the difficulties that those who trust in riches will find in entering the kingdom of heaven, the essential meaning of the word translated "riches" is, usable values embodied in material things. The word used is one that lays no stress upon great wealth. It is a word that may properly be used for very small possessions.

Whatever possession is capable of standing between a man's soul and a vital dependence upon God day by day, whatever property is capable of giving the comfortable sense of safety that comes from "having means behind you," be they large or small, God warns us that we are to regard with suspicion and to use with fear and trembling, as in the sight of a jealous God, who has personified this love of property, "Mammon," as his one great rival for the first place in the hearts of men.

The stewardship of money, talents, and influence, is a solved problem to the man who serves the Lord with his whole heart.

The Divine Unity of Scripture.

In our earnest contention for the faith once delivered to the saints, two methods are admissible. We may either examine and refute in detail the objections advanced by its antagonists; or we may exhibit in strong and broad outline its irresistible claim to our immediate acceptance. In present circumstances we can dispense with neither. Nevertheless, if we are anxious rather to win the loyal assent of our fellow-men than to refute our opponents, the latter and positive proof is preferable to the former. To disarm opposition, desirable though it be, is not exactly equivalent to the establishment of the truth for which we are chiefly concerned. Consequently, an argument mainly addressed to the setting forth of the evidence contained in Scripture itself for its own veracity and authority appears to us of prime importance. Naturally and rightly, we are more desirous to convince all than to silence some.

To disprove an adverse criticism is a much lighter task than to place beyond contradiction the truth for which we contend. It is always easier to discern and repel a feeble attack than to carry the field by an overwhelming advance. Apologists who are content merely with resisting the assaults of unbelief are not nearly so satisfactory as those who, armed in the full panoply of faith, press bravely on the foe. For this reason we have always valued the writings of the loved and lamented Dr. Saphir far above the ordinary pleas in defence of Christianity. He never condescends to take the position of a mere controversialist. Strong in the assurance of an impregnable faith, he fearlessly challenges the whole field. At a time when disquiet, if not dismay, was widely prevalent, his priceless *Christ and the Scriptures did much to allay the growing alarm. Taking our Saviour as the centre, he showed with remarkable clearness and conclusiveness that the Bible was one organic whole. Though this booklet has been in circulation for several years, it is not likely to be superseded soon.

In the winter of 1888 and the spring of 1889 Dr. Saphir delivered a series of lectures in Kensington, on "The Divine Unity of Scripture." These are now published in a handsome volume from the reporter's notes.† Though they have not the advantage of the author's own revision we like them none the less. The freshness and directness of his spoken style give them both point and power. When they were delivered we were present on every occasion. Our pleasure and profit in listening to them we can scarcely exaggerate. Since then, we have read them once in manuscript and twice in book form, from cover to cover, and our last perusal has been the dearest and most delightsome. We are not saying too much when we pronounce these lectures at once unique and exquisite. Though the language is at all times severely simple, the thought is serious and profound. Each lecture is a link in a chain of constructive argument for the inspiration of Scripture, and so completely is each fashioned, and so thoroughly are the links clasped to each other, that it will be no easy task to break the chain. For years we have not read any book so satisfactory from the Christian standpoint. Indeed, we are confident that no man other than a devout Jew, an earnest Christian, and a ripe biblical scholar, could have produced such a volume. Should any of our readers be induced by our strongly-worded commendation to procure and study the book, we are confident they will thereafter confess we have fairly earned and fully deserved their lasting gratitude.

In our second reading we have marked page after page for quotation, but within our limits we can only give a very few characteristic passages. A recent writer quotes Hosea's reference to teraphim as if it were a quasi sanction of idolatry. How differently does this eminently clear-sighted reader of his prophecy interpret it. "The great German metaphysician Hegel said that the history of the Jews was an enigma to him; he understood the philosophy of the history of other nations, but here was a problem that he could not solve. No man can solve it, because they are the nation which God has set apart—the paradox of the world's history, that paradox which finds its solution only in Jesus Christ, for as the prophet Hosea said, 'Many days—a long period—the children of Israel shall be without king, without priest, without ephod, but at the same time without idolatry, either public or private.' Formerlyt hey fell into idolatry. Since their dispersion they have not fallen into idolatry."

Speaking of advanced preaching, which, under pretence of historical criticism, limits the knowledge of each writer in the Bible by his own times and circumstances, Dr. Saphir says: "The New Testament exposition of the Old Testament is the only true exposition, for it explains not merely what David and the prophets could understand and tried to understand, but what the Holy Spirit understood, and deposited with them distinctly, in this way. Supposing that there is a little plant before me, I can examine it. But supposing that I have a powerful microscope, I look at it again, and now I can see a number of things which before were entirely non-existent to me. Have I put anything into that plant which was not there before? Have I changed the plant? Have I introduced my pet ideas into that plant? So when we read Leviticus with the light of the epistle to the Hebrews; when we read the whole Old Testament with the light of the evangels and the epistles, that is exposition, not imposition. We do not put anything into it. The Holy Spirit enlarges our vision to see what is already there."

Summing up a thoroughgoing proof of the decisiveness of the testimony given by Jesus to Scripture, Dr. Saphir says boldly and truly: "The Bible needs no defence. The Bible defends itself, the Bible explains itself. I do not dread the pagans, I do not dread the infidels, I do not dread the sceptics. I dread the false, compromising, and conciliatory modern teaching in our churches. That is the only thing that is to be dreaded. Let the Bible only be kept separate. As it is, it needs no defence. Britannia needs no bulwarks; and why? Because God has separated her by the sea. That is her strength and her defence. The Scripture needs no bulwarks. The Word of God is the Sword of the Spirit, and whoever heard of defending a sword? It is the enemy who will advise you to put the sword into the sheath."

But we must end here with a last word of advice: Beg, borrow, or—best of all—buy the book, and study it for yourselves. Phos.

"THE WAY TO GOD."—A lady working in France reminds us that Mr. Moody's book, "The Way to God," has been translated into French, and published in France, and urges that if copies were sent to priests, and perhaps the maires de communes great good might be done. Our correspondent thinks many might be glad to aid in such an effort. Gifts sent to the editor's care will be forwarded for the purpose.

Who are the Laity?

The surgeon probes to the bottom of the wound. The physician seeks the cause of the disease. God protests against healing slightly the wound of the daughter of his people, or daubing the wall with untempered mortar. The twofold disease of Sacerdotalism and Sacramentarianism is so evidently poisoning the Church everywhere that true men in the Establishment and out of it are beginning to probe the cancer to its core.

Thus an editorial, in our excellent contemporary The Fireside, headed with the significant questions: "What can be done? Who are the Laity?" makes the following statements:—

There is no recognition of sacerdotal priest or altar in our prayer book, from the first page to the last. Nevertheless, a considerable number of the clergy are avowedly Sacerdotalists; and not only in the pulpit, but by the introduction of certain significant practices in our services, they are undermining—we dare say under a conviction that they are right in doing so—the true Protestant character of our Church.

After a reference to the ecclesiastical litigation of recent years, and showing its unsatisfactory results, we come to the following passage, which is no less significant than the footnote appended to it, drawing attention to the remarkable silence of three ecclesiastical papers, which give no answer to the question, "Who are the Laity?"

If, indeed, the lay members of our Church, in each congregation, possessed the New Testament qualifications and rights of Church membership, and exercised its corresponding duties, we could see a way out of the difficulty. But our lay-members are really powerless. No one, in fact, can tell us who they are; * and in each case the clergyman in possession of a benefice, in dealing with these practices, is actually and entirely irresponsible.

This question, "Who are the Laity?" means more and goes deeper than probably is in the mind of the writer in The Fireside. It reaches to the root and centre and core of ecclesiastical pretension.

"Who are the Laity?" We quote the definitions by lexicographers, of both Clergy and Laity:—

Clergy (Gr. lot or patrimony).—That order of men which is peculiarly appropriated to the service of God, and devoted to wait at the altar as God's lot and inheritance.—Bailey. The whole ministers of the Established Church, or of all Churches having episcopal ordination, or more rarely of the Churches of Christendom. It is opposed to "laity."—Encyclopædic Dictionary. A body of men set apart and consecrated by due ordination to the duties of public ministration in the Christian Church. Persons connected with the clerical profession or the religious orders.—Century Dictionary.

Laity.—The common people as distinguished from the clergy.—Bailey. The people as distinguished from the clergy; laymen collectively. The term was first used in the second century. At a council held at Rome in 502, laymen were prohibited from interfering with the affairs of the Church.—Encyclopædic Dictionary. The people, as distinguished from the clergy; the body of the people not in orders.—Century Dictionary.

Now let us turn to the fountain-head of truth; what saith the Scripture? The words laity and clergy—i.e., people and inheritance—are used as parallel terms in the LXX. (the Greek version of the Old Testament) in the following passages, and in many more:—

Deut. iv. 20.—The Lord hath taken you, and brought you forth out of the iron furnace, out of Egypt, to be unto Him a people of inheritance (LXX. laon engclēron, a clergy laity) as at this day.

Ibid. ix. 29.—Yet they are thy people and thine inheritance (LXX.—thy laos and thy clēros—thy laity and thy clergy).

1 Kings viii. 51, 53.—They be thy people (laos, laity) and thine inheritance (clēronomia, derivative of cleros) . . . for Thou didst separate them from among all the peoples (laities) of the earth, to be thine inheritance (thy clergy).

Psalm lxxviii. 62.—He gave his people (his laity) over also unto the sword; and was wroth with his inheritance (his clergy).

It is manifest that the whole people of Israel were Jehovah's inheritance (or lot, or clergy) out of all the peoples of the earth, just as the various portions of Palestine were the lots, or allotments, of the various tribes. And this fixes the meaning of 1 Peter v. 1-4, quoted below.

The unscriptural distinction between clergy and laity is the basis of all sacerdotal machinery; and the perversion of the two ordinances, Baptism and the Lord's Supper, from outward and visible signs of inward and spiritual grace, to "sacraments" which can be validly "administered" only by "ordained" men, is the power by which the machinery is worked.

But true and faithful men will say with the writer in The Fireside, "We now see clearly what is needed. In one word, we need New Testament organisation. Church membership must be Scripturally defined and acted upon." (The italics are his own.) We say a thousand times, Amen. And with him we add, "Our hope now is that New Testament principles of Church organisation and government may be thoroughly studied by the laity." One of the first results of such study will be the discovery which lies upon the surface of both the Old Testament and the New: that there is no difference—that there is no such thing in Scripture as clergy distinct from laity—that the clergy are the laity and the laity are the clergy—the Lord's "people" are his "heritage." And the usurped sacerdotal supremacy of the See of St. Peter is denounced beforehand by the Holy Ghost using the pen of Peter; and that denunciation is pathetically pressed by an appeal to the sufferings of Christ, and majestically enforced by the promise of the glories that shall follow, upon the elders, of whom he himself was one.

The elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed: feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; neither as being lords over God's clēros, God's clergy, God's heritage—but being ensamples to the flock. 1 Peter v. 1-4.

Peter was writing "to the strangers or sojourners of the dispersion," primarily therefore to Hebrew Christians, though including all the spiritual seed of Abraham. The use of the word clēros by this Apostle would, therefore, be understood as referring to the whole people of God, as his inheritance out of all the peoples of the earth; and the word is in the plural number, because, just as Israel was divided into tribes, so the Church of God is divided into churches or congregations. The "heritage" is equivalent to the "flock," just as the "inheritance" is equivalent to the "people" in the Old Testament passages quoted above.

It would be a great mistake to suppose that Sacerdotalism and Sacramentarianism are confined to the Established Church or to Romanising Ritualists. The love of position and power, of authority and influence, is inherent in human nature, and therefore Sacerdotalism and Sacramentarianism will be found, more or less, in the Evangelical section of the Church of England and amongst the Nonconformist bodies.

But the prevalence and continuance of the evil does not lie at the door of the shepherds any more than of the flock. "The prophets prophesy falsely; and the priests bear rule by their means; and my people love to have it so."

* The question has just been asked in three ecclesiastical papers—The Record, The Rock, The English Churchman—not a single response has been given by any of the clergy. The silence is indeed significant.

If they can cast their responsibilities toward God on the "priests," and have their account kept right in the books above, while they devote themselves to the pleasures or the cares of earth, they are content; they love to have it so.

Evangelical men, Conformist and Nonconformist, emphatically deny that any order of men can claim an exclusive priesthood. They are united in holding and affirming that we have one great High Priest, who has passed through the heavens, Jesus the Son of God; and that He has made all his people, whom He loves and has washed in his own blood, severally and unitedly kings and priests to his God and Father. Will Evangelical men go one step further—a step consistent with, and necessitated by, the acknowledgment of all believers as priests—the acknowledgment of all believers as God's heritage, God's clergy? The claim to be clergy is a claim to be priests, because the greater includes the less. No portion of God's people can exclusively claim to be his heritage, his clergy, any more than they can claim to be his priests.

As the writer in The Fireside has shown, "the clergyman in possession of a benefice, in dealing with these (sacerdotal) practices, is entirely irresponsible." Is it not necessary, therefore, as we have said in our opening sentence, to probe the wound to the core?

HOMES FOR THE AGED POOR.

These Homes have supplied a felt need. They embrace eleven houses, containing 140 aged persons. If funds were forthcoming, several more could be immediately filled by anxious applicants, whose cases are urgent, but to whom the mournful answer must be given "No room."

The work of the charity has, up to the present time, been entirely voluntary; no offices, no paid officials, absorb the funds. The amount of comfort bestowed on the fortunate inmates is greatly in excess of the small cost.

Help is needed to pay off the remaining mortgage debt of £1500. Seven of the Homes will then be the permanent property of the charity. A supply of coal to the aged ones during the inclement months of winter, and extra comforts to the sick, are also pressing wants.

While temporal comfort is largely bestowed, every effort is made to brighten the descent of the hill of life to many of God's faithful servants; and to win those who, in the struggle for daily bread, and amidst the pressing cares of life, have neglected to seek a Saviour and to lay up treasure above.

A report of the work of the Homes for the Aged Poor, and further information, may be had on application to the honorary secretaries, the Misses Harrison, 5, Grand Acre-terrace, Anerley, S.E.

Working Girls in London.

It has been determined to transplant Garfield House from Brixton-road to a more needed locality in a centre where a larger and more helpful work can be carried on at a considerably lessened expenditure. The trustees have secured the large and roomy house situate at No. 8, Fitzroy-square, W., which, when fully adapted for the purposes of a home, can provide for a total number of from eighty to one hundred young workwomen.

To render the house immediately tenantable for about fifty inmates, it is necessary to re-arrange some parts of the structure and to alter the system of drainage. This, with the additional furnishing and the cost of dilapidations at the house about to be vacated, means an expenditure of about £1,500.

THE M'ALL MISSION IN FRANCE.—It is hoped to increase interest in this mission in the populous centres of Great Britain. An enlarged local committee has been formed in Manchester with Mr. John Sugden (46, Market-place) as secretary. At a meeting held a few days ago, Revs. Dr. Maclaren, and S. Pearson made suggestions as to ladies lending a hand in aid of the work by collecting subscriptions. It was also decided to invite collections at churches and chapels.

DR. PARKER'S NEW BOOK.

In his latest book, Some One*, Dr. Parker has constituted himself a guide to those honestly and humbly in quest of truth about God and Christ, and the many problems and mysteries around us that are but partially solved or revealed. It needs a considerable modicum of mental concentration to follow our mentor through some of his arguments and syllogisms and deductions, but the patient and constant pupil will be well rewarded. In the first portion of the book there are chapters on "The Bible" and on "The Christ." In some portions of these there is a fine amalgam of the soundly sensible and the sublime. On the Bible the author says:—

"Entertain the word, make a welcome guest of it. Then you will know whether it is inspired. Live with it; deeply and trustfully encourage its entrance into the soul; then you will know whether it giveth light. Obey the commandment; then you will know whether it is sure. Make the testimonies your delight; then they will become your counsellors. . . . Criticism must come after experience." . . .

"To me the Bible is inspired because it is inspiring. I cannot read it and be indolent. Nor can I read it and be indifferent to the claims of poverty and suffering. All its commandments are outgoing, such as Cast, Give, Sow, Heal, Go, Forgive—wonderful words when carried out in all their meaning; wonderful because the whole Book is wonderful. Yes, I see difficulties, and hard questions, and vexing problems about every theory of inspiration. But my concern is with the Book itself, and to my very heart it is the voice and the message of God. It is from everlasting to everlasting."

When he comes to speak of The Christ, Dr. Parker gives himself up to the inspiring grandeur of his theme. Here is a picture of one aspect of the Saviour's character that has few parallels, we imagine, in modern Christian literature:—

"I find Jesus so wondrously gentle. He seems always to want to say 'Blessed.' When He does say 'Woe' it is with a sob. I know that He denounced Jerusalem. I also know that He first wept over it. What it must cost him to say to any soul, Go away! His gentleness made Jesus so accessible. Anyone might speak to him, even women in their shame, and little children in their weakness. He was to sick people what sunshine is to flowers. He reduced the Kingdom of heaven to a parable that the lowest and the slowest might catch some gleam of it. He always wanted to heal people, and send them home right glad of heart to be the help and joy of their friends. He would not let people tire themselves out even in his own service. He told Martha not to care so much and work so hard, and sometimes to do everything by doing nothing. She might now and then sit down and just look her love. On one occasion He said to the disciples 'Rest awhile.' It was a tender word. Tired men are only half themselves. To rest wisely is to double the next service. On another occasion He gave the people bread, 'lest they faint by the way,' How mother-like to say 'lest they faint.' He ran before them, and took all the rough stones out of the way. He did not wait until they fainted; He took care that fainting should be impossible. Who can but love Him? Dear Saviour, thy gentleness hath made us men!"

One more extract from the same chapter—on the atoning efficacy of the Cross:—

"There are those who teach that Christ's death was the supreme expression of self-sacrifice, or of the conquest of the human will, or obedience to the Divine law. Far be it for me to question their personal holiness. They are able, sincere, earnest men. I cannot, however, take their view. To my mind it leaves the inner mystery of the Cross in the deepest darkness. It does not touch the agony. It could not have cost 'the Holy Child, Jesus,' so much to become merely obedient. It would have given the lie to his whole life. He never did anything but obey. "He never pleased Himself. He came not to be ministered unto, but to minister. . . Speaking for myself I did not need another example, for many had already rebuked and discouraged me, so great was their quality. I needed a Saviour. I needed a High Priest who would be touched by the feeling of my infirmities. I did not ask for an example to copy; I needed a Priest, mighty to redeem. It is in this aspect that I receive and adore my Saviour. It is this view of his work that most constrains me to love the world and seek its evangelisation. Other views may excite wonder and elicit admiration, but this view impels me to go out into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature."

There is much that is quotable in these glowing chapters, but we hope we have given enough to tempt the reader to possess the book and read it throughout with sympathetic attention. The second half largely consists of parabolic narrative, which may carry comfort and relief to those who are not easily touched by logic, however luminous and closely linked. We regard this book as one of the most useful gifts that Dr. Parker has given to his generation.

DR. PENTECOST ON UNBELIEF.

Dr. Pentecost has delivered a series of very instructive addresses on the grounds of the Christian faith in the Lecture Hall of the Westbourne Grove Y.M.C.A. The room has been crowded on each occasion, and many have been strengthened and edified by the word spoken.

The opening address showed the reasonableness of Christianity; and the second dealt with the sure word of prophecy. On subsequent Friday evenings avowed scepticism and distressful doubt were dealt with. On November 18 unbelief was exposed in its various forms. The speaker specially examined the old question of philosophic unbelief, "How can these things be?" Like the disciple Thomas people of this type say: "Except I thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe." They demand sensible evidence of the truth, and desire to find out God by scientific searching. All the while, however, they forget that there are things separate and distinct from matter, which no philosophy has conceived, but which God has revealed to us by his Spirit.

Sceptical writers of authority admit the almost miraculous moral effect of Christianity in the world. This has been because Christ was raised from the dead, and ever liveth to carry on His work. This was the point emphasised by Dr. Pentecost in his concluding address on Friday last. We know that Christ rose from the dead, not only through the testimony of those who saw Him, but also because of the deeds and works of those who were by that sight encouraged to testify and labour, although bonds and imprisonment and even martyrdom, for the truth, awaited them. These points were admirably elaborated, the speaker discriminating in a lucid manner various kinds of testimony, and showing the convincing fulness and precision of that which establishes the crucial miracle of Scripture record. He showed how that in every department of life men exercise faith, and that it is not unreasonable to exercise it in the apprehension of the things of God.

The doctrine of the Gospel rests upon the facts of the Gospel, and those facts have been attested by men, including Luke and Paul, whose writings have ever, by sceptical critics, been declared of undoubted authenticity as documents. The resurrection of Christ gathered together the sundered and downcast disciples, put a new hope into them, and filled them with a courage such as the world had never seen. If these witnesses had been bad men they would have been impeached by the ruling authorities in Jerusalem, whom they boldly charged with having put to death the Prince of Life. Had it been possible, the Sanhedrim and those who persecuted the infant Church would have disproved or discredited the testimony of those who said they saw the risen Lord. But this could not be done and the testimony has grown in volume and power and is to-day being borne throughout the world, to the joy of those who believe and receive in the souls the new life from God.

Mr. Nobbs in Gloucestershire.

Mr. William Nobbs has been evangelising at Kersoe House and Ashton-under-Hill, and the meetings have been with great power, many, both men and women, who had been leading very careless lives, having been awakened and led to the Saviour, some through much brokenness of spirit. In view of the blessing thus granted, it is interesting to know that the mission was preceded by very earnest prayer. It appears that six persons were specially named, and that all these now profess conversion. Many of those saved were previously victims of strong drink. After visits elsewhere, the evangelist returned to Ashton for a second visit, and several more were brought to the Saviour. Mr. Nobbs is now at Hereford.

Joshua and the Land of Promise.

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.,
Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road.

GILGAL.—Joshua iv. and v.

On the western side of Jordan, to which the host of Israel had now come, five miles from the river brink, the terraced banks reached their highest point. That was Gilgal. There the first camp was pitched, on the edge of a vast grove of majestic palms, nearly three miles broad and eight miles long, that stretched from there to Jericho. Dean Stanley suggests that, as Joshua witnessed it, it must have recalled to him the magnificent palm-groves of Egypt, such as stretch at the present day along the shores of the Nile at Memphis. Amidst this forest could have been seen, reaching through its open spaces, fields of ripe corn, "for it was the time of the barley harvest," and above the topmost trees the high walls and towers of the city on the farther side, which from that grove derived its proud name, "Jericho, the City of Palms."

Gilgal was destined to play an important part in the history of the people in the immediate future. It was the base of operations in the war against the people of Canaan. There the camp remained, and the women and children (ix. 6, x. 6). It ranked with Mizpah and Bethel amongst the holy places, where Samuel exercised his sacred office (1 Sam. vii. 16). It was the rallying point to which the people gathered at solemn times of national crisis (xi. 14). Saul had reason to remember it; and there Agag was hewed in pieces "before the Lord" (xiii. 7; xv. 33).

Probably to the last of these events, and beyond, the twelve stones were visible which had been pitched by Joshua as the lasting memorial of the passage of the river. Children were brought thither by their parents to see them, and to hear the wondrous story of the passage, recited on the spot in words which Joshua had suggested long before: "The Lord your God dried up the waters of Jordan before us, that all the peoples of the earth may know the hand of the Lord, that it is mighty."

At the time when the book was written, the other heap of stones, laid in the river bed, must have been clearly discernible (iv. 9); and there could have been no difficulty in fixing the hill of circumcision, where, at the command of God, they had rolled away the reproach of Egypt, and from which the name Gilgal, or Rolling, was derived (v. 9).

Gilgal was from the first "holy ground" (v. 15), and as we traverse it again in devout thought, it will give us also themes for deep and holy meditation.

I. The Stones on the Bank. At the Divine bidding, twelve men, one out of each tribe, went down into the river's bed on a special errand. From the place where the priests' feet stood firm in Jordan, they took each man a stone. It may be that the priests had selected those stones as providing a safe and secure footing; or perhaps they lay within some short distance of the spot where they had stood upbearing the sacred symbol of the presence of God. For centuries these stones had lain there undisturbed, but now, piled together in a heap before the eyes of all men, they were to be a memorial of the passage of Jordan, as the song of Moses was of the passage through the Red Sea.

It is well that forgetful hearts like ours should be stirred up by way of remembrance. We are so apt to grow unmindful of the Rock that begat us, and to forget the God that gave us birth. Even the Lord, whose love effected a redemption which runs parallel with our lives, as a river beside a carriage road, needed to set up a memorial of his most precious death on our behalf. There is, therefore, a needs-be for these memorial stones to be erected beside our Jordans, with their inscription, "Wherefore remember." Thus we are prevented from saying or thinking that the deliverances of the past were myths of the imagination, or creatures of the fancy, born in dreams, and unsubstantial as wreaths of polar light on the midnight sky.

The special circumstance which these stones commemorated was that they had come, a united people, through the Jordan, and that as a nation they had been brought into the land promised to their fathers. What though two tribes and a-half had elected to stay with their cattle in the rich pastures of Gilead and Bashan, yet they were still an integral part of the people. There were twelve stones, not nine stones and a-half. And in after-centuries, if the heap remained intact, even after the northern tribes had been carried into captivity, any who came thither would be compelled to admit that there had been a time when the twelve tribes of Israel had stood together, on that spot, a united and mighty nation.

And what is the typical and spiritual significance of this? Why this reverent care to pitch these boulder-stones, and to record with such minute detail the fact? What mean these stones? Those who have followed carefully the teaching of the preceding chapters cannot hesitate as to the reply. As in the passage of the Jordan all Israel came up on to the river's bank, so in the Resurrection and Ascension of the Lord Jesus, the whole Church of his redeemed passed over to resurrection ground, and are, in the purpose and thought of God, already seated in the heavenlies.

There can be no doubt that this is the teaching of the Holy Ghost through the Apostles. It comes out unmistakably in the writings of Peter as well as of Paul. No fact is better attested or more eagerly emphasised. To ignore it is to miss the foundation on which the structure of a full and present salvation is based. We must go back to the cross for the Atonement, but we must also go back to it for our passage in Him to the resurrection side of death:—

> In Him we died, in Him we rose,
> In Him we triumphed o'er our foes;
> In Him in heaven we took our seat,
> And heaven rejoiced o'er earth's defeat.

It is in the Revised Version, with its more accurate rendering of the tenses of the original Greek, that this mighty fact stands out with most distinctness. Addressing those who at the time when the Lord Jesus was dying on the cross were probably living in the lusts of their flesh, doing the desires of the flesh and of the mind, the Apostle says: "Even when ye were dead in trespasses and sins, God quickened you together with Christ, and raised you up with Him, and made you to sit with Him in the heavenlies" (Eph. ii. 6). And in each case the use of the aorist tense points to a definite past act by which their position, and that of the whole Church, was settled, once and for all, so far, at least, as the purpose and thought of God are concerned.

Corroborations multiply from many quarters. "Ye died with Christ"; "ye died"; "forasmuch then as Christ suffered in the flesh, arm ye yourselves also with the same mind, for he that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin."

Indeed, the basic thought in the New Testament philosophy of deliverance from the power of sin, consists in the intelligent apprehension of this divine fact, that the whole Church was identified with Jesus in his death, and resurrection, and ascension; that all died with Him, all lay in his grave, all rose with Him on the Easter morning, all passed with Him, in the divine intention, to the throne. It was no lonely figure that, as the light of morning broke on the temple dome, climbed the steeps of the sky, drawn by an invisible attraction; He was accompanied by a multitude which no man could have numbered; in Him you and I and all believers trod down the principalities and powers of darkness, and took our place above them all. What though as yet for many of us this seems a dream? Yet let us never rest till the Spirit of God has made it a living fact. And let it be the one aim of our life by faith to make that true in daily life and experience, which is true in the thought and purpose of our God.

Consider those twelve stones, on the further side of Jordan, and be sure that as they represented the entire people, and commemorated their marvellous transportation from the one side of Jordan to the other, so, in the New Jerusalem, the twelve foundation-stones bearing the names of the Apostles, and the twelve gates inscribed with the names of the twelve tribes of Israel, are a standing memorial that the Church as a whole is on Resurrection ground; but her shame and sorrow are that she has not availed herself of her lofty privileges, or descended to earth as girded with the power of the risen living Jesus.

We are the children of the Resurrection. Our eternity is begun. Part possession of our heritage has already been bestowed. In Jesus we are loved and accepted; we are more than conquerors; we occupy a position which, if only we keep it, is unassailable by our foes; they can only prevail against us when they succeed in tempting us to abandon it. All things are ours in union with our raised and reigning Lord, whether the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come, all are ours, and we are Christ's, and Christ is God's.

II.—The Stones in the Bed of the Stream.—Not content with pitching a cairn of stones on the river's bank, Joshua, at God's command, set up twelve stones in the midst of Jordan, in the place where the feet of the priests that bare the Ark of the Covenant stood. And often, as he came back and back to Gilgal, he must have gone out by himself to walk and muse beside the river, turned the outward and the inner gaze to the spot where beneath the flow of the current those stones lay hidden. They were the lasting memorial of the miracle which otherwise might have faded from memory, or seemed incredible. They were aids to faith. Where they lay the people had been and the feet of the priests had been planted dry. And surely the power that had arrested the Jordan, and brought the people up from its bed, would not fail until it had wrought out the whole purpose of God.

We too often walk along that river, and gaze into those depths. There Jesus lay in death for us, and there we lay in Him, and not we only, but all his Church. "For if one died for all, then all died." Each time we partake of the Lord's Supper, or behold the rite of baptism administered in the form of immersion, or fall into the ground to die in acts of self-sacrifice and self-dying, we stand with Joshua beside the Jordan, covering the twelve memorial stones; and there float through our thought, like a strain of thrilling music, the words, "Now in that He ascended, what is it but that He also descended first into the lower parts of the earth, that He might fill all things."

Nothing breaks the power of sin like this. When we apprehend the love of Christ and the meaning of his death, we are constrained to live, no longer to ourselves, but to Him. By his cross we too have been crucified to the world, and the world to us. Other men may be fascinated by the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, but these things have lost their charm for us. How can we love them, when we remember what they did unto our Lord, our life, our love, the bridegroom and husband of our souls? What true woman can dally with the murderer of her spouse?

In the thought of God our old man was crucified with Him, that the body of sin might be done away, that so we should no longer be in bondage to sin; for he that hath died is freed from sin (Rom. vi. 6). Sin has no further any claim or right over us. The entail has been interrupted. The Jordan of Calvary lies between it and us. Its snare is broken, and we are escaped as a bird from the fowler's net, when through the rent meshes it finds an aperture for flight back to its native element.

Go, O Christian soul, and meditate long and prayerfully on this great spiritual fact. Realise that thou hast passed into another sphere. Thou art quit of thy first husband, the Law; and thou art married to another, even to Him who was raised from the dead. Thou sharest his life, his home, his protection. That principle of sin that held thee fast in the lower sphere may not follow thee hither. Death bars its way. Reckon, then, thyself to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God in Christ Jesus. And answer every solicitation of the world, the flesh, the devil, by affirming that thou art none of theirs. And then turn to Him who brought thee up from the horrible pit and the miry clay, from the ooze of the river bed, and tell Him again and again that thou art his, in the bonds of an obligation which only becomes greater as growing years reveal its meaning and measure.

Let us also remember that the very same power, "the working of the strength of his might," which availed to raise Christ, our representative and head, from the grave, and to set Him far above all orders of spiritual being at his own right hand, is waiting to do as much for each of us who believe. Electricity lay hidden around men in these long ages in which they were oblivious to its presence and unable to apply it to their needs, and God's mighty resurrection energy lies all around us, waiting for us to avail ourselves of it. Let us claim, and appropriate, and use it; yielding ourselves to its impulses; and learning that there is nothing in the purpose of God which He is not prepared to realise in the happy experience of those who believe.

III.—The Rite of Circumcision.—Israel looked for nothing less than to be led from the river brink to the conquest and partition of the land. They suddenly discovered, however, that this was not quite the Divine programme for them. But they were required to submit to a painful rite, the seal of the covenant which was made originally to Abraham and by virtue of which the land had been given to him and to his seed (Gen. xvii. 8).

During the wanderings of the desert, which were due to their unbelief, and practically disinherited them, the observance of this rite had been in abeyance, because the operation of the covenant was for the time in suspense. "All the people that were born in the wilderness they had not circumcised; for the children of Israel walked forty years in the wilderness, till all the nation, even the men of war which came forth out of Egypt, were consumed, because they harkened not unto the voice of the Lord." But now that the new young nation was learning to exercise its faith, the covenant and its seal came again into operation. "Their children, whom He raised up in their stead, them did Joshua circumcise."

Even those comparatively unenlightened people must have realised that there was deep spiritual significance in the administration of that rite at that juncture. On more than one occasion they had heard Moses speak of circumcising the heart, and they must have felt that God meant to teach them the vanity of trusting to their numbers, or prowess, or martial array. Their strength was nothing to Him. The land was not to be won by their might, but to be taken from his hand as a gift. Self and the energy of the flesh must be set aside, that the glory of coming victory might be of God and not of man. We must be content to be reckoned among the things that are not, if we are to be used to bring to nought the things that are, "that no flesh should glory in his presence."

We, too, must have our Gilgal. It is not enough to acknowledge as a general principle that we are dead and risen with Christ, we must apply it to our inner and outer life. If we died with Christ, we must mortify our members, which are upon the earth. If we put away the old man with his doings, in our profession, we must also put away anger, wrath, malice, railing, and shameful speaking. If we were raised together with Christ, we must seek those things which are above, where Christ is seated on the right hand of God. The first effect of our appreciation of the meaning of Christ's death will be our application of that death to our members which are upon the earth. We have no warrant to say that sin is dead, or that the principle of sin is eradicated, but that we are dead to it in our standing, and are dead to it also in the reckoning of faith.

But for this we need the gift of the Blessed Spirit, in his Pentecostal fulness. It was by the Eternal Spirit that our Lord offered Himself in death upon the cross, and it is by Him alone that we can mortify the deeds of the body. For, first, the spirit of self is so subtle. It is like a taint in the blood, which, stayed in one place, breaks out in another. Protean in its shapes and ubiquitous in its hiding-places, it requires omniscience to discover, and omnipresence to expel. And, secondly, only the Spirit of God has cords strong enough to bind us to the altar of death; to remind us in the hour of temptation; to enable us to look to Jesus for his grace; to inspire us with the passion of self-immolation; to keep us true and steady to the resolves of our holiest moments; to apply the withering fire of the Cross of Jesus to the growth of our self-conceit and self-energy—for all these the grace of the Spirit is indispensable. He is the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus, therefore He must be the Spirit of death to all that pertains to the old Adam.

There is a sense in which all believers have been circumcised in Christ; but there is another sense in which it needful for them to pass one after another through the circumcision of Christ which is not made with hands, and which consists in the putting off of the body of the flesh. To that all who would lead a life of victory and inherit the Land of Promise must submit. The process may be sharp, for the knife does not spare pain. But it is in the hands of Jesus, the Lover of Souls. Oh, shrink not from it. Let Him do all that He deems needful, though it takes many days ere the wound is healed.

At first it might appear strange that the past experience of resurrection life should lead to death. But on further reflection it is not hard to see that all which is of the flesh must be condemned and executed even as He was, who came in the likeness of sinful flesh, that the ordinance of the law might be fulfilled in us who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit.

And though it might appear that the circumcised life will ever be a maimed life, it is not really so; the contrary is the universal testimony of this book. When the hand is cut off we go maimed into life. When we mortify the deeds of the body, we begin to live. When the Lord our God has circumcised our hearts, then we love Him with all our heart and with all our soul, and we live.

You can never take Jericho, Christian worker, till you have been circumcised, till God has taken away your self-reliance, and has brought you down into the dust of death: then, when the sentence of death is in yourself, you will begin to experience the energy of the Divine life, the glory of the Divine victory.

ROME AND THE SCRIPTURES.

The fifty-fourth report of the Belgian Christian Missionary Church describes much excellent work in various parts of Belgium. There are many Mission Halls and Sunday Schools, but no work is more interesting than that of the colporteurs, who do much to prepare the way for the evangelists. The opposition of Rome is strong, and takes a variety of forms. Of course, she tries to neutralise the initial efforts of the Protestants, and as these disseminate the Holy Scriptures she does her best to exterminate them.

The pages of the report show that there is deplorable religious ignorance on the part of the Roman Catholics, the great majority of whom are entire strangers to the Bible, which they neither possess nor know. As in days gone by, the Romish Church is still, where she has the power, the open and active enemy of the Word of God. "New editions have been published, and pious Roman Catholics, priests and laymen, have extolled the reading of the Holy Scriptures, but none the less do the priests as a body hunt up copies, and, declaring them "bad books," seize them to be burned. 'God will never pardon the Roman Church for having hidden the Gospel!' said a Roman Catholic, after becoming acquainted with the sacred volume."

A worker at Ostend writes: "Of the New Testaments which we sell, more are burned than are read." Not only in Flanders, but also in the province of Namur, such incidents are multiplied. "When the curé learns," writes a colporteur, "that I have reached his village, he at once takes the field in search of books. In a house where I had sold a Bible, the father was occupied in reading it, on the arrival of the priest, who at once exclaimed, 'Wretch! It's a bad Bible! Into the fire with it, quick!' And the man was obliged to obey." Elsewhere a priest saw a New Testament lying on the table. "Give it to me." "Yes," was the reply, "for thirty centimes with which to buy another." "I'll give you the money on condition that you buy no more." "In that case, M. le curé, you shall not have it; no, not for twenty-five francs!"

A woman to whom a colporteur sold a New Testament said, "The curé told me the book was of no use, because it said nothing of the Virgin Mary." The colporteur read to her the Salutation of the Angel and the Song of Mary, showing her what was said of the Saviour, and of salvation by grace. "Then I'll keep my book and read it," said the woman, whose companion also bought a copy. A man said: "I dare not purchase a copy; you know the curé does not like it. My children are about to take their first communion, and I should be afraid of their telling the priest about the matter."

A different state of things exists in homes where the Bible has been read. In one case inquiry was met with the answer, "We read the beautiful book, and greatly enjoy it." In some instances converts have learned to search the Scriptures, although they do this with difficulty, and are put to inconvenience as "marked men."

G.W.R. WIDOWS AND ORPHANS.—No less than 1,000 widows and 500 orphans of deceased servants of the Great Western Railway Company receive weekly allowances from an excellent organisation in connection with the company, which distributes more than £10,000 every year.

THE PASTOR'S COLLEGE.

The annual meeting of this institution, so dear to the heart of the late Mr. Spurgeon, was held last week at the Metropolitan Tabernacle.

Dr. J. A. Spurgeon, who presided, said that the weekly offerings during the past year had been larger than had ever been known in the previous history of the Church, amounting to £1,865. His late brother had often explained to them the constitution of the college, and he wished it to be known that that constitution remained unaltered. It was the glory of the college that they took men as they found them. Of the six or seven who would be admitted in January one was at the present moment a shunter on the railway, another was a tin-plate worker, and a third a miner. They did not look to the position of the man; they looked to what he was. They preached the same old doctrine which some men had begun to despise and call Calvinistic, but which they regarded as evangelistic in the truest sense of the word; and there had not been a shade of change in their teaching, nor would there be. They believed in the Bible as an inspired book, and their two ordinances were believers' baptism and the Lord's Supper. It was one of the weaknesses of the Church of the present day that members laid themselves out to entertain and be pleasant to the people, but he was sure this was a dry-rot entering into the Churches. Continuing, the chairman said the list of settlements for the year was the longest they had ever had. No less than thirty names were included, one of the students having gone to the Congo, two to the Cape, one to the Falkland Isles, and the remainder to the churches in various parts of the kingdom. They had received during the year a total of £7000, and with a legacy which they expected would be paid over before Christmas the financial year would be the best they had ever known. He felt the weight of the responsibility which had fallen upon him in being called upon to take the place of his dear brother, but with their prayers, and through the help of God, he hoped to bear it.

Rev. J. T. Gracey, the Principal of the College, spoke of the work of the institution, of the love and loyalty borne to the departed president, of the experiences of the past years, and hope for the years to come.

Rev. A. T. Pierson, after brief testimonies by various friends, gave an address on "The Impregnable Rock of Scripture."

N.E. LONDON GOSPEL MISSION.

Last week, at Earlham Hall, Dalston, the twenty-fourth annual meeting of this Mission was held, when a large number assembled. After a helpful address from Mr. Geo. Hucklesby and an address to the mothers present by Mrs. Kirby, the director Mr. Wm. Chorley, made his statement on work amongst old and young in various districts of North and East London. Special mention was made of the seaside home at Lancing, Sussex, and the Bible van.

Various workers in charge of the different centres of the Mission addressed the friends. To listen to the graphic stories of Mrs. Davis, fresh from the slums of Bow Common, gave one much cause for thanksgiving. Mr. Gibbens and Mr. Jarrett spoke respectively for Cubitt Town and Millwall, while the story of the Lancing Home was told by Miss Larter, with which she coupled the work at the Gospel room at Lancing, telling of interest and blessing resulting therefrom. The work amongst the women gathered into the various mothers' meetings was well represented by Mrs. Andrews. A most stimulating meeting was brought to a close by prayer, and the children singing a farewell hymn.

FRIENDLESS YOUNG SERVANTS.—On the afternoon of Thursday last, a ladies' conference was held, followed by a public meeting in the evening, at the preventive branch of the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institute, 459 and 461, Holloway-road, the object being to confer as to future work on behalf of young friendless girls and servants in London. Mr. A. H. Cæsar presided, and several brief addresses were delivered. The secretary of the institution, Mr. Thomas, read some interesting letters from those who had been in the home, expressing gratitude for the benefits received.

NATIONAL VIGILANCE ASSOCIATION.

The seventh annual meeting of this association was held on Thursday in Exeter Hall, Archdeacon Sinclair presiding. The report, taken as read, showed a considerable amount of work done in suppressing open and notorious vice, in rescuing helpless girls, punishing the evil-doers, and enabling many to escape from a life of misery and shame. It is interesting to learn that the medical home in Camden-road, opened in April, 1891, grows in importance, and deepens in interest, as time passes. It is difficult to select individual cases, when each has called for special help and sympathy. One by one they have been dealt with. The limited number of patients received gives the great advantage of being able to learn more minutely the needs of each. The applicants come sick, disappointed, sometimes almost hopeless, and as their physical condition is remedied, they are learning from those who tend them that there is One who not only "healeth all diseases," but who "forgiveth all iniquity." Only one patient has died of all those received since November, 1891. The others have been carefully provided for, as circumstances required; some being sent to service, others into homes, while a few have been restored to their friends.

The Ven. Archdeacon Sinclair said: The society has been charged with a desire to curtail the freedom of the country, but on the contrary we are anxious to safeguard the interest of the public, especially of that part of the public which is least able to take care of itself. The working of the Criminal Law Amendment Act has revealed a very large amount of crime committed against young girls, with the greater part of which the police are now able to deal. But there are some cases in which the police cannot take the first steps, and in these cases the association has done excellent work. We have been able to strike at those villains who live upon the earnings of fallen women—in one case have prosecuted a man who made use of a woman to blackmail men, and getting him sentenced to twenty months' imprisonment. Then we have taken action with reference to the exhibition of indecent pictures, and we are glad to note the passing of a new Scotch Act of Parliament, which strikes at men who habitually or persistently importune or solicit women or children in the streets, or who loiter about for that purpose. This is the first attempt which Parliament has made to put men and women on an equal footing in respect of street offences of the kind. A similar clause was proposed in the House of Lords when the Criminal Law Amendment Bill was under discussion, but the House would not have it. Scotland seems to lead the way in such matters, as witness the clause proposed and carried in the Commons, in the Glasgow Bill of last Session, whereby men found in bad houses would be liable to punishment along with the owners and the women.

Canon Scott-Holland rejoiced in the work of the society, which has justified its existence by results. While thankful for the legal, which he looked upon as necessary and valuable, he also felt most thankful for the preventive work done amongst the victims of vice.

Mr. Shilton Collin gave a detailed account of the purity movement in Liverpool, showing how a few resolute men had been made the means of suppressing the brothels wholesale, clearing the streets, and putting an end to the habitual use of the public-houses as places of assignation. He maintained (and most of us who keep our eyes open agree with him) that London streets by night, as well as London music-halls and London parks, demand treatment on lines similar to those which have proved so successful in Liverpool.

Mr. G. W. E. Russell, M.P., said that, as one of the founders of the society in 1885, he was glad to see that the first enthusiasm had not abated. "I attend this meeting as a professional politician, and I am confident that you will find in the new Government no backwardness in carrying out the aims and objects of the society. The present Home Secretary I know to be a man full of sympathy with all good moral causes, and absolute reliance can be placed upon him. Since 1883 we have accomplished three notable victories. These are the repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts, the passing of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, and the action taken by the London County Council with regard to the music-halls and theatres of London. I feel that the Council has scarcely received all the credit it deserves. The Council is not hostile to the amusements of the people, but desires to make those places of amusements such that any respectable girl can attend them."

Addresses followed by Mr. P. W. Bunting, Mr. W. A. Bewes, Canon Barker, General Goodenough, Mrs. Bailhache, Miss Whitehead, Mrs. Fitzthorpe, and Mr. C. T. Mitchell.

INSPIRATION AND SCRIPTURE.

Canon Girdlestone's third lecture on Thursday afternoon, closing the series he has been giving at Mildmay, had as its special theme "Inspiration and Scripture." Last week, said the Canon, we considered the revelation of God's will made orally; now we have to consider the books which contain the revelation—that is, revelation written. A great many things revealed in former days have passed away, their purpose being fulfilled; but what God designed for man, for ages to come, for us, He caused to be written in the books which we know as Scripture. These books undoubtedly contain much besides direct messages from God—being historical, biographical, poetical, and so on. Therefore, there is the framework of Scripture to be considered, as well as the revelation within.

The word "Scripture," which means writing, is used only once in the Old Testament—that is Dan. x. 21—but in the New Testament it occurs frequently. Difficulties have been raised as to the art of writing being unknown in early days; now, however, there are documents in the British Museum dating long before the time of Abraham, and probably going back to the days of Noah. We have evidences in many parts of the Bible itself as to the keeping of memoranda, and of the fact that certain things were confessedly written by Divine command, see Exod. xvii. 14; xxxiv. 27; Num. xxxiii. 2; Deut. xxxi. 19; Isa. xxx. 8; Jer. xxx. 2; Hab. ii. 2, and the eight closing chapters of Ezekiel (see Ezek. xliii. 11).

Examining these passages we find reason why an accurate and enduring record of the events and revelations referred to should have been secured. Thus, putting one passage to another, we come to the inevitable conclusion that those who wrote were under a sense of responsibility, even as were those who spoke from God. There is a human element certainly; the writers would use their own knowledge, the testimony of eye-witnesses, contemporary documents, family genealogies, etc. Then the direct commands given to write do not cover the whole Scripture; and some, while admitting these portions, may raise questions as to other portions. If I am asked if I accept the whole Old Testament as written by Divine direction, I answer, "Yes, I do." The whole of the books may not be labelled as written by Divine commission; but they are known so to have been received in the very earliest days. The Pentateuch was accepted as substantially the writing of Moses, and, therefore, as official; so with Joshua and the earlier prophets (see 1 Chron. xxix. 29, and 2 Chron. ix. 29). In these and other passages we find that prophetic men compiled trustworthy history. The same principle applies to the rest of the Old Testament books. Therefore, I say, I accept these books as written by commissioned men, as trustworthy, and as coming from God.

Then it must be remembered that not only the writers but the collectors of these books were under a heavy responsibility—the writings might be ancient, authentic, and reliable, and yet not inspired. We have in the Apocrypha—not inspired, but interesting as showing the state of feeling in the times when it was penned—remarkable evidence as to careful compilation of the Canon, and the cessation for centuries of the prophetic spirit; and we see also how the books came to be accepted as divine.

Again, in the New Testament Christ and his apostles attest the Old Testament, and there is no single fact in the Old Testament on which any doubt is thrown in the New. To the early disciples, as to us, it is the court of final appeal; see such references as Rom. iv. 23, 24; xv. 4; 1 Cor. x. 11.; 2 Tim. iii. 15, 16.

Now, as to the New Testament, there are certain special grounds on which we hold the books therein to be inspired of God. We have not, as in the case of the earlier Scriptures, a later book sealing and guaranteeing their authority and inspiration; but we have the fact that the analogy leads us to expect, that the later revelation would be accompanied by the sending of men able to do, and empowered to do, for the Church what Moses did for his time. Then we find our Lord making special provision for the writing of the New Testament in the promise of the Holy Spirit. A careful and candid consideration of the whole circumstances of the case compels one to the acceptance of the New Testament books as written by commissioned men, as God-breathed for our instruction. All the reasons for this acceptance cannot be stated in this one brief address, but taken as a whole their force appears irresistible. As the human body with many members—not all equally essential perhaps—is one organism, so Scripture is one, although it is true some parts cannot be regarded as of equal importance with others.

This being so, we get authority in teaching and certainty in fact. It is true, questions may be raised, as to differences in early readings, and so on, but we find the writers careful and accurate in matters of doctrine, and we cannot conceive of any of these men writing loosely, unguardedly, or committing pious frauds, such as fathering their writings on some other man. Such things are alien to the whole spirit of these books.

I find in them a wonderful unity throughout all the diversity; a wonderful force, reaching heart and conscience; and a wonderful adaptation to the old man and the babe, the philosopher and peasant, the Englishman and the Kaffir. With reverence we cling to and obey this wonderful Book, which we believe to be God's revelation to man.

Rev. W. Fuller Gooch gives this afternoon (Thursday) a Bible reading on "Christ and the Old Testament Scriptures."

THE GOSPEL IN SPAIN.

In a "Letter from Spain," Madame Lopez Rodriguez, of the Figueras Evangelical Mission, says: "During the past year we have circulated fifty-six Bibles, 134 Testaments, 11,580 Gospels, 22,939 tracts, 6000 texts. On land and sea the precious seed has been sown, and confidently we look for glorious results. I have the satisfaction of seeing many parents brought to meetings by the children, and finally becoming members of the congregation, and many pupils are now members also. Without schools, the Gospel cannot make progress."

A very encouraging condition of things is reported from Llansa, a lovely village on the shores of the Mediterranean. "Forty-two brave converts were gathered in. Last week the pastor received the following telegram: "A brother has died: important to come by first train." He, of course, did so, and found the whole village in the greatest possible excitement. All knew that the deceased convert's expressed wish was to be interred as a Protestant, having been one of the first to sign the act of abjuration, and to take the communion. When very ill, in fact all but unconscious, the priest went to the house, taking advantage of a few moments when his wife was out of the sick-room to enter it, and try to persuade the dying man to take extreme unction, urging that if he would do so, after swallowing the wafer, the body of Christ would touch his heart, and he would recover.

"The priest, on hearing of the convert's death, sent to the judge, claiming the corpse for interment in the Roman Catholic cemetery. On arriving at the village the pastor went to the mayor, who promised to exert his authority in his favour. The next visit was to the judge, who, being an ally of the priest, refused to sign the necessary document; but seeing that the whole village would rise up against his injustice, he reluctantly yielded.

"The people came streaming into the street from all parts to see the funeral. The shepherds entrusted their goats and sheep to others, and those busy gathering grapes, or at work in the wine-press, showed their practical interest in the great event of the day by hiring labourers to take their places.

"In front of the procession marched the village band playing a mournful dirge, behind which walked the widow and relatives, followed by the coffin borne by men, and last of all the women, according to the ancient custom on such occasions. On arriving at the cemetery the corpse was lowered, and a deep silence reigned whilst a simple Gospel address was given on those wonderful words, 'O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.' Thus ended the first Protestant funeral in Llansa."

Bienvenue, 8, Colville-houses, Talbot-road, London, W.—The directress, Miss C. F. Ryffel, is ready to receive applications for foreign holiday governesses.

THE PRICE OF BLOOD.*

Some time ago, I took a trip to Penzance, intending to break my journey at ——. A friend of mine, being aware of my intentions, wished me to stay at a certain hotel in ——, in order to get her some information about an old servant, who had married the said hotel-keeper.

It was midwinter and very cold weather when I arrived at ——. After a rather long search I found the house at which I was to stay for the night. The entrance sickened me; the first floor was covered with several inches of sawdust; a long counter crossed the room, behind which several persons were serving spirits, mostly gin, to a number of the most squalid and destitute people I had ever seen, a large number being women; the amount purchased was mostly in pennyworths.

I sat down for a short time as if I was about to take my turn at the bar as soon as the throng was reduced, my feet embedded in the sawdust. I am sure the lady who wished me to stay here would have been ashamed to see me, as I felt ashamed of myself, and would have been more so if any of my friends from my own neighbourhood had seen me. Sitting rather long, and not offering to call for anything, one of the waiters came to ask what I wanted, to whom I told my tale—how I came to be there, who it was that had sent me, and for what purpose. This person happened to be the owner, and he immediately called me into a sitting-room upstairs, and sent me a most sumptuous tea.

While partaking of this meal—set out in a style fit for a prince—I closely looked at my surroundings. Over my head was a magnificent glass gas-chandelier with a dozen jets; on my right hand and left were some splendid mirrors, so that which way I turned I could see my full-length self; the carpet, hearth-rug, couches, cheffonier, and the paper on the walls were of the same costly character—all purchased from the profits made from the almost destitute people down below. I made inquiry about the family, which soon brought out a flood of eloquence from the mother about the attainments of her daughter at the boarding school, etc.

Being tired with my two hundred miles journey, I quickly sought an early rest. I was ushered into my apartment for the night. I have done a pretty large amount of travelling, but never before or since have I ever seen such a bedroom; my surroundings took away my sleep. The room below covered with sawdust! The wretched people bringing their last penny; as it seemed to me! The thought that some one might see me, who knew me, coming out of this wretched place in the morning; but, most of all, I thought — how many little children are lying on straw, or sitting upon some doorstep, this cold winter's night, whose parents have contributed to this superb bed and its surroundings? I could see hundreds of little starving children in the mirror before me; and when I had put down my brilliant gas-lights they were there still! The price of blood was in the gorgeous trimmings of the bed! the wardrobe! the marble! etc.! I could not help saying, what I thought hundreds of young persons with ruined homesteads were saying: "How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost Thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell upon the earth?"

SEAMEN'S MISSION.—The thirty-ninth anniversary of the Ragged Schools and Seamen's Bethel, and work on board Mr. Cook's Gospel Ships, was held in Thorngate Hall, Gosport, on Thursday evening, General Sir R. Phayre in the chair. Testimony to the benefits of the work was borne by the two skippers, Mountfield and Male, and by Messrs. Richard May, George Major (of Folkestone), and Holden. The Folkestone fishermen had derived much good through the visit of the mission ships, as the outcome of which a building had been opened, which had become too small, and a gentleman had purchased the old house for £2,000. It was to be pulled down and a noble edifice was to be erected at the expense of their kind-hearted friend, who had long supported them with a missionary. A coffee bar had been opened for the past two years, to which the men came in crowds. References were made to touching incidents upon the French coasts, and of one vessel going up to Paris two years ago. The new mission steamer will be launched this month, and will be handed over to the founder in January at a cost of £2,000, of which £600 remains unpaid.

MELBOURNE NOTES.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

BIBLE STUDY.

The Christian Union Breakfast Association is the name of a society which has been in existence in Melbourne for the last thirty-six years, though at one time it ceased to have regular meetings for some months. It has had more flourishing times than it has at present. Before people moved out to the suburbs at a distance from the city the meetings were very regular and hearty. The hon. secretary is Mr. Edward Cornell, who has for many years been identified with Christian effort in this city. Although Mr. Cornell is a Wesleyan, the association is entirely unsectarian, and its main object is the study of the Scriptures. Once a month the members meet for breakfast in one of the coffee palaces, where a room is placed at their disposal. It has proved a most refreshing season to many.

PRESBYTERIAN FELLOWSHIP.

Recently a large gathering of the delegates of this strong union met for tea at the invitation of the president, Mr. Robert Gillespie, J.P., after which a considerable amount of business was transacted. 106 associations are now affiliated. The Lay Preachers' Association in connection with the union is doing excellent work in supplying outside stations and assisting mission churches. A probationers' class has been conducted by Rev. J. Matthew with great success, Mr. Handley Moule's "Outlines of Christian Doctrine" being the text-book used. The Presbyterian Elders' Lay Preachers' Association has amalgamated with the Fellowship effort. The Christian Endeavour movement has begun to take hold of the Presbyterians, and the Fellowship Union are doing all they can to give it a cordial reception.

EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

Messrs. Edwards and Klein, who were evangelising in New Zealand for some time, have been delivering addresses in and around Melbourne during the past fortnight. The Theatre Royal was taken for two Sundays and five week days in between. The Gospel message was simply and forcibly delivered to the crowded houses night after night, and the results have been most gratifying. Nightly the crowds gathered to listen to the preaching, and many went away rejoicing. The meetings are being carried on for another week.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

A great farewell meeting to Dr. and Mrs. Clark has taken place in the Melbourne Hall, which was well filled. They had had a run to Ballarat, and then over to Adelaide, in South Australia. At the latter place the special feature was the sunrise meetings, from 6.30 to 8 a.m., when hearty gatherings were held by the Endeavourers.

On their return this valedictory meeting awaited them, and they even had a feeling of home-sickness in leaving us after the hospitable entertainment and cordial receptions they had received. The large meeting was presided over by Rev. A. R. Edgar (president of the Union). Rev. William Scott, of Pitt-street Congregational Church, Sydney, made an excellent speech on behalf of the Endeavour Movement, and testified to the blessing it had been to himself and to his church. A number of personal testimonies followed. Dr. Clark delivered a parting address, pointing out the grand future which lay before this colony. He hoped the Endeavour Movement would prove a great source of blessing. He would long recollect the grand times he had enjoyed in the City of Melbourne.

ZANZIBAR SAILORS' REST.—Mr. J. Theo. Isaac writes from the Strangers' Rest, 163, St. George's-street, Ratcliff-highway, E.:—"Many of your readers will rejoice with us that the Lord continues to bless the labours of his servants at the new 'Rest' at Zanzibar, not only among the sailors, but also among the natives. The urgent need of the work just now is another lady helper, and I shall be glad to correspond with anyone who may feel led to offer for this foreign service."

REV. OSCAR MICHELSEN hopes shortly to be able to comply with the many requests that have been made for him to tell the story of mission work at Tongoa, New Hebrides, with the aid of lantern illustrations. He has a beautiful collection of photographs relating to seventeen mission stations, and some of them have already been transferred to coloured slides, which will materially assist Mr. Michelsen in narrating the marvels of mission work in Nguna, Tongoa, Epi, and other islands.

CONFERENCE AT LIVERPOOL.

On Thursday and Friday last week an important conference of Evangelical Christians on subjects relating to the conversion and restoration of the Jews and the second advent of Christ was held at Hope Hall, Liverpool. The conference attracted a great amount of interest, and the attendances were very large, including a considerable number of the Jewish people. Mr. J. E. Mathieson presided over all the meetings.

On Thursday afternoon, Dr. Bullinger, in an able address, dealt with the prophecies of Daniel. The great sign of the time was the marvellous conversion of the Jews in hundreds, in a manner unknown since the Apostolic times. At a large public meeting in the evening inspiring addresses were delivered by the chairman, Dr McKilliam, Rev. George C. Grubb, and others.

The conference on Friday re-opened with a devotional meeting. At eleven o'clock Rev. Hubert Brooke gave a Bible reading dealing with the second advent. He said one of the great objects for which Christians are longing is the revelation of Christ. Those who are watching for the Lord's coming and patiently enduring under trial will be counted worthy of the first resurrection. What happened to believers who are not waiting for the Lord he could not say. But he could see that there is a noonday gleam of glory in the future connected with the first resurrection for the whole-hearted, patient, praying Christian. He could see the midnight lightning showing the awful gloom of the rejecters of Christ, and between these two there was an awful haze of uncertainty for those who said they were Christians but were not honestly giving to Christ the life which He had redeemed.

At the afternoon conference the chairman said that the neglect of the prophetic word is the source of all the errors with which the Church is filled to-day.

Dr. Neatby, in a lengthy address, reviewed the prophetic Scriptures. He believes that the second advent is nigh. We want to see Christ because of the joy we shall have in looking upon his face, but there is the greater joy Christ will have in looking upon our faces.

The last meeting of the conference was very largely attended. After devotional exercises, the chairman stated that the conference would be held annually until the Lord comes. The Rev. W. Fuller Gooch spoke upon the reality of Christ's coming. It is not a sentiment or a theory. Mr. Hermann Warszawiak gave a stirring and encouraging address on the work amongst the Jews in various parts of the world.

KANAKA MISSION WORK IN QUEENSLAND.—Recently, at North Bundaberg, eight women and fifty-eight boys were baptized on a profession of their faith in Christ. They all belonged to the Kanaka community, and on the previous day were examined as to their knowledge of Christian truth. The catechising was conducted in the "pigeon English" which is very generally understood by the Islanders. By their answers and interpolations, the boys showed striking familiarity with the story of Christ's life. Their idea of repentance was clearly suggested by the procedure of entering into agreement with employers. "Me break agreement along a-Satan and sign along a-Jesus." Some six or seven hundred people, including some of the leading planters, witnessed the baptismal ceremony, which took place from the river side. There are at present three missionaries in the Bundaberg district, and 1620 Kanakas attending Sunday-school.

For the Young.

PAKAN, THE INDIAN CHIEF.

By Egerton R. Young.

Among the Christian Indians of the far North Land the Sabbath is most faithfully observed. All hunting and fishing ceases, and the people quietly and reverently keep holy the day of rest. Long and patiently did the missionaries have to toil, and much was the opposition which they had to encounter ere success crowned their efforts and this pleasing state of affairs was reached.

The following incident will give some idea of the difficulties in the way of their living up to the principles of the Gospel they have now accepted, and the sturdy character and boldness they frequently manifest. Their personal comfort or interest is not for a moment thought of when conscience is at stake, and hunger would be patiently endured rather than that their convictions of duty should be sacrificed.

Pakan is the name of the honoured chief of the Indians at White Fish and Saddle Lake. He is the worthy successor of the noble Maskepetoon, the chief who, on hearing a sermon from the prayer of the Lord Jesus for his murderers, showed his sincere desire to become a Christian by forgiving the murderer of his own son.

These Indians, of whom Pakan is now the chief, years ago made a treaty with the Dominion Government of Canada, in which they ceded away their rights to a vast area of fertile land, which is now rapidly filling up with white settlers. In return for this the Government agreed to give to these Indians annually a certain sum of money and a large quantity of supplies.

Not very long ago the Government Commissioner who was paying the treaty money to the different tribes in the West, sent word to Pakan and his people that on a certain date he would meet them at a designated place for the purpose of paying them their money and distributing among them their annual supplies.

The Indians were promptly on hand at the appointed place, although some of them had to come long distances from their homes or hunting grounds. Owing to the assurances of the Commissioner, that he would, without fail, be on hand with the supplies on the date mentioned, the Indians only carried with them food sufficient to last them and their families up to the date of the gathering.

To their great discomfort, they found that although the abundant supplies of food were on hand, yet the Commissioner had not arrived to distribute them. Several days passed by, and still he failed to appear.

Very naturally the people became very hungry, and yet their sense of honour and honesty was such that although they well knew that the supplies in their midst, unguarded, and in their power, really belonged to them, yet they patiently endured the pangs of hunger day after day, while earnestly looking for the arrival of the big man and his attendants to distribute the food.

Human nature has its limits, and so, after some days of absolute fasting, a few of the more restive ones began to think it was about time they quieted the cries of their hungry families by helping themselves to these supplies now that the Commissioner had so broken his word to them by failing to appear.

When Pakan heard these mutterings, he said, in language not to be misunderstood, "No; we will not touch these things. We have not broken a law of the Government since we made the treaty, and although we are hungry we will not begin now."

Then he added: "But this will I do. As we are suffering for our supplies I will ride until I meet that white man, and tell him of our hungry condition because of his delay."

Suiting the action to his words, for Pakan is a man of prompt action when his mind is once made up, he was soon mounted on a fleet horse, and, accompanied by one attendant, was in a few minutes galloping over the prairies in the direction he was confident the Commissioner would come. Very correct was he in his surmisings, for after a rapid ride of not more than ten miles, he found the big man and his party, who, leisurely travelling along, had that evening already pitched their tents for the night.

Riding into his camp, Pakan aroused him up, and said: "I thought you would be camped here, my men are hungry, for they have waited long, they wanted to help themselves, but I said, 'No, wait until I see the paymaster.' Now I have found you, and I want you to send a man back with me to divide that food among my hungry people."

"Oh," said the paymaster, "those provisions are all yours, so just wait here with us until to-morrow morning, and then we will all ride on to your camp, and then we will at once divide the supplies among your people."

"But to-morrow is the Sabbath," said the brave Christian chief.

"Well," replied the white man, "my religion is not so strict but I can give you out your provisions on that day."

Pakan's reply is worth remembering. He said, "I do not know, what your religion teaches, but this I do know, that our religion teaches us to provide for the Sabbath day on Saturday, and so, if you will not give us the provisions to-night, we will not take them on the morrow, hungry though we are."

"Why," replied the paymaster, "I thought we would camp here this Saturday night, and then going on early to your camp to-morrow, would at once distribute the supplies, and then, later on in the day, have our annual council talk, and then we would be ready to pay the treaty money on Monday."

The reply of the noble chief to this was short but emphatic. "If we will not take grub, we certainly will not have the talk, on the Sabbath."

From this position the chief would not move. The result was the dilatory paymaster was obliged to order one of his subordinate officials to return that Saturday night, through the darkness, with Pakan, and see to the distribution of the food among the people.

The next day the big white man made his entry in the camp of Pakan. No salute of firearms or demonstrative greetings welcomed him. In that large encampment there was nothing but the quiet decorum of a restful Sabbath day. Vainly did the big official try to gather the Indians in council for the annual discussions over their affairs. Not one person put in an appearance at the place he had appointed, but they all, as was their custom, faithfully attended their religious services.

In solitary grandeur the representative of the Government was allowed to remain in his tent, with his attendants, until the following day, and then the Indians were promptly on hand to attend to business.

THE HOME CRIPPLES' BAND.

A unique gathering was held on a recent evening, when nearly 300 little sufferers met to celebrate the third anniversary of the Home Cripples' Band, in connection with the Ragged School Union. A substantial tea was heartily partaken of in the schoolroom of the East London Tabernacle, after which a public meeting was held under the presidency of Mr. Jas. Robertson. Mr. C. L. Boyer, the superintendent of the Drift Children's branch, read an intensely interesting report of the year's work; Miss Sophia Smith, the Kindergarten teacher provided specially for this work by the London School Board, told of the success she had met with in her task of educating in their homes those who were unable to attend school, and addresses were delivered by the chairman, Mr. S. Clayton, and Rev. C. James. The blind visitor (Miss Jessie Poulson) and two other blind ladies sang solos and duets; and musical selections were rendered by a juvenile choir from Upton Park, as well as by the cripples themselves.

As our young readers have already manifested an interest in these poor helpless little folk, they will be better pleased with some account of the children whose acquaintance I have made than with details of the meeting.

LILLIE

is a pitiable object. She is nine years of age. When a baby she was taken out daily by a maid, who one day let her fall. Her head was injured, and for the last seven years she has been an invalid. She has never walked; she is totally blind; very deaf; and beyond saying "dadda" or "mamma," is unable to talk. Everything in the home that could be sold was parted with in order to pay for medical advice; but the child was pronounced incurable by all the physicians who saw her.

FREDDY

is eight years of age, and a bright little fellow. He was brought to the meeting in an invalid carriage, for he has a diseased hip, and for two years has been unable to sit or stand. His mother told me that he was a very patient little fellow, no word of complaint ever coming from his lips. I learnt a lesson from dear Freddy—which the reader might learn too—that of contentment and gratitude for the happier lot which we enjoy.

JENNIE

was born a cripple. She is now twenty-seven years of age, and has never been able to stand. Moreover, her mouth has no roof, so that it is difficult to understand her speech. She cannot read or write; but she told me with glee that she was learning under Miss Smith; however, she found the task very difficult. For years Jennie did not know what it was to be moved from her dingy room, in which she used to sit all day and help her parents in their handicraft.

Poor little sufferers! We who live in this great city little know how much sorrow exists on every hand; but we are thankful that so much has been done for the crippled children of East London through the ministrations of Mr. C. L. Boyer, under the auspices of the Ragged School Union. Our youthful readers on a previous occasion made the hearts of these helpless little ones rejoice by their substantial gifts of toys, scrap-books, picture-books, etc. I should like to whisper in their ears, and let them know that they have another opportunity of showing their love for the dear Saviour, and of following his example, of whom we sometimes sing:—

> He went about, He was so kind,
> To cure poor people who were blind;
> And many who were sick and lame,
> He pitied them, and did the same.

THE "TRUTH" DOLL AND TOY SHOW.

These simple and touching lines are given in Truth, and are from the pen of a very youthful lady. If any of our young readers are able to take a share in this movement, they should put themselves in communication with the editor of Truth, Carteret-street, Queen Anne's Gate, S.W.

In this busy city, readers, with its throbbing, restless heart,
Joy and sorrow, rich and homeless, play alike a leading part;
Some in mansions fair and stately spend their days untouched by Care,
Others, crowded in a garret, find in Life but blank Despair.
And the children, earth's best flowers, some in sunshine rear their heads,
Others racked with pain and suffering lie upon their little beds.
Happy play and merry laughter are unknown to such as these,
And the peaceful ward to them is the embodiment of ease.
Aching limbs are softly tended, weary lids in slumber close,
Grief and squalor are forgotten; hunger, cold, and drunken blows
Are exchanged for tender nurses, who to eager, longing eyes
Seem good angels, lately singing in the realms of Paradise.
Ye who know the wealth of pleasure, which your little ones enjoy
From possession of a dolly, know the value of a toy,
Be it e'er so worn and simple; how, around their owners' hearts
Playthings wind themselves so subtly; so the glow a gift imparts
To pale cheeks; and, oh! vouchsafe, then, to the little suffering poor
Once the joy of a new plaything, and the mem'ry will endure
Through the years of life that dimly stretch each little one before.
'Tis not money that is asked you from your overplenteous store;
Here are wanted willing fingers, sacrifice of leisure hours,
Which, if well employed, will scatter blessings, beautiful as flowers;
And, remember, 'tis the seedlings, strewn on life's bare path to-day,
That to stately trees will ripen, and protect you on your way.

DARKEST BELFAST.—A series of important articles on "Darkest Belfast" is appearing in the Evening Telegraph of that city. Many cases of extreme destitution and cruelty to children are being revealed.

The Riots in China.

MR. AND MRS. POLHILL-TURNER ATTACKED.

I wonder if you ever pray for Thibet. Of course, you know there are no missionaries inside the country yet. The Lamas are very jealous of foreigners, and have resisted every attempt on the part of missionaries to enter. Several of our members are earnestly seeking to spread the truth among the border tribes, hoping that in a short time doors will open into the country beyond. For this purpose Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Polhill-Turner have been living in extremely westerly places, and taking itinerations among the monasteries and encampments in the neighbourhood. Until this year their operations had been carried on from various places in the province of Kan-suh. None of these had proved suitable centres for the object in view, viz., reaching border tribes of Thibetans and ultimately moving on into Thibet itself. This led to Mr. Turner looking down south to our province of Sz'chuan. During the winter of last year he left Mrs. Turner and the children at Tsin-cheo while he came along to reconnoitre. The city of Sung-pan, a military post some sixteen days N.W. of Paoning, seemed the most likely place.

After spending a few refreshing days with us, Mr. Turner, accompanied by Mr. Beauchamp and a native named Wang-dso-ih, set off; I think it was the first week in January when they left. Mr. Beauchamp went on as far as Su-han, a city within six days of Sung-pan, then turned off for Chenuti. At Su-han Mr. Turner hired a coolie, who was acquainted with the road to Sung-pan. Sung-pan lies in a sheltered valley, enjoying a milder temperature than the surrounding country, though in the city the thermometer does not get much above 60 deg. in summer. There seemed no difficulty in getting a house.

Mr. Turner left Wang-dso-ih in charge while he returned by direct road to Tsin-cheo for Mrs. Turner and the children. Passing through Kuang Yuen in May, I had the pleasure of meeting them, resting a few days on their way to the new station. In the meanwhile Wang-dso-ih was having good times preaching among the people. He had previously been stationed at Sung-pan when serving in the army, so that he was somewhat at home. Mr. and Mrs. Turner got there safely, though Mrs. Turner was far from strong. Letters were received from time to time telling of good times in preaching both to Chinese and Thibetans. We began to look upon Sung-pan as a settled station, and oft remembered our friends there in our special meetings for praying over our own district.

All seemed to go well (Mrs. Turner's weakness being the only drawback we knew of) until Wednesday, September 7. That morning one of our teachers came into my room saying, "Wang-dso-ih has come back. They have been turned out of Sung-pan." Then we had letters from Mr. Turner giving some details of the sad affairs—details which filled our heart with grief and sympathy for our dear friends, who for the Lord Jesus' name had been so cruelly misused. A mail came in next day, bringing fuller details from Mr. Turner, and during the afternoon Mr. Cassels asked Wang-dso-ih to meet us and tell over his story. I thought I might weave the accounts together a bit, and hope to stimulate your interest in and prayers for our dear brother and his work.

Wang-dso-ih began by referring to his stay in the house during Mr. Turner's absence at Tsin-cheo. He spoke of the seeming friendliness of the Mandarins and people, especially of the Thibetans, when they came to see Mr. Turner. So far as he knew, there was no ill-feeling among the people until July, when, owing to very dry weather, a drought set in which threatened the crops. Then silly rumours about the foreigner began to be circulated. He had been seen to go out of the North Gate and charm away the clouds by burying a basin in the ground, into which he had previously breathed three times, and then sweeping a brush about in the air. These stories increased until the mandarin got to hear of them, and sent word to Mr. Turner asking him not to go out of the house until it rained.

A morning or two after this, he was accused before the mandarin of having gone out very early to scatter the clouds. Wang-dso-ih was sent for to the Yamen. As it happened, Mr. Turner had not got up when Wang left the house. He told the Mandarin this, who thereupon sent a man to see, and found Mr. Turner just getting up, or reading his Bible, having just got up. Mr. Turner, referring to this time, says they were praying daily for rain, and telling people who came to see them that they ought to ask God and not the idols to give them rain.

Things went on, evidently getting worse as day after day brought no rain until July 28, when people began to come very early, gradually filling up the outer courtyard. Mr. Turner did not feel easy about this, so he went out, and sitting on the doorstep talked to them, hoping to pacify and disperse them. As more came it became very evident they were bent upon mischief. The wooden rails which separated the small inner court were pulled down, and some thrown at him. Then a rush was made, Mr. Turner was knocked down, beaten, and his hands bound behind his back. Here he received a nasty wound on his forehead, and was almost stripped of his clothes. Mrs. Turner taking the children went up into the loft, hoping to save the little ones from injury. The mob rushed into the house, dragged out Wang-dso-ih and the cook, whose name is Chang, beat them and bound their hands behind them. Some went up into the loft and pulled Mrs. Turner down. In the scuffle her clothes were torn to shreds, and she was beaten. Reaching the court her hands were tied behind her back in the same way as the others. The four (the children had been rescued by a neighbour) were marched out through the street to the North Gate, insulted and beaten along the way. Mrs. Turner was very badly beaten. The people mocked them, crying out, "Ask Jesus to save you," "Can Jesus save you now?" and threatening to throw them all into the river. Wang-dso-ih says, "I thought only of one thing, viz., I was here bearing the Lord Jesus Christ's cross, and I had not been baptized. I was afraid lest He would not know me."

They were led out of the gate, and it seemed as if they must die. But, strange to say, the people could not agree as to how to put them to death. Some called out, "Throw them into the water." Some would stone them, and got great stones ready to do so. Indeed, poor Wang got a very nasty blow on the ankle, which had not yet healed. Others cried "Burn them," and got faggots ready to carry out that diabolical idea. The ringleaders suggested they ought to find out where the basin was buried first, or it would be no use killing the foreign devils. This hesitation, coming, it may be, from fear of actually shedding blood, saved our friends, for it gave time for the military mandarin to come up and rescue them from death, though not from further indignities.

It would take me too long to describe to you the exact position of affairs. Suffice it to say, the mandarins fear a riot among the people very much. The official who rescued our friends behaved so as to appear to take the people's part. Their cords were tied tighter until they hurt the flesh, and they were dragged up to the Yamen like common criminals. The chief mandarin was waiting for them, and at his feet were some old men pleading against them that they had caused the drought and ought to be punished. Mr. Turner was ordered to kneel before the mandarin. Hesitating to do so, he was forced down upon his knees to hear himself accused. After the accusation they were carried away behind and all four shut up in a small stuffy room, where they were kept over two nights.

But things did not end here. The people were not satisfied, and demanded the lives of the foreigners. Only after actually leaving his Yamen for soldiers did the people consent to allow the mandarin to try the case himself and punish the culprits as he thought. Now followed a disgraceful scene. The mandarin took his official seat, and received accusations against the foreigners. This farce ended in the two servants being treated in the following manner. Fancy a man in official position, with 3000 or 4000 soldiers at his call, making such a despicable overture to an uproarious rabble. Word was brought to the servants asking if they would be beaten to save Mr. and Mrs. Turner. "Yes," said the men, "if it will save them, beat us." They were then taken out and beaten 100 stripes each, not laid on heavily of course. It was to appease the people; but what cruelty and injustice!

These two men were made to wear a heavy wooden collar like any common criminal. From these they were relieved at night. Two nights passed after such sufferings without sleep, before our friends got away. It was so apparent that the people would not be pacified, that Mr. Turner consented to leave the city. The mandarin would fain have got them away with all their belongings; but Mr. Turner would not consent to that. He spent a day packing and arranging his things, taking out just what could not be done without, and getting the official seal put upon the remainder. The house was also sealed up in the same manner. Mr. Turner took this step in the hope of keeping hold upon the house and returning.

On Sunday morning early they left the city in chairs, with an escort of twenty soldiers and six Yamen runners. I have omitted to say that the children were saved unhurt and brought to Mrs. Turner after things got settled at the Yamen. One day on the road they met Miss Nelson coming to assist Mrs. Turner, and the third day they met Dr. and Mrs. Parry coming to spend a short time of rest. May we not be thankful these friends did not reach sooner? Mrs. Turner is now so unwell that Dr. Parry urged their return home for complete rest.

It seems strange to our poor conceptions that the very day after they got out of Sung-pan the long-desired rain came. It is to be feared this will confirm the people's belief in the foreigners' influence over the weather.

We are all much pleased with Wang, he gave his story so simply and humbly. He is to be baptized on the 25th of this month. He is quite ready to go back to Lung pan ifit be advised. Pray for these dear friends who have been so tried; may the comfort of the Holy Spirit fill their hearts.

THE P.S.A. MOVEMENT.

Rev. J. K. Nuttall, of Great George-street Chapel, Liverpool, describing the P.S.A. work in connection with his church, says:—"The manager of a large public-house walks two miles every Sunday to attend the service, and will go without his dinner rather than be absent. Two men engaged in the public-house trade have left it through the influence of the P.S.A. service, and are now following other occupations. A young married man, utterly abandoned to drink and regarded as a hopeless case, came to the service, signed the pledge, and, to the great joy of his young wife, is faithfully keeping it. It casually transpired during conversation with a member that he had missed his dinner six times in order to attend the service.

"One of our workers was taking momentary shelter from a heavy shower when returning from one of the afternoon services. Whilst standing there, a policeman said to him as the crowds of P.S.A. men were going past, 'The weather seems to make no difference in the attendance at the men's service at Great George-street Chapel.' 'No, apparently not.' 'I go there myself now every other Sunday when off duty.' The policeman stated what was true. The weather, however unfavourable, makes but little difference in the attendance. Some who were pronounced sceptics have long been warm supporters of the movement, and are now amongst our workers.

"At one of our P.S.A. meetings for testimony, prayer, and praise, a well-dressed, intelligent man rose, and said: 'I owe all that I am to-day to our P.S.A. service. I have had to do with everything that is bad, and I know the taste of every kind of drink that is sold. For fifteen years I have been wandering about the lodging-houses of Liverpool. I joined when the P.S.A. service was begun, signed the pledge, and have kept it to this day. And three weeks ago, when you (i.e., the president) were giving the address, I felt as I never felt before. I saw my sins, and confessed them to God, and received forgiveness, and now I am a Christian. I met with my wife, too, since joining the Brotherhood, and we have had a P.S.A. wedding—not a drop of drink on the table.

"A man was passing the chapel on a recent Sunday afternoon, who laughed at the idea of attending a religious service. A P.S.A. man whom he was chaffing about the service urged him to go 'just for once' and see how he liked it. To the surprise of those who knew him, he did so, and was so won by what he heard that his prejudices disappeared, and he joined the Brotherhood that very day. All who once attend the service, without exception, speak in terms of warm approval of the devout and reverent spirit of the men, and of the character of the addresses given. We are praying for, and expecting, a signal visitation of the Spirit of God. We believe that many stand at the threshold of God's kingdom who ere long will become citizens, the sons and heirs of God."

REV. B. FAY MILLS,

AMERICAN EVANGELIST.

OUR portrait this week outlines the features of an evangelist whose preaching has been greatly owned of God in the United States. He is still comparatively young, and we hope to hear much more of him in the future.

B. Fay Mills was born at Rahway, New Jersey, in 1857, being the son of Rev. Dr. Thornton A. Mills, a minister of the Presbyterian body. After a short period of business life, during which he experienced change of heart and reformation of life, the young man studied for the ministry, and graduated at Lake Forest University, Illinois, in 1879. For about two years he was a missionary in the distant Black Hills of Dakota. He was afterwards called to the New England States, and was for some time pastor of the West Parish Congregational Church, Rutland, Vermont. There were about 350 members, and he found the congregation sundered by dissensions; but these, through the grace of God, he was enabled to heal. His success, indeed, was so marked, that, during the first year of his pastorate, many invitations came to him, which he was compelled to disregard. Finally, after much solicitation, he went to Middlebury, in the same State, for a few days. There were but fifty at his first meeting, but hundreds went to the second. His days lengthened into weeks, yet the success achieved among the college students there, as well as among the townsfolk, was so marked that he could not leave his labours.

When at last he returned home, it was to ask his people to give their consent to his engaging in this wider field without. They could not think of his leaving them, and so they refused. He persisted, and a compromise was effected whereby he obtained three months' leave of absence. To the lasting good of hundreds of people, he availed himself of a few of the forty requests that had been made for his services. The Rutland Church could not bear to deprive him of the usefulness he manifested, and sorrowfully consented to his severance from them. Since that time he has preached to many thousands throughout the country. Though a Presbyterian in full standing, he works on distinctly undenominational lines.

Mr. Mills was a pastor for nine years; during the past five he has been engaged in evangelistic work, enlisting wherever he has gone the co-operation of all sections of the Christian Church. He has employed to good purpose the business capacity which he developed before his conversion. And, as he was saved while sunken deep in sin, he knows how to address those who are still in the same bondage.

The story of his conversion may be encouraging to some. While quite a youth, he cultivated the company of men who were victims of drinking and gambling habits. He soon became a victim to them himself. One day he won a large amount of money at a saloon in San Francisco, and was about to leave the house with his gains, when some one sought the loan of a small sum. Mr. Mills consented, handed the man the money, and turned back to watch the new game. He speedily became interested, took a hand himself, and in a short time had lost every cent! Utterly hopeless and dejected, he sought his room in an adjoining house, and determined to end his life by his own hand. He did not immediately set about the execution of his purpose, but flung himself upon his bed in despair.

As he did so the head of the bed was jarred, and shook a bookshelf which was just above it. A book fell from it upon Mr. Mills's head. In anger he seized the volume and threw it into the farthest corner of the room. But even in the darkness he recognised it by the touch: it was the book of Psalms, which had been given him by his brother. Chiding himself for having thus abused the gift of brotherly affection, he arose, and felt for the book until he found it. It was open, and retaining the place, he was seized with a strong desire to see what he could find on the open page. He lighted the gas, and found his thumb at Psalm xlii. 5 "Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted in me? Hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise Him for the help of his countenance."

Trembling with emotion, as though God had spoken the words specially to him, he said aloud: "Can this be for me? Shall I yet praise God?" Then there rose before him the vision of the praying mother who was more than three thousand miles away. The godly training of his childhood asserted its influence in that decisive moment. In perplexity he cried: "O God! shall it ever be that I shall yet praise Thee? My soul is cast down and disquieted in me, Thou knowest. May I yet hope in God? Is there hope for me? Then I will begin to hope now, and I will praise Thee now and here." Suiting the action to the word, he fell upon his knees by the bed, and poured out his soul to God. Before he rose from that prayer, "the work was done."

In July last, when in San Francisco, Mr. Mills visited his spiritual birthplace, and took occasion to plead with his old acquaintance, the saloon-keeper, to turn from his evil ways, and surrender to God. He was accompanied by his wife and Dr. C. O. Brewer, who subsequently described the proceedings in The Pacific weekly newspaper.

Mr. Mills has travelled East and West in the States, and is so overwhelmed with invitations that he makes his engagements from eight months to a year in advance. When possible he opens a mission with meetings in different parts of a city, and aims at culminating in a general movement in a large central building. During the first quarter of the present year, with the assistance of other evangelists, he conducted such a mission in Cincinnati and Covington. On that occasion seventy-three churches, of sixteen different denominations, representing more than twenty thousand communicants, united. During the mission over eight thousand persons signed cards expressing a desire to lead a Christian life. This remarkable work was described at length in a memorial volume of nearly four hundred pages, embellished with scores of portraits and other illustrations. (Standard Publishing Company, Cincinnati.)

Though tremendously in earnest and sympathetic in his preaching, Mr. Mills disregards the merely emotional element. This in a large measure commends him to the masculine mind, over which he has a power far in excess of that usually enjoyed. He has had associated with him a number of prominent singers, including Messrs. Towner, Stebbins, and Burke. Latterly Mr. L. B. Greenwood has accompanied him and sung the Gospel.

Mr. Mills's present home is at Pawtuxet, Providence, Rhode Island. His wife was daughter of the late Hon. Henry Hill, of Minnesota, and he has five children. He has written two or three helpful books. We trust that he will gather strength as he lives and labours, and be continuously and more and more abundantly blessed in his devotion to the work of God and solicitude for the souls of men.

MISSIONARIES FOR AFRICA.

A few days ago a meeting was held at Colwyn Bay to say farewell to eight missionaries leaving for Africa under the auspices of the American Baptist Missionary Union and the Congo Training Institute, directed by Rev. W. Hughes. Three of the party were Africans—namely, Miss Bessie Gardner, trained at Glasgow, and Frank and Lufwlu, young men who had enjoyed the advantages of the institute, and learned to work as wheelwrights, to heal the sick, etc.; so they go to teach the arts of civilised life as well as to deliver the Gospel message.

Miss Gardner accompanied Mr. and Mrs. Clark, who are returning to their work at Lake Montumba. Mrs. Frederickson, a Swedish lady, was going to rejoin her husband 200 miles up the Congo. The other members of the party were Mr. Finch, who also went with Mr. Clark, and Mr. Antisdel, B.A., who proceeds to Mukumbikia. The missionaries were all hoping to reach their destination by Christmastide.

Another of Mr. Hughes's young men, named Kofele, expects to sail very shortly. A fund is in formation to advance the proposal to use the Canary Isles as a basis for work on behalf of African evangelisation. Communications to Mr. Hughes may be addressed, Congo Training Institute, Colwyn Bay, N. Wales.

MISSIONARIES FOR THE SOUDAN.

The International Missionary Alliance of the United States has sent out a new party of missionaries to a most important and novel field. This society has been in existence about five years, and its board of management consists of thirty ministers and Christian workers representing the various Evangelical denominations. Its head offices are in New York City. It has now about 150 missionaries in various countries. About twenty-five went out to the Congo last May, and two other parties to India in July and August, consisting of sixteen persons.

On October 9 another party of fourteen sailed for Liverpool on their way to the Soudan, Northern Africa. Their field is the largest single country in Africa, with a population of about ninety millions, stretching from Khartoum on the Red Sea to Sierra Leone on the Atlantic Ocean, a strip 4000 miles long and 1000 miles wide. This densely-populated region is wholly unevangelised.

The first missionary party sailed two years ago, under the leadership of Mr. Kingman, to this field from New York. Others since have followed. The present reinforcements will increase the working force to twenty. Their base of operations is Freetown, Sierra Leone, and their line of advance is up the Rokelle River, which they have already ascended nearly one hundred miles and planted a number of stations. The present party will occupy about eight stations.

An all-day farewell meeting was held for the outgoing missionaries in the Gospel Tabernacle, Eighth-avenue and Forty-fourth-street. Interesting addresses were given by the outgoing missionaries and others. A large and enthusiastic party of friends were at the dock to see them off, with songs and prayers for every blessing to be upon them. They are going to a perilous climate and a difficult field. Five or six have already fallen on the field, but these are brave men and women, and they have fully counted the cost.

THE GOSPEL IN BRAZIL.

For many years the late Dr. Kalley was much blessed of God in his efforts for the evangelisation of Brazil. Native churches of a simple evangelical character have sprung up as the result of those efforts. These churches have struggled to make themselves entirely self-supporting, and the poor members have given for the support of the Gospel in a way which is really remarkable.

But other workers are urgently needed for Pernambuco, and for outlying stations, the outcome of the Pernambuco Church. Already two suitable men have offered themselves and stand ready to start. But at the outset it is necessary that they be sustained, and that expenses of the voyage, etc., be met. The cost of preaching halls, the succouring of Christ's poor, and similar current expenses, are all the native Christians can as yet attempt. The present pastor, Mr. James Fanstone, has for some years been sustaining himself by teaching. But new workers going out cannot do this. The native church in Pernambuco already possesses its own preaching hall, and as soon as a small debt upon it has been paid, may undertake at least in part the duty of supporting its own pastor.

Should some timely help be afforded just now to furnish these needy congregations with pastors, a work, which has already been the means of much blessing, and which has proved itself in every way adapted to the needs of Brazil, would be established on an eventually self-supporting basis.

Further information will be readily given by Mr. James Fanstone, care of Mrs. Kalley, Campo Verde, Tipper Linn-road, Edinburgh.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION IN FRANCE.

I was sorry to read in the number of The Christian of October 27th, the phrase referring to the paper contributed by Rev. T. Howard Hill, on national education: "It is sad to think that the Protestant Churches of France are so ill-prepared when such a fine opportunity as this presents itself." I wish I could have read: "Are so ill-provided." You know as well as I do, that the Protestant Churches are, as it were, divided in two. One is the liberal section, or rather Unitarian, ultra-official Church, with no sympathy for Gospel work, and even religious teaching. The other comprises the best men of the national Church, free Church, etc., all manfully fighting for the cause of Christ, but oh, so ill-provided, not ill-prepared.

The Protestant population is only 600,000, as against 36,000,000 of Romanists. If you deduct half, or a little more than half of these as being "liberals," or indifferent, there remains only 200,000 or 300,000 Protestants, most of them poor people, and to them you would give the task, not only to provide for their own religious wants, but also to open schools for the 36,000,000 who live and die without the Gospel of Christ.

In my own district here (my parish is such a large one, above a million in population), how greatly should I rejoice to open denominational schools, or at least to provide for home education, the children being sent to the Government school for general instruction. But, alas! where are the means to come from? Our English brethren have not yet understood the open door before them. They send the Gospel to China, and all over the world. We thank God that they do, but why should France be left so sadly unprovided for?

The Société Evangelique de France, 76, Rue d'Assas, Secretary Pastor Mouron, is instituted to do this work, but an annual income of less than £3000 is all they have to spread the Gospel among the Romanists. I make it a subject of prayer that God will put it into the heart of some known man in England to come forward and to devote himself to the superintendence of this work. English Christians would have confidence in him. If such a man could be found, let him use what already is begun by this much-honoured Society, and with larger means instil a new life into the work. I mean only the educational part of their work. It would be a powerful factor for the advancement of the kingdom of our Lord and Christ in the world.—Yours truly, C. W. Cremer, Pastor.

THE TEMPERANCE CRUSADE.

A very hearty welcome has awaited Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Frances Willard on their return from the United States. Both these earnest workers "for home and God, and every land" addressed overflowing audiences on Friday evening at Highgate, and on Sunday evening at St. James's Hall.

In her address at the latter place Lady Somerset said: People were apt to look on the world as mapped out into the paltry divisions which man had made, but with great hearts they should take the world as their own in the same sense that John Wesley said it was his parish. They had come to recognise that this evil was their own evil; the traps that were set along their streets were not set for others' children, but for their children. They had seen a circle drawn around that mystic thing that men call "politics," and women had been bidden to stand off; but they knew that unless the presence of Christ was really in the House of Commons, as in St. James's Hall or Westminster Abbey, the laws could not conform to God's will. She believed that a great benediction was about to fall upon mankind, because mankind had heard the great cry of stricken humanity, and every cry that is uttered must find an echo in their own hearts.

Miss Willard's addresses were brief, as her state of health is not such as to allow of any prolonged effort. Her words, however, were not only warm and strong, but enthused her hearers.

Mr. J. G. Woolley is conducting a mission this week at Highgate Archway Wesleyan Church.

NATURE & THE SUPERNATURAL.

The following is a summary, by one of his hearers, of an illustration employed by Rev. Edward White, at the last "Ancient Merchants' Lecture."

Suppose St. Paul's Cathedral swept away and a crowd of people, scientific and otherwise, gathered round the vacant area. They see a pipe filled with fluid, shooting up from the ground, and sending off other shoots all around, which deposit multitudes of stones in a certain order, forming walls according to a regular pattern, having spaces at certain distances. Other tubes shoot forth filling these spaces with doors and windows. The process goes on without a word being spoken or the hand of man uplifted, till the massive dome is completed, firmly poised, and the gilded ball and cross are evolved on the lofty summit. Suppose still other tubes carry potent fluids to the interior, which is now decorated with beautiful frescoes and elaborate carvings, and a cathedral is complete: would there be anyone of those spectators who would assert that all this took place without the agency of conscious power and sagacity?

The production of one bird is far more wonderful. In the yolk of the egg tiny tubes shoot forth, conveying material by which are formed the heart, lungs, stomach, blood-vessels, larynx, vocal chords, feet, wings, skull, bill, etc., of the young bird, with plumage of exquisite, elaborate, and regular form and colouring — such as the pheasant or the peacock — and the result is, not a dead structure but a living creature, eating, flying, singing. Is this less supernatural than the supposed formation of the church? Is not Nature itself supernatural? Are what we call miracles more unworthy to be credited than what we see before our eyes in living creatures beyond count in variety and number? If God is the author of these marvellous creations, is it incredible that for his own wise and beneficent purposes such works as the Bible miracles should be wrought?—which are the performing, at once, marvels far less marvellous than those of Nature, which are performed gradually.

THE MISSION AT OXFORD.

(By an Undergraduate.)

"The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof are glad." This is the keynote of the whole ssion, some general impressions of which I propose record as supplementing the account in last ek's issue. Oxford is not by any means highly voured in the matter of public buildings available such meetings, and the consequence was that, hough the Corn Exchange, where Mr. Moody oke, had almost 2,000 on each occasion, large erflow meetings were necessary, and even then mbers could not be accommodated, especially on e Sunday.

Comparisons with the former visit were natural d inevitable, and the unanimous testimony is that . Moody's power is as great as, if not greater an, ever, and that the present mission has been, the whole, much more successful than the mer one. The interest among the undergradu-s increased each night, until on the last meeting least 500 of them were present. The sight at the n's meeting on Sunday evening was simply magicent, quite 2,000 being present; while the nd of their voices in the hymns was an inspira-
n. Mr. Moody himself was much affected, and address on "Excuses" was in demonstration of e Spirit and power.

The closing meeting was another memorable casion, the building being crowded to excess and ge numbers unavoidably prevented from entering.
Mr. Moody's suggestion, the crowd in the open near the entrance was addressed by one of the al ministers. The incident, already recorded in ese pages, of the undergraduate confessing rist in that large meeting, and the immediate ult of several others doing likewise, will long be nembered as a notable close to this remarkable ssion.

Dr. Pentecost was here for the overflows of the t day, and he also spoke twice on the following y to large audiences with great acceptance and wer. It is believed that Oxford will soon have the vilege and pleasure of another visit from Dr.
ntecost, who is so admirably adapted for work
ong University men.

The mission was followed up by means of united etings, conducted first by local ministers and n by Rev. W. W. Clark, of New York. Large diences, an earnest spirit of prayer and souls iding every evening proved how deeply the rk had stirred the city. The number of enquiry-m cards sent in is distinctly large, but no idea of mbers will be made public, Mr. Moody being irely averse to any such publicity as wholly mis-ding as to the real effects of the work. Mr. yers' singing was greatly used of God during the ssion, and Lord Bennet, too, rendered effective vice in this department. Not the least important l valuable element in the whole mission, has n the entire oneness of spirit and aim among the nisters and other workers of the various churches.
om first to last each and all worked with hearty good-l and earnest expectation. And thus according to word about unity "there the Lord commanded his ssing.". Further, it is proposed as a result of the ssion to form a permanent united prayer meeting
Oxford evangelical workers of all denominations.
Time alone will test the permanent reality of ch of the work, but even now those who are rking in the various districts testify to undoubted nversions, and great blessing to Christians. To ve united, even for a time only, so many workers different churches, to have infused such a spirit prayer, love, and endeavour among Christians, have called the attention of so many to the ims of the Lord Jesus Christ, and above all to ve led so many who were professors to be real possors is a sufficient justification of the work, and these blessings and many more which will flow l, Oxford workers in the City and University are ising God. In addition, there are names from rrounding towns and villages, many having come from long distances and some having walked rteen miles only to find nothing but standing

e children sung some action songs. The hon. retary, Mr. J. M. Brash, gave a good record of the r's work and described the various agencies at rk amongst the thousands of children gathered in school every Sunday.

MR. McNEILL IN DUBLIN.

Mr. McNeill concluded his three weeks' mission yesterday (Wednesday). It has stirred to a remarkable degree the hearts and sympathies of the Dublin community. People doubted if the proposal to hold a daily meeting for commercial men and business folk generally in the Leinster Hall at the busy hour of 1 p.m. would succeed, but the result has utterly dispelled these fears. The large building has been crammed daily, and Mr. McNeill, in his own terse, original manner, has been alternately preaching the Gospel of God's everlasting love, and dealing sledge-hammer blows at the hypocritical Pharisees and the close-fisted, criticising, worldly-minded people who are so largely represented amongst the Church-goers of the present day. "A man might as well whistle jigs to milestones as preach to some o' ye!" was the pithy remark with which he concluded one of his denunciatory sentences.

It is expected that Dublin will soon be revisited by Mr. McNeill. At one of the late mid-day meetings a proposal was passed by acclamation inviting him and Mr. Burke to undertake a mission in Ireland extending over a lengthened period, and commencing at the New Year. Mr. McNeill, in reply, expressed his gratitude at receiving such a very hearty invitation. He said he could not answer at once in the affirmative, but he would give the matter his full and careful consideration.

WORK IN NORTH LONDON.

The fifth annual meeting of Mr. H. Bird's mission was held on Tuesday evening, November 22, in the Lecture Hall of the Upper Holloway Baptist Chapel, under the presidency of Mr. R. C. Morgan, preceded by a tea, at which about 250 friends sat down. The report showed that great blessing had attended the work of the past year; every branch of service has enjoyed encouraging tokens of the Divine favour.

As the result of evangelistic services at Holloway Hall, and those held in the open air, many have professed conversion and recovery from backsliding; while the labours of the three sisters entirely supported by the mission, and who devote their time to visiting the homes of the poor, the sick, and the dying, have been graciously owned in the salvation of many. Bible readings and classes, Dorcas and mothers' meetings, children's services, etc., have been held; local public-houses, lodging houses, laundries, and hospitals have been visited; and the poor have been assisted with clothing, coals, food, etc. The balance-sheet showed that the entire work has been accomplished for £182. The chairman, in an interesting address, emphasised the importance of such an agency, and the necessity of every Christian being a worker. Following this, the Rev. J. R. Wood spoke in high terms of the mission, with which he is intimately acquainted, warmly expressing his pleasure in the success bestowed, and the manner in which the work had been done. Addresses were also delivered by Mr. W. C. Parkinson, L.C.C., Mr. Henry Bird, Sisters E. Edwards, J. Pearson, and others.

The funds of the mission being nearly exhausted, at a season of the year when help is most needed, the smallest donation towards its support would be most gratefully welcomed. The secretary is Mr. W. H. Bird, 15, Lowman-road, Holloway, N., who will gladly send copy of report to any applicant.

St. James's, Hatcham.

The heading of this paragraph will, no doubt, recall to the minds of our readers the stormy scenes which this parish witnessed during the incumbency of Rev. Arthur Tooth. All such discord and unfaithfulness to the Protestant and Reformed Church of England are things of the past. The present vicar was preceded by Rev. S. A. Selwyn, who was permitted under God to gather a great congregation and to start a flourishing work. Last Easter Sunday there were 875 communicants. There are five Sunday schools, with 1900 children; seven total abstinence societies.

There are, in addition to the church, three mission halls, one of which was formerly a blacksmith's shed, now too small and in a dilapidated condition. Rev. W. H. Stone, the vicar, is appealing for £2000 to build a new mission-hall in this densely-populated South London parish. Among those who have already subscribed are Messrs. George Williams, F. A. Bevan, J. Deacon, E. M. Denny, R. C. Morgan, R. Scott, J. D. Allcroft, Canon Hoare, Rev. F. E. Wigram, and others. Communications may be addressed to St. James's Vicarage, Hatcham.

MR. FULLER GOOCH'S WORK.

We gave some time ago full details of the undenominational work which Pastor Fuller Gooch has been led to open in West Norwood. For nearly eight months the services have been held in the Public Hall, which seats 800 persons, and has regularly been crowded at the evening meeting. The Lord has blessed the work greatly, and many souls have been brought to the Saviour. Indeed there has scarcely been a service without manifest tokens of blessing.

Thus it has become necessary to consider further steps. The hire of the present hall, £150 per annum, is in itself a heavy burden; while there is not the freedom and fulness of use which is essential to the carrying on of the varied missionary and other operations. Further, the district is growing very rapidly; new estates are being opened up and built upon; thus the population is increasing, and there is need for additional Christian effort. In view of the whole circumstances and the evident leadings of the Lord, Mr. Fuller Gooch and his helpers feel compelled to "arise and build." A freehold plot of ground has been secured, and they are now in treaty for an iron building to seat nine hundred persons and to cost about £1000. The whole cost of site and building will be a little over £2000, of which £600 has already been raised or promised by the friends on the spot.

It is believed that many who know and value Mr. Gooch's testimony, and who are in sympathy with this effort to carry on undenominational Christian work in loyal faithfulness to truth, and yet in the spirit of Christian love and unity, will welcome the opportunity of co-operating in some measure by aiding in the cost of putting up the necessary building. Already a number of evangelistic and missionary agencies in the way of Sunday and Bible classes, Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A., Cottage Mission, mission services, and so on, are in active operation. There is thus the germ and promise of a live and vigorous work, which, we trust, may win sympathy and aid from many friends. Communications should be made to Pastor W. Fuller Gooch, Manseville, Chatsworth-road, West Norwood, S.E.

Gospel Temperance in Belfast.

Mr. Matthew Burnett has closed a fourteen days' successful Gospel Temperance Mission in East Belfast. During his stay in that part of the city he spoke two or three times daily to crowds of working men connected with the ship yards at the dinner hour, addressing women's meetings in the afternoon in the Y.M.C.A., speaking again in the evening in one of the churches. All the ministers co-operated heartily with him. Over a thousand took the pledge, and 200 of these were known to be confirmed victims of the drink. As the outcome of the mission a united Gospel Temperance Union has been formed. A band of earnest Christian workers will visit those rescued in their homes, and bring to bear upon them the power of the Gospel.

Mr. Burnett closed a week's mission at Percy-street Hall in connection with Rev. H. Montgomery's church, on Friday last. He held three and four meetings daily, with encouraging results. Some 1350 have signed the pledge. Mr. Burnett will remain in and around Belfast for some weeks to come.

"THE CHRISTIAN" Abroad.

We have before us the addresses of several foreign missionaries desirous of having The Christian sent them, but at the present time our own free list is so large we cannot undertake to add more names. If, however, any of our readers wish to have the privilege of sending a weekly copy to such labourers in the foreign field, we should be pleased to hear from them. This is a very simple and useful way of cheering missionaries, besides forming a link of communication between friends at home and workers in the mission field, which cannot fail to prove profitable to both.

AT A MEETING of the British Medical Association held, last week, under the presidency of Dr. B. W. Richardson, Dr. Norman Kerr read a valuable paper on "Stimulants in Workhouses," based upon the most recent returns, which conclusively proved that wherever the practice of removing intoxicating drinks altogether is carried out the best results follow, and are, indeed, always to be expected, while even sickness and disease do not interfere with that position.

Letters to the Editor.

HELP FOR THE UNEMPLOYED.

Dear Sir,—Now that this topic is being so widely discussed, I should like to suggest a revival of the work-meetings for women held in the West End during a season of similar distress some four or five winters ago, by a lady now deceased. A number of specially needy women were invited to attend on certain afternoons in the week at a mission-room, where work (chiefly repairing) was given to them, and cheerful conversation carried on for two hours. At the close tea was provided, and each worker received 6d.

Want of skill with the needle was not allowed to prevent anyone from coming, as the ladies who presided were ready to give instruction about the work, which was very simple. The women might, if they liked, bring their own work to do. Could not something of this sort be done again? Tickets of admission might be entrusted to district visitors, etc., for distribution to suitable recipients.

A District Visitor.

WHAT IS "THE REST"?

Dear Sir,—I observe that Mr. Horace Noel urges what he conceives to be a grammatical objection against Mr. Meyer's rendering of Hebrews iv. 3. "We that have believed do enter into rest." There is no grammatical ground, in my judgment, for the objection urged. So far from any Greek writer expressing the act of entering by an aorist or a perfect, the very structure of the language would not admit of it. Eiserchometha can only mean "we are entering," or "do enter." The meaning "We are to enter" is not properly construed by eiserchometha, but by eiseleusometha. The reference to the participial force is totally irrelevant, for the manifest reason that the participle is predicative of function. Ho erchomenos = "He, the Coming One," "will come and will not tarry."

It is also to be noted that the Greek does not recognise "I am come" as a present. "I am come" is the result of coming, and is, therefore, a perfect or an aorist tense, and is rendered either by eko or by the perfect or aorist of erchomai. Despite Mr. Noel's confident pronouncement, I have no hesitation in saying that eiselthomen could never answer to Mr. Meyer's meaning, for it would mean, not "we do enter" or "we are entering," but "we are entered."

All that Mr. Meyer contends for is fully borne out by the original. The goal which the aorist tense would represent lies beyond, but faith imparts a present experience of the sacred rest. In other words, "we who have believed are entering into rest"; and according to our faith so is it unto us now and here.—Yours faithfully,

James Douglas.

THE SUPPORT OF MISSIONS.

Dear Sir,—May I ask for a few lines in The Christian to call attention to what appears to me to be a very serious state of things in regard to the work of the Lord, both at home and abroad? I refer to the real crisis through which many missions are passing with respect to their pecuniary support. I refer chiefly to those called "undenominational," such as those for whom you are always so glad to open the columns of your paper, and for whom you receive help.

Do Christians know that many of these missions are in the greatest financial difficulty, and are even obliged to contemplate very seriously the giving up of considerable portions of their work unless the needful funds are forthcoming? And this applies to work of all kinds—refuge work and medical missions, as well as evangelistic work. These missions have been pioneer missions, and have opened up the way for many others; and it has been the efforts made by individuals, as distinct from churches, that have been so often a blessing in the Lord's work. What a debt the churches owe to these pioneer workers! Are they to be allowed to disappear?

A letter just received says that the writer, himself engaged in mission work, finds that "the spirit of ecclesiastical coldness and indifference is doing much harm, and it is gradually, but surely, cutting off supplies from the work in which he is engaged." I fear that this is too true, and that there is a very real danger ahead.

We hear much talk of reunion among "the churches," but "the churches" are getting more and more intolerant of individual effort and "independent" action.

Let us be on our guard. The spirit of Rome is not, alas! only in Rome. Let us take heed that we do not hinder the work of God's Spirit, who raiseth up whom He will to carry on his work.

I would much like this question to be discussed in your columns by those able to do so. I purposely abstain from mentioning any names of persons or missions, and remain,—Yours truly,

Nov. 22, 1892. Fellow Worker.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

(From our own Correspondents.)

OXFORD.

The sermon at Mansfield College last week by Rev. John Watson, of Liverpool, on "Enthusiasm," has created very great interest in Oxford. It was a fitting subject from one whose life and ministry are real proofs of its reality.

Several Oxford churches last Sunday had very large congregations at the services as the direct results of Mr. Moody's mission. Special evangelistic services were held, and on almost every side there seem to be tokens of blessing.

Of course Mr. Moody's Mission could not pass without adverse comment, and the local papers have had anonymous correspondence thereon. But the work has already proved too real for these to be worthy of serious notice. One prominent local paper, on the other hand, in its editorial notes, bore hearty testimony to Mr. Moody's faith and earnestness as the secret of his power.

The Bishop of Chester spoke at a large and influential gathering last Monday, and explained his temperance policy. The subject was afterwards discussed by several prominent Oxford men.

Mrs. Bramwell Booth gave an account of the "Darkest England" scheme in Oxford on Monday in the Town Hall.

The Social Scheme of the Church Army has been at work here several months, and is doing good service by means of a Labour Home. The home is full, and has already been the means of setting several destitutes on their feet again.

The value of the Y.M.C.A. as a rallying point for Christian workers has again been verified by Mr. Moody's Mission. At the association rooms all the prayer-meetings and committee meetings have been held, and in many other ways also the Association is doing most effective service.

CAMBRIDGE.

The Principal of Ridley Hall gave his last Bible reading for the term on Sunday week, the subject being "Consistency." Some of the speaker's weighty sentences were "God saves his people to serve and also to be: to educate and form them." "Consistency is one of the sure ways of deepening our intimacy with Christ."

Major Owen Hay paid us another visit at the Alexandra Hall on Sunday week, where there was a good attendance to listen to his practical and helpful address. The following evening Rev. F. E. Wigram spoke at the C.M.U. to an appreciative audience.

On Wednesday morning Rev. J. Barton, vicar of Holy Trinity, and Rev. J. T. Lang, of Corpus, hospitably entertained a large company of members of the University at the C.M.S. annual breakfast, held at the Lion Hotel. Mr. J. Barton made a statement as to the work of the society, and introduced to the meeting Rev. Alfred Clifford, Bishop-elect of Lucknow, who gave a very interesting account of the work now going on in India.

He made especial reference to the Associated Evangelist scheme which has been set on foot by the C.M.S. for some few years. He explained it as being a small company of some five or six young men, headed by an ordained minister, who spent their time in visiting—teaching and preaching—among the populous villages of India. By this means (said Mr. Clifford) much good work has been done. As the young men are single and live together in community it is an economical method of expending the funds which are placed at the disposal of the Society; and the mutual sympathy, companionship, and prayer which such an organisation affords renders it very pleasurable as well as effectual. The usual period for which men volunteer to go out in this way is five years. Mr. Clifford (who is an old Corpus man) appealed to the members of the University to give themselves to this excellent work.

Dr. Perowne subsequently, in the course of a short, weighty address, pointed out our duty as Englishmen in sending the Gospel to our fellow-subjects, the people of India.

A very influential meeting was held at the Guildhall with reference to Uganda, to listen to an address by Captain Lugard. Among the speakers were the Master of Trinity, Professor Jebb, M.P., and the Master of Selwyn. Emphasis was given to the right that Cambridge men, who had gone to Uganda, had, that their country should protect them and their labours among the Buganda.

LADY CARLISLE has intimated her intention to give £70 a year for ten years to the Denton Holme Nursing Association, Carlisle, to provide a trained nurse for the Caldewgate district of Carlisle on condition that the trained nurse should be a pledged teetotaler. The district is to a great extent populated by the poorer class.

Obituary.

MR. T. SIBLY.

The death is announced of Mr. Thomas Sibly B.A., for nearly forty years head-master of the Wesleyan College, Taunton. The son of a Wesleyan minister, he was highly esteemed in a wide circle. He did much to mould the character of many ministers who passed through the school. About twelve years ago he retired from active work. He continued, however, to serve Taunton as an alderman, and entered into rest at the age of eighty, leaving a widow and a grown-up family.

REV. HUGH M'SORLEY.

This able evangelist and sturdy exponent of Protestant principles passed away on Saturday morning. He had been vicar of St. Paul's, Tottenham since 1861, and was for many years remarkably active in giving Protestant lectures, and opposing by every means in his power the advance of both Romanism and Ritualism. Some months ago, however, as we mentioned at the time, he broke down, and has never really recovered. The call home was very sudden in the end, as on Friday he appeared fairly well, while on Saturday morning he was found dead in his bed.

MR. JOHN SOMERVILLE.

We regret to announce the death of Mr. John Somerville, at one time a well-known merchant in Leith, which took place at his residence, Edinburgh. Deceased, who was in ninety-fifth year, retired from business about eighteen years ago. He came of a good Covenanting stock, his great grandmother was baptized by the famous Covenanting preacher, Renwick, in a hillside burn at midnight. He was at one time an elder in the Original Secession Church, of which Dr. M'Crie, the historian, was minister. When that body joined the Free Church, he became an elder in the Pilrig Free Church, which office he held until his death. He leaves a widow, two sons and five daughters. The elder son is John Somerville, Belgian Consul, Leith, and the younger is the Rev. David Somerville, Roseburn Free Church.

REV. GEORGE WILSON M'CREE.

Many will hear with regret of the death on Thursday evening, after a long illness, of this devoted servant of Christ. For eighteen years he was the pastor of the Borough-road Baptist Church, Southwark, but his great work was that by which he is better known, namely, his twenty-six years of missionary labour among the poor of St. Giles's, which work he undertook when Rev. Dr. Brock became the pastor of Bloomsbury Chapel. His labours in St. Giles's, on the Five Dials, and the Seven Dials were with the most notorious characters among whom could be found thieves, prize-fighters &c., and yet amongst them the deceased was highly respected and honoured, and they became the subjects of his earnest labour and solicitude. He was also known familiarly as "the Bishop of St. Giles's." We hope to give in an early issue an outline of his interesting career.

Homes for Little Boys.

The annual gathering of the friends and supporters of the Homes for Little Boys at Farningham and Swanley took place at the Albert Hall, South Kensington, on Saturday afternoon. Mr. W. H. Willans, the treasurer, presided. The orchestra of the hall was well filled with some 500 children from both branches of the institution, who during the afternoon sang a number of hymns and songs. Selections were also given by the brass band of the institution.

The Chairman, who said that he had been connected for twenty-eight years with the institution, spoke of the value of the work carried on, and remarked that it was never more needed than to-day. The managers were proud of the institution, but ashamed to say that they were greatly in debt. Canon Barker said that he was glad to hear that no fewer than 1,600 lads had passed through the homes during the past twenty-eight years. The teaching of the boys some handicraft instead of their being clerks was a feature which deserved attention. He was pleased that the religious teaching was undenominational, for it showed a spirit of fairness, justice, and consideration for the consciences of the children and their relatives. Dr. Clifford also spoke in high praise of the practical training the boys were receiving.

A statement having been made by Mr. B. Clarke, the secretary, as to the funds of the institution, he referred to the proficiency of the boys both in the school and in the workshop. Miss Willans distributed a number of prizes, after which a musical drill was gone through by the elder boys.

DR. SUTHERLAND, secretary of the Glasgow Committee of the Society for Dealing with Habitual Drunkards, reports that in Scotland 110,700 apprehensions for drunkenness have been made in a year.

THE CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATIONS.

Y.M.C.A.

THE new building at Saffron Walden is nearly completed, and will be opened on Jan. 10.

The Bath Association reports very encouraging results attending the work of the present session.

Rev. J. C. Harrison addressed on Sunday afternoon an interesting gathering of young men at the Hampstead Y.M.C.A. rooms.

The Grantham Association, though £150 in debt, has determined to carry on its work, a portion of the liability having been guaranteed.

Mr. Thomas Cash presided at the annual meeting of the Peckham branch, which was very successful, a clean balance-sheet being presented.

Mr. R. McCann, the new Bombay travelling secretary, was warmly welcomed at a crowded meeting held in the Apollo Bunder Rooms, Bombay.

The Y.M.C.A. of Jerusalem has recently gained possession of a site near the Jaffa Gate and the terminus of the newly-opened railway between Jaffa and Jerusalem.

The twentieth annual state convention of the Y.M.C.A. of Illinois was held in Bloomington, October 26-30; the outlook for the coming year is full of encouragement.

An extended Y.M.C.A. tour has just been completed in Manitoba by the secretary of the Winnipeg Association, the outcome being the starting of quite a number of new Associations.

Archdeacon Sinclair has recently addressed many Y.M.C.A. gatherings in all parts of the country. On Thursday evening he spoke at a social reception at the West-end branch in Savile-row, Regent-street.

The Young Men's Magazine, organ of the Y.M.C.A. in New South Wales, has been interviewing Dr. F. E. Clarke as to "the relation between the Y.M.C.A. and Y.P.S.C.E." Each society, says the doctor, has its own function, and there is no clashing.

The seventeenth annual report of the Bury (Lancs) Association states that in no previous year has the work been so great and encouraging. There has been a large increase in the roll of membership, which now, including gymnasium and class members, amounts to 721.

Mr. F. A. Bevan gave a reception at the West London branch on Thursday evening, when there was a very large company present. A good programme had been arranged by the secretary, Mr. J. W. Holmes, and in the course of this Archdeacon Sinclair gave an address.

On Saturday afternoons Rev. F. B. Meyer delivers a Bible lecture at Aldersgate-street which attracts a hall full of young men. Professor Agar Beet, who is delivering a course of lectures on "The Book of Genesis in the light of Modern Science" every Thursday evening, also secures large and deeply interested audiences.

Since the opening of the Moody-McNeill mission, the Dublin Y. M. C. A. have increased their membership roll by about sixty, and every department of the Association is throbbing with new life. The Bible-classes have increased in numbers and power; both the spiritual and educational branches have been well sustained.

The nine o'clock meetings for men only, conducted by Messrs. Merton Smith and W. A. Boyd in the Y.M.C.A., Lower Abbey-street, Dublin, have been very successful; a number of men have professed conversion. The general secretary, W. A. Boyd, who has had long experience in Y.M.C.A. work in the South of Ireland, is always glad to see strangers in the rooms.

Reporting on a visit lately paid to the Sydney Y.M.C.A., a friend says:—"The greater part of the work is carried on by a strong band of out-and-out young fellows, whose aim and cry is, 'Young men for Christ.' The reports of the results of every branch are most encouraging and gratifying, the Sunday evening services being especially blest, and recording many trophies of his love."

From Sunday to Thursday in last week a special series of meetings for young men were held at the Paignton Y.M.C.A., by Mr. Roberts, of Plymouth. The attendance was encouraging, and many were apparently under conviction of sin. Mr. Allen, a recent convert in connection with the Newton Abbott Y.M.C.A., gave one evening a striking testimony to the marvellous change which the grace of God has produced in his life.

Mr. Geo. Holmes, Y.M.C.A. missionary secretary, recently despatched under the auspices of the National Council to Egypt and Palestine, sends home most interesting accounts of work at Gibraltar and Malta, where he has stayed en route. At Gibraltar he has formed two auxiliaries. At the San Lorenzo Home, Malta, he found meetings being conducted by Mr. W. Boyle, a former member of the Glasgow Y.M.C.A. Here he was enabled to form a soldiers' branch, and before leaving he formed another branch at the Floriana Home.

Mrs. Gulick, of Kyoto, Japan, makes a strong appeal for help in securing a building for the Y.M.C.A. of that city, in which there are at least 600 students, amongst whom great work might be done. "The cost will be about two thousand dollars, and the building can be secured to them for this purpose by having trustees to hold the property, and others for consultation from the Christian pastors of Kyoto, Osaka, Kobé, or Doshisha professors, or other eminent Christians outside that institution, as may be best. They need this building so much that we wish and hope to see it finished and occupied before we leave in March, and before some of the most earnest Christians leave for Tokyo. This is not for ourselves, it is the Lord's work. All the missionaries say God speed and bless this work, and they help where they can."

Y.W.C.A.

The Harrogate branch of the Y.W.C.A. is about to open a boarding-house for young women.

At the annual meeting of the Sydney Y.W.C.A. Lady Jersey presided, and nearly a thousand young women were present. The report showed good and fruitful work in many branches, and particularly among the girls employed in factories.

A short paper in Woman's Work for December tells something of the heathen lives lived in the midst of a nominal Christian community on the Rock of Gibraltar. Helpers in Gospel mission-work amongst them, and also helpers for the Y.W.C.A. there, are sorely wanted.

Farewell was said on Monday evening, first at a drawing-room meeting at 45, Onslow-gardens, and then at a meeting in the Central Institute, Regent-street, to Miss H. E. Nisbet, who leaves this day for Y.W.C.A. work in India. There are many openings for such English work which might be entered by those unable to take up missionary service.

Last week a magnificent block of buildings was opened in York-street, Portman-square, exclusively for the use of women. The rooms are let out in sets of one, two, and three rooms, and the tenant of a single room, paying £2 a month, has the privilege of using a splendid common dining-room, where she can obtain food at the lowest possible cost. The building can accommodate sixty women, and is erected mainly for those women who are engaged in daily work.

THINE FOR EVER.

THINE—thine only and for ever;
Purchased with thy precious blood:
Links of love that nought can sever
Bind my soul to Thee, my God.

Thine, and thine alone for ever;
Rescued from the tyrant's thrall;
Thou wilt keep who didst deliver—
Make me victor over all.

Thine to-day, and thine for ever;
Other lords have ceased to reign;
In this heart's whole realm oh! never Let one rival rise again.

Thine, and only thine for ever;
Thine to follow, serve, adore;
Oh! direct my life's endeavour
Towards thy glory evermore!

Thine on earth; in heaven for ever
Where Thou art I soon shall be;
Height nor depth thy saints shall sever,
Jesus! from thy love and Thee.

Belfast. W. MAXWELL.

THE present system of licensing is already local and permissive, and only one more element, that of local self-government, is needed to enable us to deal effectually with the liquor traffic.

SCIENTIFIC TEMPERANCE instruction, "Social Purity," "The Direct Veto," "The Medical Aspects of Temperance," and the desirability of consolidating work, and meeting workers through the formation of country unions, are subjects which prove the deep seated desire of British women to go forward on progressive lines in their various centres of work.

SERVICES IN THEATRES.—A drawing-room meeting in support of the work carried on by the Committee for Special Religious Services in Theatres, Halls, and Mission-rooms in London was held last week at Carisbrooke Villa, Upper Tulse-hill. Rev. T. C. Udall stated that this year's work had been started with a deficit of £120. Mr. George Nokes gave a stirring account of his work at the Pavilion Theatre, Whitechapel. He had been living among the poor for eighteen years, and his experience proved that there never was a time when people were more eager and earnest to listen to and accept the Gospel than now. He preached to about 4000 people every Sunday night. Alderman Spicer and others also advocated the work.

IRISH NOTES.

FOUR Protestant episcopal churches are to be erected in Belfast.

A new church for the parish of Cullen has been erected near Limerick Junction, at a cost of £2,500.

During the last three Saturday nights over 800 pledges were taken at the Gospel temperance meetings in the Metropolitan Hall, Dublin.

Lord Plunket has gone to Madrid for the purpose of opening the new Protestant church in that city towards the cost of which he has obtained in Ireland £3000.

Successful Gospel missions have just been held in Omagh, by Miss Smith and Miss Bax, and in St. Mark's Church, Dublin, by Rev. F. W. Gason.

The Presbyterian new church in Agnes-street, Belfast, which formerly belonged to the Congregationalists, has set a worthy example to other churches. It has been repewed and thoroughly renovated without a penny having been paid for labour. Members of the church did all the work gratuitously with their own hands.

The Select Vestry of St. Bartholomew's Church, Dublin, have resolved, in deference to the judgment of the Ecclesiastical Court of Appeal, to move the cross from the position objected to, but they intend to ask the sanction of the Archbishop for its erection in some other suitable part of the church.

Much regret is felt in Belfast and the North of Ireland at the death of Mrs. Brandon, wife of Mr. Jno. Brandon, the Canadian evangelist, who has been remarkably successful in winning souls of late. Deceased, who was in every sense a true helpmeet for her husband, passed away suddenly on Saturday evening week in Newtownards, where she and her husband were conducting a fortnight's evangelistic mission.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

REV. JOHN MCNEILL'S visit to Edinburgh will commence on Sabbath next.

A training class for teachers is held in connection with the Dundee Sabbath School Union.

There are upwards of 1300 sightless people, mostly old, under the care of the Mission to Outdoor Blind in the West of Scotland.

The small country village of Rhynie, Aberdeenshire, has furnished no fewer than twenty-one ministers or missionaries during the past sixty years.

In an address on Uganda at Dundee, Capt. Lugard referred in terms of high commendation to the work of the Scottish Missions at Lovedale, Blantyre, and Lake Nyassa.

A number of friends gathered at Darling's Hotel, Edinburgh, last Thursday, to celebrate the ministerial jubilee of Rev. A. L. Simpson, D.D., late of Forres and of Derby.

Many outside his own church communion will learn with regret that Rev. John Smith, of the U.P. Church, Broughton-place, Edinburgh, is too unwell to attend to his pastoral duties.

Rev. James Stark, of Aberdeen, has compiled and published, through Messrs. D. Wyllie and Son, an interesting account of the life of a deceased local worthy, the noted and eccentric Dr. Kidd.

New members are reported to be joining Rev. John Robertson's Church, in Gorbals, Glasgow, at the rate of over sixty a month. The temperance meetings on Saturday evenings continue to be most successful.

The Scottish Anti-Vivisection Society had a conference in Glasgow last week, at which the entire suppression of the practice of torturing animals in medical research was advocated. Legislation to this end was demanded.

In lecturing in Edinburgh on French Protestant Missions in Africa, M. Bonzon said that in Basutoland there are 20,000 natives under Christian influence. Dr. Stewart, of Lovedale, spoke very highly of the French Missions.

The Edinburgh City Mission is doing a good work among the careless classes. In presiding at its annual meeting, Rev. J. B. Hastings said that while infidelity might be slaying its thousands, indifferentism is slaying its tens of thousands.

The Glasgow auxiliary of the London Missionary Society collected £2500 for the work last year. At the annual meeting one of the speakers lauded the undenominational character of the mission, and expressed the hope that the funds to send 100 additional missionaries would soon be forthcoming.

The Carrubbers' Close Mission, Edinburgh, has been in existence for thirty-four years. At the annual business meeting last week Mr. W. Robertson, the secretary, reported that during the past year over 5500 meetings of various kinds had been held, an average of 106 a week. Gospel temperance work, under the charge of Mr. Barclay, is a prominent feature.

Evangelistic Notes.

Wakefield.—A capital mission has just been held here by Mr. C. Knight.

Mr. W. R. Lane has concluded a very encouraging mission at Beckenham.

Rev. Thomas Waugh has held an interesting and encouraging mission at Bingley, many testifying to blessing received.

Cosham, Wilts.—Mr. James Sprunt has been evangelising in and around Cosham, and in many of the villages much blessing has been granted.

Mr. William Forbes, having closed a mission in the Isle of Wight on November 20, has since given addresses at Reading, Lichfield, Carlisle, and Glasgow.

Dartford.—A ten days' mission lately held here appears to have been much blessed, and a cheering list has been prepared of those who have sought and found Christ.

Stamford-street, S.E.—The mission mentioned in our last has been followed by many tokens of fruit, testimony being forthcoming to many instances of conversion.

West Wycombe.—Much blessing has attended an evangelistic mission conducted at West Wycombe Congregational Church by Mr. Arthur Cook, of the Evangelisation Society.

Wolverhampton.—Special evangelistic missions have been conducted at Queen-street Congregational Church and Heath Town Congregational Church by Revs. C. A. Berry and C. Pockney.

Mr. W. Harry Dawe, of Exeter, has held a ten-days' mission at the Gospel Hall, Wood Green, N., with cheering results in the confession by many of Christ as their Saviour.

Linlithgow.—Mr. Oscar Owers has concluded a three weeks' mission in the Town Hall. God has used the services in arousing the children of God to be up and doing, and a good work has been done for eternity.

Mr. James J. Scroggie recently visited Eastleigh, the new town which is being formed at Bishopstoke, by the removal of the works of the South-Western Railway. A series of meetings was held in connection with the Railway Mission, which bore much fruit of the seed sown.

Hastings.—Mr. Townshend Martin has just held a special mission in Clive Vale Congregational Church, the results of which have given much joy to the workers, because of the quickening of many and of the souls saved. The evangelist is now holding similar services at the Swiss Gardens Theatre, Shoreham.

Edenbridge.—Mr. F. W. Walter, of the Evangelisation Society, London, has ended a three weeks' mission in the Presbyterian Church here. Local Christians have been greatly blessed, and numbers have expressed themselves anxious to be saved. The work among the young has been a special feature of the mission.

Chafford.—Mr. Charles Inglis has concluded a five days' mission in this town, amid the most encouraging and blessed results. The spirit of hearing has been very marked, so much so that on the last night of the mission the place was packed to the doors. As a result of the evangelist's addresses, many have professed conversion, and many too, it is believed, are still anxious about their souls. Believers were helped and refreshed through the Bible readings.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes has conducted a fortnight's mission at Lewes, preaching, in addition to the evangelistic services, at the various churches in the town, and addressing meetings for children, mothers, open-air meetings, and a gathering for men only, when he took for his subject, "Social Purity and the Seventh Commandment." Throughout the mission the conversion of sinners and the consecration of believers have testified to the power of the Spirit behind the preaching of the Word.

Edinburgh.—Mr. Canning, of the London Evangelisation Society, has concluded a successful three weeks' mission in connection with the Established, Free, and U.P. churches of South Morningside. Last year these churches united for special prayer and evangelistic work with such success that they resolved to do the same this year again. This spirit of unity and brotherly love has not been without its fruits. The preaching of the Word during the mission has been much blessed of God; many have got to know the Saviour for the first time, while the Christians have been greatly quickened. All along the three ministers—Mr. Milligan, Mr. Salmond, and Mr. Brown—have been in the forefront of the work.

Church Parochial Mission Society.—Special missions during December:—Shirley, Southampton, December 3—13, missioner, Rev. W. Hay Aitken; Mannacan, Cornwall, November 26—December 6, Rev. Canon Donaldson; Holy Trinity, Liverpool, December 3—13, Rev. W. Haslam; Christ Church, Worthing, December 16—24, Rev. W. Haslam; St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, Evidential Mission, December 11—18, Rev. A. J. Harrison; St. Mary Magdalene, Liverpool, November 27—December 12, Rev. J. Morris.

Personalia.

Bishop Tucker is, according to the latest tidings, pushing steadily forward to Uganda.

Rev. James Stephens, of Highgate, has been ordered abroad for three or four months, for the benefit of his health.

Rev. F. W. Macdonald is now on the Continent on business connected with the Wesleyan Missionary Society at Rouen, Vienna, and other places.

Mr. Sankey spoke and sang on a recent Sabbath in the first M.E. Church, Boston, U.S. The church was packed, and much interest excited.

Rev. G. C. Needham, evangelist, U.S.A., has of late been very unwell through nervous prostration. He has since been working in Virginia.

Mr. Eugene Stock and his companion, Rev. R. W. Stewart, received a very warm welcome in New Zealand, where the C.M.S. has many good friends.

Dr. J. G. Paton, who has been addressing large and deeply-interested meetings in New York, intends lingering awhile in America before coming over to this country.

Dr. Stephenson, last year's President of the Wesleyan Conference, has, it is said, been approached as to accepting a call to the Metropolitan Church in Washington, U.S.A.

Mr. Harry Coghill, of Newcastle-under-Lyme, has given a special donation of £500 to the Bible Society. This is in addition to his annual subscription of £500. Mr. Coghill is the Society's largest donor.

Dr. Henry Soltau writes from Ootacamund, South India, on November 9:—"My wife and children and I arrived here safely last Saturday, and hope to work for the Lord here in medical and evangelistic work among all classes as openings present themselves."

Mr. Charles N. Crittenten, distinguished as the originator of the Florence Missions, New York, presented Miss Willard at the Denver Convention with 5,000 dols. for social purity work. Mr. Crittenten is known as the millionaire evangelist, and spends 25,000 dols. a year for the rescue of tempted girls.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes is suffering greatly from overwork, and left London on Monday for a few days' rest. His friends in the West London Mission and elsewhere are greatly concerned on account of the condition of his health, as he persists in working at a rate which would have long ago killed most men.

TENT MISSION IN ALGERIA.

We have begun the tent mission in Algeria of which I wrote to you some months back, and, although the difficulties are immense, we find it a capital means to announce the Gospel in this dark land. Last June we visited Milianah, where we had much encouragement and blessing. The Lord was with us, and blessed us and his word in very deed.

We are now at a town on the coast—Philippeville—with 22,000 inhabitants, where the ignorance of the Gospel is intense. The few days that our tent was up it was crammed; all we had to do was to open the doorway, and we could have a meeting immediately. They cannot make us out; we charge nothing for entry, nor even for the seats. We held a number of meetings in the tent, but found quietness impossible with so large a company, so have removed to the Protestant temple, kindly lent us by the pastor. This, too, is filled, although the entry is by card only. In these cosmopolitan towns one needs all languages. Between us (Mr. Borel, his wife, and myself) we speak five. We began here by a meeting on board an English vessel; and others are on land in French, Italian, German, and Arabic. By these means we reach nearly all.

Since reading of the use of Mr. Moody's book, "The Way to God," I have much wished some copies to put in the hands of those whom we leave behind us. They have so few encouragements, and a book of that kind would be of great help. It is published in French at about the same price as in English. We should be so glad if some friend would give us the means of putting these into the hands of the converts or others of whom we have hopes. We much need your prayers. The whole town is stirred, and many are seeking the truth.

William G. Pope,
Missionary, North Africa Mission.

SCHOOLS AT MADRID.—In order to the maintenance of the excellent schools which we have referred to more than once as superintended by Mr. Fenn at Madrid, it becomes necessary to build new premises, the cost of which will be about £3000, besides the price of the ground. A friend deeply interested in this work has offered £500, if others contribute £2500 by the first week in January next. It is fervently hoped that this amount may be given or promised by the time nam

Temperance Notes.

At the Hague, a minister recently stated in his sermon that £500 were daily spent on strong drink in that city.

At a meeting of the C.E.T.S. at Oxford, on Monday evening, the Bishop of Chester propounded his temperance scheme.

An alleged new cure for drunkenness is said to have been invented by a physician in Vienna, consisting of an extract from ivy leaves.

Let the people themselves, for whose benefit alone for the past 300 years licences have been granted, be the deciding authority on the subject.

Canon Leigh is arranging for a great temperance mission to take place in March next, at the Portman Rooms, Baker-street, the speakers being ladies.

A five days' Gospel Temperance meeting has just been conducted by Mr. Robert Watson, of the United Kingdom Alliance, Carlisle, at Whitehaven Sailors' Rest. The meetings were well attended, and many pledges were the result of the mission.

Amongst the Nonconformists last Sunday was very widely observed as Temperance Sunday, and in hundreds of pulpits all over the land sermons were specially directed towards exposing the evils of strong drink and urging the value and beauty of abstinence.

The National Christian Total Abstinence Society of Holland recently celebrated its twelfth anniversary. The society has thirty-six branches, with 2000 members, a small beginning among a population of five millions, but nevertheless a step in the right direction.

One interesting feature of Lady Henry Somerset's conferences is the question box. Questions are sent up to the platform during the meeting, and these are answered by Lady Henry with the tact and admirable wisdom and concise knowledge of every phase of the temperance question, which on all occasions elicits the warmest appreciation.

Dr. Pringle, of Greenwich, gave the other day an earnest address upon, "In what way should the Church further temperance among all classes of the people?" Quoting from Scripture, the doctor showed that drunkenness was one of the most severely punished of sins—absolute total abstinence being made the rule for the priesthood.

Mrs. Tel Sono, a cultured high-class Japanese lady, is coming to England shortly to speak on behalf of the interests of the women of Japan. The Tel Sono Association has been formed in America with the object of assisting her to establish in Japan a non-sectarian Christian training school for women and girls in her own position in life. Lady Henry Somerset has expressed her willingness to arrange any openings for Mrs. Tel Sono in England. Many will doubtless wish to hear this gifted Japanese woman reformer.

A remarkable organisation of women, extending throughout Europe, and everywhere favoured with Government search and support, is now in active operation. It is composed of a national committee in each country, which is representative of the growing interest expressed on all sides in the efforts of those who are organising the woman's section of the World's Fair. Mrs. Palmer, the able president of the board of lady managers, recently gave an address at the opening session of the board, in which she relates many interesting facts concerning the eager interest universally shown—notably in China and Japan—in the state and industrial conditions of women.

Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard have planned to spend the winter in a temperance campaign in England, and it augurs well for the progress of the work, that as leaders in their respective countries they thus join interests for a time, and throw the combined weight of their individual influence into the work in England. Many women in England have for years longed to see and hear Miss Frances Willard, and conferences are now being organised in various parts of England, with this object. The subjects chosen for discussion at these conferences reveal a steady growth of thought in the local and provincial centres of the Women's Temperance Associations in England.

I make (says Dr. H. W. Williams), self-denial and self-sacrifice for the good of others my special plea, when asking the moderate drinkers of both sexes to turn total abstainer for the sake of our weak brothers and sisters who are rushing headlong to destruction of both soul and body by the abuse of the alcoholic cup of which we are able to partake in moderation. I remind all such that the grand old promise of heavenly commendation stands as good in the nineteenth century as it did in the day it fell from the Divine Lips of One who gave up his life that the repentant and reformed drunkard might inherit the Kingdom of Heaven namely, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye did it unto Me."

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 4.—JUDGES XVIII.

In the purpose of God, the believing soul is already the Land of Promise, as one of the stones pitched the Jordan banks, stood for the tribe of Dan. nd yet, we need a king as well as an inheritance, d it is only when we have found and owned the ne David that we become properly settled in our heritance. The book of Judges, which is destitute the king, is a stormy parenthesis between Joshua d the books of Kings. How often, like the tribe Dan, we fail to make use of that which is rightlly ours (Josh. xix. 40), and hanker after another's, inging sorrow both to ourselves and to them.

We must not suppose, because there is no obstacle our possession of that which we covet, but that our nrse is clear, that therefore God hath given it into r hand. Many a time have souls been allured to eir doom because they have pursued an apparently en course. But we need also the assurance of God's unsel, seeking it, not at the hand of a man-made iest, but in communion with God Himself.

It is a test of the true priest that he does not seek omotion, or a larger income, but is content to inister, though to the house of one man, if that be e will of God. It is of the essence of priestcraft to tch at worldly advantages and emoluments. God's iest alone never forsakes, never goes away, and ever es to make intercession.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 5.—JUDGES XIX.

This chapter holds up the mirror to human ture, and reveals what is in the heart of man apart om the grace of God. The Bible not only tells us the remedy, but reveals to us the virulence of the sease. We might wonder why so much is said out the blood of the Son of God, if we had not been ld of the depravity and blackness of man's heart. e must not suppose that these were sinners apart om others. We have all one human heart, and the me tendencies are in us each. Man is horrified nen these reveal themselves in their naked hideousss in the lives of others, but is inclined to palliate em in himself. But God justly brands with the me guilt the thought and intention of the heart, nich is only restrained from breaking into open sin the conventionalities of good society.

It is remarkable, and the whole chapter turns on is, how careful they were to maintain the laws of spitality when once it was granted in those old nes. First it is counted a shame that there was no an to shelter the man from Ephraim, and then the l man who came from his work at even was prered to make any sacrifice in order to save him om he was sheltering under his roof. So careful the honour of the home, so careless of the honour woman. One of the divinest traits in the ligion of Jesus Christ, is the sanctity with which he s invested womanhood.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 6.—JUDGES XX.

Amid the horror of a battlefield, there is one deeming feature in the chivalrous devotion of men r their country. And amid the horrors of this apter, there is at least evidence that the conscience Israel was growing in their detestation of the me we have considered, though we must remember at it is always easier to denounce sins in other peo-e, and vow vengeance against them, than to terminate them in ourselves. Would that each ader would appropriate the words of Israel, "We ll not any of us go to his tent, till we have t away this evil from Israel." It is very nderful that after asking God in all sincerity guidance on two occasions, the children of rael fled in battle before Benjamin. But we must tice that it was only on the evening of the second y, in answer to fasting and prayer, that God prosed to deliver Benjamin into their hand. And we ust remember that God was compelled to speak language that they could understand, and to ach them, through scenes of blood and tears, that gher morality to which they were yet to come.

One turns from this chapter with a sad consciousss that it is a leaf out of the chronicles of human story which has had and is having many counterrts. The story of the extermination of native ces, the mowing down of tens of thousands by the roduction of spirits and of opium, may read as ckly in the annals of eternity. Well may creain travail, and the saints cry, Lord! how long!

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 7.—JUDGES XXI.

It is grateful to find that after the stormy outburst the previous chapter there came a revulsion of nder feeling, like rain after claps of thunder. uman tears, as they well forth for others, evidence derlying fountains in the strongest natures, and e existence of those tender feelings of compassion thout which the race could not exist. Already ere were symptoms that a sweeter and purer spirit s about to rise up in Israel. This yearning after a lost tribe indicated that a flame of love was beginning to burn amid the steam and smoke of the newly kindled fire, and if only there be love there is a point of contact at which God can reveal himself to men, for he who loves his brother will presently come on to know God who is Love, and the tears shed over Benjamin are near akin to those shed on the Mount of Olives, where He beheld the city and wept over it.

We cannot admire the method adopted by Israel to preserve Benjamin from extinction. As in so many other cases, a vow made rashly in a moment of excitement would have been better honoured in the breach than in the observance. One star at least shone in the black night, that truth began to be revered, and that they would not go back from their solemn pledge and vow. The morals of the people were evidently lamentably low, but the whole of their course of action is probably to be explained by the fact that they looked upon this war as having been an act of righteousness.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 8.—RUTH I.

Throughout the Bible there are traces that God's heart went out after the other sheep that were not of the Israelitish fold, and in this exquisite story we catch a glimpse of the weaving through faith into the spiritual family of Abraham those who naturally had neither part nor lot with him. Too often when famine lies hard upon us we attempt to help ourselves by desperate expedients which exclude God. We leave the land of promise for Moab, but there we meet the fate we thought to avert. Children of the world are at liberty to do things which the child of God cannot indulge in without peril and loss, and yet the results of our mistakes and sins are often so transformed by the touch of God's hand as to yield the richest fruits of life. Mahlon and Chilion, pining in consumption, are buried in Moab, but from Moab Ruth, the Rhoda or Rose of her native valley, arises to be better than seven sons.

There are crises in all lives like that on the high pass that led from Moab to Canaan, where one soul cannot resist the fascinations of people and gods, lying far down the valley, whilst the other, thrilled with heroic purpose and faith, chooses the unseen and unknown. Not unfrequently love to man or woman may turn the scale of the soul's election, as Ruth chose, because she loved Naomi. Let us use our influence over others for God, for we thus provide for them the sunniest future in this life, as well as the next. And thus the Marah springs of our bereavements are staunched and transformed.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 9.—RUTH II.

Our first experiences when we have chosen Christ are not always sunny ones. We have to glean in the fields of strangers. Testing times like these develop our nobler qualities, and make it clear that we have chosen God for Himself, and not for the wages that He pays. Those who glean in the fields of the Land of Promise will have enough and to spare, will meet their great Kinsman, and will become prepared to enter upon the higher experience of that union with Him, of which marriage is a shadow. Glean on, O, my soul! and gather after the reapers among the sheaves! Beat out what thou gleanest with patient care! Stint not to bring forth and give to those who must needs abide at home! The time will come when those fair fields of Bible truth shall become thine own, by union with their owner.

Boaz, the nearest kinsman, is a glimpse of Him who was born in Bethlehem, and who accosts each who does the will of His Father, as brother, sister, or mother. He takes knowledge of strangers; He is quick to see every trait of natural grace, and all kindly actions done to the least that belong to Him; He provides bread and wine; He causes handfuls to be dropped on purpose; He screens from annoyance and harm; He comforts and speaks to the heart; He blesses, and the humble, stooping spirit, is blessed for ever.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 10.—RUTH III.

We need rest, and there is no such home wherein to find it, as the heart of our Maker, who is also our Husband! Ah! it is well for us then! To the pure all things are pure, and judged by the Israelite code Ruth was already legally wed to Boaz. She had a perfect right, therefore, to claim that he should act a kinsman's part. Similarly, we have a right to Christ and all that is his; his love, his possessions, his inheritance. But we have to claim our share in our Lord, and the all things which are his. Ah! soul, lie at his feet in suppliant faith! Claim to be covered with the skirts of that robe which He wore on the cross, and ask Him to do a kinsman's part. He will see that thou dost not go empty away.

When once we have put our matters into the hands of Christ, we have no further need for worry or fear but may sit still in assured trust. We may rest, because He who is the Man of men, the Man of whom other men at their best are fragments, will not rest till He have finished that with which we have entrusted Him, and have fulfilled the word on which He has caused us to hope. INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 11.
THE APOSTOLIC COUNCIL.

Acts xv. 12—29.

GOLDEN TEXT: Verse 11.

THE need for this council arose from the work of certain Judaising Christians, who visited the Gentile churches, and sought to enforce obedience to the rite of circumcision, and to the law of Moses (1-5). This was a much more serious matter than at first sight appears. It involved the whole question as to whether Christ or Moses was to save men. To add Law to Grace is a practical rejection of Grace. It must be Christ or Law, it cannot be Christ and Law (Rom. xi. 6). The liberty of the believers was in peril (Gal. ii. 4). This was an attempt to take those who were already children (Gal. iii. 26) back to the position of slaves. And besides this, it would have hindered the universal spread of the Gospel by the imposition of impossible conditions. The danger was very great. The bitterest persecution from others did not threaten such injury to the Church as this.

The council was held at Jerusalem, from whence the Judaising teachers had gone forth, though without the authority of the Church there (1 with 24). It is significant that neither Peter alone, for whom such authority has since been claimed, nor the other apostles with him, presumed to decide this question. Besides apostles, there were present at the council, and taking an active part in it, the elders and the Church members as well. The unanimous decision of the whole assembly (24) was regarded, as also the decision of the Holy Ghost (28). This first council gives no sanction to the claim made by some ecclesiastical authorities to decide matters pertaining to the ordinances or worship of the Church.

Unanimity was not arrived at without previous discussion (7). The speech of Peter (7-11) was an appeal to facts connected with his first preaching to Cornelius. It was impossible to resist the conclusion, that since God had received the Gentiles without any other condition than that of faith in Christ, the Church had no right to add the impossible yoke of the law. Debate appears to have been silenced by this speech (12), and the narratives of Barnabas and Paul only strengthened the conclusion to which Peter's speech had led. God's work through his servants was evidently against the position assumed by the Judaising teachers. Would He work such miracles and wonders through his servants if they were withholding a necessary part of the Divine Message? Their addresses were followed by still further silence (13).

James, who speaks next (13—21), is "the Lord's brother." During the life of Jesus he had not believed in Him, but after the ascension he was found among the waiting company in Jerusalem (i. 14). He was not one of the twelve, though the term apostle is sometimes applied to him as it is to Barnabas (xiv. 4, 14). He is the writer of the Epistle of James; and was surnamed the Just, because of his observance of the law, and his uprightness of character. He was one of the pillars of the Jerusalem Church (Gal. ii. 9). It is said that Ananias, the high priest, had him cast down from one of the galleries of the temple. He was not killed by the fall, but began, like Stephen, to pray for his murderers, and continued to do so until a blow on the head killed him.

In his speech James gives emphasis to the work of God among the Gentiles through his servant (14), then makes his appeal to the word of God by his prophets (15). If God's work, as we understand it, does not agree with God's word then we may not regard it as God's work indeed. The Word of God can alone lead us to an infallible decision. The quotation is from Amos ix. 11, 12, which describes the decayed condition of David's house, and the purpose of God to rebuild and extend it by bringing in the Gentiles to be his people. This is what the Gospel was now accomplishing. Opposition was, therefore, not only against Gentile Christians, but against the work of God, and against his unalterable word.

The four things forbidden (20) were all of them practices abominable to the Jews, and if common among Gentile believers would effectually hinder the work of God among the Jews. With these directions compare 1 Cor. viii., x., 14—33; 2 Cor. vi. 14—18; Lev. xvii. 13, 14; vii. 26.

Of those who accompanied Paul to Antioch (22), Judas, surnamed Barrabas, is not otherwise known to us. Silas—or Silvanus—became Paul's companion in his next missionary journey (40). The greeting is from the whole Church (23), for the apostles and elders are free from that spirit of arrogance and pride which has too often marked their successors. Paul and Barnabas are alluded to in terms calculated to increase the confidence of the Church in them (26). And the decision is not given in the form of a command from superiors, but as a recommendation from equals (28).

The Book World.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

The Children's Treasury. (1s. Thos. Nelson and Son.) The pages of this annual volume are full of interest for the young folks, and will be welcomed in many homes.

Our Own Magazine. Vol. XIII.—The Children's Special Service Mission deserves high credit, not merely for the pretty get-up, but still more for the sterling merit of the true stories which illustrate Scripture truth, and teach pleasantly yet effectively the message of the Gospel. We believe this magazine has been much blessed in the past, and doubtless it will be so in time to come. (2s. 13*a*, Warwick-lane.)

The smaller volumes of periodicals issued by the Religious Tract Society are as useful and bright as ever. The twenty-fifth half-yearly volume of Friendly Greetings (2s. 6d.) has many large engravings and coloured plates. The Cottager and Artisan (1s. 6d.) is profusely illustrated and replete with elevating reading matter. Light in the Home (1s. 6d.) is the old "Tract Magazine," only better still. The Child's Companion (2s.) more than maintains its high standard, for it has a dozen coloured plates, besides many engravings. Our Little Dots (2s.) is for younger children, and is gay as well as entertaining.

NEW YEAR BOOKLETS.

Challenged, Conquered, Crowned! A New-Year Possession. By Laura A. Barter. (One halfpenny. Partridge.) The "text" of this brief exhortation is Josh. xv. 16. Here are two sentences: "If you have been living on your experience, the sooner your experience vanishes the better; Christ, not our experience, is what we need. Or, if you have been taken up with 'a blessing,' or 'the blessing' apart from Christ, of course it has not lasted; it is not It, but Him, you need—not the blessing, but the Blesser."

"Can God?" or, the Glorious Possibilities of Faith. By Rev. Charles A. Fox. (2d. Partridge.) This address is based on Psa. lxxviii. 19. The cowardice and unreasonableness of unbelief are admirably enforced, and the ability of God to make all grace to abound toward his people is shown with a cogency which will prove helpful to many. Quoting the words, "How shall He not with Him also freely give us all things," Mr. Fox says, "That is faith's logic, it is Divine reasoning. Engrave these words on your souls; answer everything with 'How shall He not?'" Two other addresses are added: "The Church of Popular Opinion; or, faith in relation to purity of heart," based on Rev. iii. 14; and "Little Faith or Great Faith? or, faith in relation to power in service."

Fireproof: A Word to Builders for the New Year. By Rev. E. W. Moore, M.A. (1d. Partridge.) Founded on 1 Cor. iii. 15, this booklet conducts a searching inquiry as to the life and work of those who acknowledge the Foundation which has been laid. This useful booklet closes with counsel thus expressed: "Do you wish to be saved 'as through the fire'? If not, see to it that your house is 'fireproof' now. Let the fire of God play through and through it while you build, that the materials you use may be such as will endure.

> Refining fire, go through my heart,
> Illuminate my soul;
> Scatter thy life through every part,
> And sanctify the whole.

In Know ye that Ramoth is Ours? Sophia N. Nugent throws down a challenge in the words of 1 Kings xxii. 3. Every page is stimulating to spiritual progress. A brief extract will give some idea of the booklet. "'Is ours!' Say the word over every unenjoyed blessing which He has purchased for you! Every 'high place' of safety, power or peace, is His gift, and was conquered for you by Him, and He means us to have it." (1d. Partridge.)

Sunday-school and Village Libraries. Mr. Thomas Greenwood's new book will give little, if any, help to such as have had practical experience. The books recommended for Sunday-school libraries are in many cases far from suitable. (1s. 6d. J. Clarke and Co.)

Cassell's Family Magazine enters upon a new series with the December number (7d.). The parts have been enlarged to eighty pages. The letterpress and engravings are of a high order, and the magazine, already a favourite, is likely to increase in popularity.

The Prisons of the World, by Mr. Chas. Cook. (Morgan and Scott.) A new and special edition of this popular and useful work has now been issued by the author, in attractive illuminated cloth boards, suitable for a gift-book, at 1s. 6d. It contains the results of Mr. Cook's travels in many parts of the world.

The "Christmas Number" (3d.) of the Methodist Recorder is an exceptionally interesting issue. A lithographed plate gives portraits of living ex-presidents. The letterpress, illustrated by Harold Furniss, consists of true Methodist stories and reminiscences, guaranteed by the names of well-known writers. The collection is of permanent value.

The Great Indian Religions is the title of an instructive volume, by the late G. T. Bettany, M.A., B.Sc. (2s. 6d. Ward, Lock, and Co.) It gives an outline of Brahmanism, Hinduism, Buddhism, and Zoroastrianism, with accounts of the Vedas and other books held sacred in the East. In its own sphere this very readable book, based on works of acknowledged authority, will be useful to many.

Four Years in Upper Burma. By W. R. Winston. (3s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) The people and their circumstances, as well as the country and its features, are admirably depicted; and questions affecting missionary life and Gospel work are discussed by one who knows both. The chapter on exertions in behalf of lepers at Mandalay has a pathetic interest. There are many excellent illustrations.

Madagascar: Its Missionaries and Martyrs, is a capital volume by Rev. Dr. William John Townsend. The story is more thrilling than many a romance, and should be put into the hands of thoughtful young people. Another small volume of absorbing interest is Four Heroes of India, by F. M. Holmes. The heroes are Clive, Warren Hastings, Havelock, and Lawrence, and there is a concluding note on the rule of Lord Mayo. (1s. 6d. each. Partridge.)

The Near and the Heavenly Horizons. By the Countess de Gasparin. (3s. 6d. Hodder and Stoughton.) The title-page states that this handsome little volume is in its thirty-third thousand. It contains two of the best works of an author whose writings, whether in French or English dress, are spiritual and cultured in a high degree. The chapters on the return of the Lord and the glorification of his people are, in point of style, peculiarly agreeable to the sublimity of the theme.

What's o'clock? A Missionary Book for Boys and Girls. By Georgina A. Gollock. The Bishop of Ossory writes an introduction to this excellent volume, from the pen of one who knows how to interest young people. The pages describe mission work in many lands; and scores of pictures, of a superior order from an artistic point of view, help to make the story real. The book deserves a large circulation, and we heartily commend it to heads of Christian families. (1s. 6d. Church Missionary Society.)

The Bible in Spain, George Borrow's well-known narrative of travel and adventure, including imprisonments and other privations, has been issued in a very attractive form by T. Nelson and Sons (4s.). In the words of the author, the book records "what occurred to me during a residence in Spain, to which I was sent by the Bible Society, as its agent, for the purpose of printing and circulating the Scriptures." There are good illustrations, and the work will be useful in public libraries as well as on private shelves.

Evangelistic Work in Principle and Practice. By A. T. Pierson, D.D. (2s. 6d. Passmore and Alabaster.) A new and revised edition of some chapters on this important theme, published in America some years ago. The author first lays down what he regards as the foundation principles of Gospel work, and in the second half of the book gives illustrative examples, mostly from those evangelistic workers who now rest from their labours. Dr. Pierson has clear and sound ideas as to evangelism, and is severely critical of those with whose methods he does not agree.

"Life Buoys" and Rescued Sailors. By William Luff. Rev. F. B. Meyer writes an introduction to this dainty little book, in which are narrated several striking incidents in connection with the work of Miss Child's Sailors' Welcome Home, Ratcliff Highway. Mr. Luff's sympathy with this excellent mission is shown by poetic effusion as well as touching story. How delighted would many a sailor be to receive from loving hands copies of this little book for perusal on voyage? The friends of sailors, and all who take life seriously, will find inspiration in its pages. (1s. Morgan and Scott.)

The Sermon Bible: 2 Corinthians—Philippians. (7s. 6d. Hodder and Stoughton.) Each volume of this very useful work contains some hundreds of sermon outlines, and several thousand references to published discourses. This is the tenth volume of the series, and though the contents are by no means of uniform worth, they include many thought-germs, and suggestions of edifying exposition, which conscientious preachers will know how to utilise in pulpit preparation. The Epistles which are here dealt with are mines from which are brought some of the most precious jewels of Divine truth; and the outlines have been selected from works which are deservedly held in high esteem by theologians and preachers.

Mildmay Series of Christmas and other Cards.—We have from E. St. B. Holland (City publishers, W. H. Lewer, Aldersgate-street) a very choice ar pleasing selection of cards for the coming seaso The finest sets are illustrated by views in Kensingt Gardens, Italy, Dublin, and other picturesque part These are large and really lovely cards, with appr priate texts. They are in shilling packets, contai ing twelve or six cards, according to size and valu "Joy and Gladness" (1s.) have also pretty landsca scenes, while "The Grace of Life" (1s.) ar "Treasure New and Old" are smaller cards, wi beautiful floral designs. There are besides so "Motto" cards exceedingly pretty. Two Calendar tastefully illuminated, are also issued, one for han ing on the wall, the other for the drawing-room boudoir table.

The Life and Work of Charles Haddon Spu geon. By G. H. Pike. Cassell and Co. (Vol. I.) Th is a somewhat elaborately designed literary mem rial of the great Tabernacle preacher. It is prepare for subscription only, and it is not obtainable throug the ordinary publishing channels. The work wi consist of six volumes at 7s. 6d. each, or it can had in fifteen two-shilling parts. The book wi contain fifteen finely-executed full-page photogravu plates; three are given in the first volume, one them representing the then youthful preacher in s exhorting attitude. We do not find much that is ne in Mr. Pike's biographical matter, but he has throw his facts together in a readable fashion, and extrac from some of Mr. Spurgeon's early sermons are inte spersed. No doubt many of the numberless friend of the late preacher will welcome this handsome pr sentation of his remarkable career.

The Covenanters of Moray and Ross, by D M. Macdonald, of Melbourne (Melven Brother Inverness), is a story, most graphically told, of th struggles, persecutions, and stern fidelity of th Covenanters in the far north of Scotland in th middle of the seventeenth century. Dr. Macdonal gave a series of lectures on the subject some yea ago, when he was Free Church pastor at Nairn, an this is a second edition of the lectures. The sketche are vividly drawn, and the author has a culture literary style that makes his pages pleasant readin These memorials of a heroic era in northern Scottis history well deserve the attentive perusal of tho who are now inheriting and enjoying the religio freedom for which their forefathers bravely fough and bled. The publishers have given a usef addendum in an authentic map of the district referre to, as it was about 1650.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh, 70, King's Cross-road, W.C., has issue some useful "Anti-Infidel" tracts. One series bears th specific title, and another is called the "Converted Infidel series.

Bye-paths of Sunday-school Work. By E. G. Harme (1s.) C. H. Kelly. Useful hints on outlying and auxilia matters, such as flower shows, handicraft societies, librari and the like, which many have found helpful in connectio with S.S. work.

Our Baby. By Mrs Langton Hewer. Bristol: Wright an Co.; London: Simpkin, Marshall and Co. (1s.) The hom verdict on this is that it is really a sensible, practical, an valuable guide to mothers and nurses as to infants and the treatment in health and sickness.

Mr. Champness has issued from the "Joyful News" Offic Rochdale, a "speaking" placard, showing How John Bu Spends His Money. Pictures exhibit the enormous dispr portion between Britain's expenditure on intoxicatin liquors and that on the necessaries of life and in educatio and mission enterprise. (4d. each; 3s. per dozen.)

Among the calendars for next year are several usef ones issued by the Religious Tract Society. At a penny eac there are: Illustrated Sheet Almanac and The People Almanac. The Pocket-book Almanac costs 2d. The R.T.S Pocket Book (1s. 6d.), bound in leather, with elastic band, a publication which many will find of real service.

The City Quarterly, the magazine of the Y.M.C.A., 5 60, Cornhill, E.C., is a very attractive publication. In th current issue interesting reading matter is set off with e cellent portraits of Mr. F. A. Bevan, President of the Ass ciation; Messrs. R. McCann and G. Holmes, who are takin up work in India and Palestine; the late Canon Jackson, Leeds; Mr. E. J. Kennedy, and others.

Mr. Owen Meredith, East Dulwich Grove, S.E., has sent u specimens of his cards for Christmas and the New Year. Som are made up in uniform series, and others assorted, both e to size and kind. The selections for young folks are spe cially attractive, a large number of cards being included i the shilling packets. The catalogue specifies many serie with Scripture texts, and greetings in verse by France Ridley Havergal, Charlotte Murray, M. S. Haycraft, an other well-known writers.

A Dilemma.

Dear Friends,

The pressure upon me increases daily. From streets and alleys, tramps' kitchens and casual wards, famishing, tempted, despairing lads come to our door. They stretch out their hands to me for shelter and help.

I have lately had boys sleeping on the floor here—for the first time in my 22 years' experience. What am I to do? I must either secure extra sleeping space or close our doors against all applicants. Hitherto we have always been able to say we were Open Day and Night to every really homeless lad. I pray God I may never have to say No Room to one desolate street lad.

I can obtain sleeping room for 100 more boys, and with our present organisation we can deal with them easily—if only the rent, cost of beds', &c., maintenance till the spring, and expenses of emigration to Canada are forthcoming.

I have not a penny to spare for this purpose. It is with much difficulty that I am able to provide for the three large families already in my care. But it seems so very sad that a precious young life should be ruined for want of a little timely aid, that I do most earnestly and yearningly plead for help to save the lads.

To keep an Open Door, Day and Night, and carry on this work till the end of the year, I need £2,000. Who will pay the extra rent? Who will provide the beds? Who will find food for a day, for one meal to all—even for a single meal to one waif?

£100 will send ten boys away from London slums to a bright future in Canada. £50 will keep eight street lads in our Home right through the bitter winter. £10 will send one boy to Canada. £6 10s. will maintain a street-arab here till the spring. £1 will give one hundred a hot dinner. 10s. will give sixty a good breakfast.

Will you help me in my busy, trying, but happy labours here? I never felt more than I do now that it is God's work, and His presence and power are with us.

Yours faithfully,

The Boys' Home,

THE RESCUE SOCIETY,

79, FINSBURY PAVEMENT,

LONDON, E.C.

LONG, dark, and dreary evenings for the poor and destitute, with their cold chilling blasts, are once more upon us, calling forth the increased efforts of all Christian philanthropists in seeking to combat with the misery and suffering wrought by sin, poverty, ignorance, and other causes.

Such efforts are nowhere more needed than in seeking the rescue of poor outcast women, or the salvation of girls in danger of becoming so.

During the year the work of this Society has been extended.

1. By the opening of another Home for 21 girls.
2. By the appointment of a fresh female missionary, whose chief work shall be out-of-doors,

Nine Homes are now maintained, including a Maternity Home and a Lock Hospital.

250 girls and young women can be accommodated at the same time.

15,753 have already been helped to a life of virtue and happiness since the Society was established in 1853.

Of this Number 548 were Aided Last Year.

This year we have largely exceeded the usual number, 587 having already been benefited in our Homes up to November 28th.

During recent months the receipts have been far below the expenditure, and we are in urgent need of immediate help.

'THE CURE OF CONSUMPTION,'

BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA, & CATARRH.

By E. W. Alabone, M.D. Pa., U.S.A., F.R.M.S., late M.R.C.S. Eng., late Consulting Surgeon to the Lower Clapton Orphan Asylum, &c., Lynton House, Highbury Quadrant, London, N.

By the success of this treatment all barriers have been broken down, and it is now an acknowledged fact that CONSUMPTION, BRONCHITIS, and ASTHMA are curable through this discovery, many thousands of cases abandoned as hopeless having been successfully treated.

Dr. Cronin, M.D., L.S.A., writes:—"You have done wonders for my patient. I hardly thought he could have improved so much under the treatment."

Dr. Fairbairn, M.D., L.R.C.S., writes:—"The success of your treatment of Consumption is simply marvellous. I have had no less than Sixty Cases of Cure."

"Your remedy for Consumption has proved a success in my own case, after having been given up by several eminent physicians."—T. Young, L.R.C.P., L.R.C.S., &c., &c.

Dr. Watson Davies, M.D., L.R.C.S., writes:—"I have great pleasure in stating that a near relative of mine, who was in an advanced stage of Consumption when I commenced your treatment (several members of her family having died of that disease), is now wonderfully improved in all respects, and has entirely lost her cough."

Dr. C. (M.R.C.S. Eng., L.R.C.P. Lond.) writes—"I was invalided in 1882 as unfit for further service, owing to consumption. I placed myself under Dr. Alabone's treatment, and have been able to pursue the practice of my profession, having been actively at work for six months and in good health."

Dr. Campbell, L.R.C.P. Edin., L.R.C.S. Edin., writes:—"My wife has very greatly improved since she commenced your treatment."

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

A new church has been opened at Linthorpe, Middlesbrough.

Rev. Thomas Campbell, vicar of Lalster Dyke, Bradford, has been appointed as English chaplain at Rouen.

The secretaries of the Ripon Diocesan Victoria Clergy Aid Fund have received £500 from an anonymous donor.

The Bishops of London and Rochester are taking active part in a movement for the training of working men as evangelists.

The Church Pastoral Aid Society held last week a very remarkable and enthusiastic series of simultaneous meetings in many parts of the metropolis.

Dr. Newman Hall began on Sunday a three months' ministry at the Congregational Church, Seven Sisters'-road, preaching both at the morning and evening services.

Canon Knight, who has gone to a new sphere at Thrawley, held his farewell services last week at Derby, when many testimonies were borne as to the fruitfulness of his work in the town.

At St. Andrew's, Haverstock Hill, Mr. P. V. Smith is to give during Advent, a series of special addresses to men on "Doubt and Relief," "Sunday Work and Worship," "Content and Discontent," and so on.

In the rapidly-growing district of St. Silas, Blackburn, church accommodation is grievously wanting, hence the Vicar (Rev. B. Thompson) and his helpers have resolved on steps towards the erection of a new church.

The Dean of Norwich addressed last week the C.M.S. Younger Clergy Union on the "Relation of Home and Foreign Missions," showing that while these differ in methods, aims, and expressions they are one in spirit and ultimate purpose.

The Autumn Conference of the C.M.S. Union (for Carlisle) held last week, was addressed by the Bishop of Carlisle, Revs. J. B. Brandram (Japan) and H. Dobinson of the Niger.

By the removal of Canon Ainger to Cambridge, where he has accepted the incumbency of St. Edmund's Church, the Readership of the Temple has become vacant. This was held by Canon Ainger for a quarter of a century, and it will be difficult to find another preacher so thoughtful, eloquent, and scholarly, for the post.

The annual sermon in connection with the Stockport Sunday-school—the largest in the world, having 5,000 children in attendance—was preached in the large room of the school on Sunday week by the Ven. Archdeacon Farrar, D.D. The Archdeacon had delivered an address in the morning in the same building, his subject being "Conscience."

Properly-trained lay evangelists are to be provided for the Church by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. The training college is in Commercial-road, Whitechapel, and the Bishop of London, with whom was the Bishop of Rochester, Canon Elwyn, and Principal Wace, presided at a well-attended meeting of subscribers in the Board Room, Northumberland-avenue.

Private intelligence from Mr. Ashe reports "things" as "fairly smooth" in Uganda up to the end of July. Messrs. Ashe, Baskerville, and Wright were then in Mengo; Mr. Pilkington had gone to the islands, and Mr. Roscoe was at Luba's, in Busoga. On the Sunday after Mr. Ashe's letter was written they were to enter into the new church. Mwanga, who can now read, was to attend in state, and the services were to be conducted almost entirely by natives.

On November 18 a well-attended meeting was held in the Church House, Ealing, on behalf of the Colonial and Continental Church Society. Dr. Oliver, who presided, spoke from practical experience of the very important work the Society was doing in meeting the spiritual needs of English people in the Colonies and on the Continent of Europe. The meeting was also addressed by Revs. J. Maurice Ham, Lewis Borrett White, D.D., and Canon Hurst, who described the Society's work in Newfoundland, now at a standstill through the destruction of the school buildings by the recent fire at St. John's. Dr. White, in an interesting address, gave the history of the society, which dates from 1823, and described the various phases of its work.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. C. A. Berry has been conducting special services at Queen-street, Wolverhampton, with good results.

Victoria Docks Union Church Sunday-school (Rev. Josiah Foster) reports 650 scholars and thirty-six teachers.

By the will of the late Mr. J. Coham Turner, of Barnstaple, the London Missionary Society has become entitled to a legacy of £750.

Rev. W. Joseph, B.D., of Maesteg, South Wales, has, we hear, accepted the pastorate of the newly-formed church at Westbourne, Bournemouth.

Rev. J. Hirst Hollowell, of Rochdale, while fulfilling an anniversary engagement at Zion Chapel, Hyde, on Sunday, was seized with sudden illness.

Rev. R. A. Davies, who has just entered on his twenty-eighth year of work at Ventnor, has lately been much encouraged by revived interest.

The anniversary services of the South Norwood Congregational Sunday-school were held on Sunday week, Rev. T. Isons, of Beckenham, preaching.

At the twenty-seventh anniversary of Dr. Herber Evans's ministry at Carnarvon the report showed that the sum of £354 had been collected during the last two years.

At the annual meeting of the church at Pudsey, the Pastor stated that 128 members had been added to the Church during his pastorate, and over £1000 raised by sales of work.

It is stated that the Congregational Church at Rhynie, an Aberdeenshire village, has been the means of sending out in the short space of sixty years no less than twenty-one ministers or missionaries.

Pleasant Sunday afternoons for men will be commenced at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road (Rev. F. B. Meyer) next Sunday, Dec. 4, at 3.30. The address will be given by Dr. Newman Hall, Rev. E. Stevens, at the sixth anniversary of his pastorate at Seaford, stated that the membership of the church had doubled, and that over £1400 had been raised for building purposes, in addition to the regular income of the church.

The Old Meeting House, Ashburton, originally a barn in which two of the ejected ministers of 1662 preached and gathered a congregation, has been reopened after alterations at a cost of £450, towards which about £370 has been subscribed.

On Saturday Rev. R. J. Ward and others left in the Peshawur for India, in connection with the forward movement of the London Missionary Society. Mr. T. Dixon Rutherford, of Mansfield College, Oxford, has been invited to succeed Mr. Ward at St. Helens.

Mr. Charles Pierce, of Bangor, has intimated, through Principal Edwards, his intention to found an open scholarship of the annual value of £50 in connection with Bala Theological College, the condition being that no candidate be excluded on account of his denomination.

To celebrate the jubilee of Highbury Church, Bristol, next year, a special fund is to be raised to pay off the balance of debt on the building fund of Broad Plain Mission, about £1000; to make alterations in the present chapel, and to erect a suitable Martyrs' Memorial in the chapel grounds.

At a meeting of the Congregational Church at St. Helens on Wednesday in last week, it was decided that Mr. T. Dixon Rutherford, Mansfield College, Oxford, should be invited to the pastorate, in succession to Rev. R. J. Ward, who is about to undertake work in Madras, under the auspices of the London Missionary Society.

King-street Church, Portsea, reports progress under the pastorate of Rev. G. Sadler. The attendance at the Sunday evening services has greatly increased, and between twenty and thirty new members have been added to the church. Pleasant Sunday afternoon meetings have been commenced. In the Sunday-school there is an increase of over 100 scholars.

BAPTIST.

Dr. Usher, of Belfast, has accepted the call to the pastorate of Orpington.

Rev. Dr. Lorimer, of Boston, U.S.A., has declined the invitation of Regent's Park Chapel, London.

Rev. G. Hill, formerly of South Parade Church, Leeds, who went to Melbourne, has resolved to return to this country.

The Birmingham Young Men's Missionary Society is doing good work in arousing interest and stirring zeal and prayer on behalf of missions.

The Baptist friends at Victoria Hall, Wilmington, Manchester, are much encouraged by many recent indications of the Master's blessing.

Last week Revs. W. Maurice, of Shrewsbury, and W. Williams, of Knighton, conducted special revival services at Craven Arms, Knighton.

The Welsh Baptist churches of Liverpool and Birkenhead contribute about the sum of £350 to the Centenary Fund of the Baptist Missionary Society.

Rev. E. W. Stenlake, having lately resigned a six years' pastorate, is open to undertake occasional supply. His address is 3, Montrose-crescent, Wembley, Harrow.

Interesting services have been held at Upper Parkstone, Dorset, in connection with the anniversary of the Tabernacle. The report showed good progress for the past year.

A party of eight missionaries left Liverpool the other day for the Congo, under the auspices of the Congo Training Institute (Colwyn Bay) and the American Baptist Missionary Union.

Pastor E. T. Mateer, of Lordship-lane, East Dulwich, and late of Belfast, has held successful mission services at Northampton. The church has been quickened and souls saved. Pastor H. E. Stone, of St. John's Wood, held services on three succeeding days with cheering results.

Sunday evening efforts are being made at Warwick-street, Leamington, to reach that portion of the community which is unaccustomed to attend a place of worship. Special evangelistic services are held by the pastor, Alfred Philipps. All the seats in the chapel are made free. The chapel is well filled by a devout and earnest congregation.

A correspondent says that the Chicago Baptist University Bible-class, held every Sunday afternoon by the president, Mr. Harper, is attracting large audiences. He expects to take up the books of Job, Ecclesiastes, and Songs of Solomon during this year. There is, it seems, a religious atmosphere at the university that is very gratifying. The students are doing missionary work in the city.

METHODIST.

The women's Bible-class at Old Market-street, Bristol, has increased during the year from 191 to 220.

A series of well-attended meetings on behalf of Central China has been held in the Central Hall, Birmingham.

Revs. W. D. Walters and Peter Thompson have had capital meetings for the London Mission at Huntingdon.

Miss Abbott has conducted a special mission at Brochstreet Church, Lancaster, and as a result over fifty persons have professed conversion.

A successful mission has been conducted by Miss Garnett at Crewe. A large number of the Sunday scholars have professed religious decision.

The Sunday-schools connected with the Sun-lane and Calvert-street Chapel, Norwich, report 2998 scholars, an increase of 150, and 271 teachers.

Rev. Joseph West, of Ceylon, preaching at Victoria Chapel, Taunton, for Foreign Missions, said that two-thirds of their converts were gained by the educational process.

It is stated that the present German missionary will be withdrawn from Vienna, and an English minister appointed, who will, of course, be under the protection of the British Embassy.

A serious fire occurred at the Wesleyan Chapel, Bilston, last Thursday, and extended to an adjoining block containing four large vestries and class rooms, which were completely gutted.

In connection with the Primitive Methodists, G. S. Meek has conducted a series of special services at Allendale Cottages, co. Durham, which had proved most successful. Owing to the great success the mission, which was at first arranged to last a fortnight, had to be extended to a month. The high spiritual tone and power of the services has been remarkable.

Rev. John Innocent, describing a tour of inspection and evangelism in the Shantung district of the Chinese Mission, reports that in one village additional land has been given by a native member, and a new chapel has been opened; in another he baptized twenty-three native converts; in another twenty; in another, one member stated that he wished to give his house to the church in gratitude to God for mercies to himself and his family; in a fifth instance a man brought from a village the deed of a house which had been subscribed for and presented by the members for the use of the mission.

PRESBYTERIAN.

A successful mission has just been concluded at Lewes.

Dr. Swanson has held a series of deeply interesting missionary meetings in Sunderland.

Dr. Thain Davidson has paid a visit to Swansea (St. Andrew's), where the winter's work has opened vigorously.

The senior minister of Jesmond Church, Newcastle, Rev. George Bell, completed his eighty-eighth year on Sunday week.

Dr. Walter Morison has been recommended as the next Moderator of the Synod of the Presbyterian Church in England.

The Sunday Afternoon Adult Bible class in connection with New John-street, Birmingham, has lately been very largely blessed.

Most interesting services have just been held at Nichells, Birmingham, it being the eighth anniversary of the opening of an evangelistic effort by Rev. W. T. Holt, which, being greatly blessed, has developed into a vigorous and promising church.

The coming of age of the Presbyterian Mission to the Jews in Whitechapel has just been celebrated. Rev. Theodore Meyer, the superintendent, commenced the work twenty-one years ago, and seventeen years have elapsed since the mission premises were opened.

Thursday last was a very busy day with the London Presbyterians. There were three meetings of the Federal Council. The business meeting at the College in Queen square was followed by a conference and a public gathering at Regent-square Church in the evening. The addresses, mostly by brethren from Scotland, were extremely practical.

The meeting of the Foreign Mission Committee on Tuesday week was one of much interest. Four missionaries—Revs. H. L. Mackenzie and W. McGregor and the Misses McGregor and Duncan (who sailed on Wednesday for China) were present, and took leave of the committee. It was reported that £1000 had been given anonymously for the purpose of founding a medical mission in the Chin-Chur district. The late Mr. W. Whyte, of Edinburgh, who died in Canada while attending the Pan-Presbyterian Council as delegate from the Free Church of Scotland, has also left £5000 to the China Mission.

SALVATION ARMY.

La Maréchale is now on a tour, visiting stations in the South-west of France.

General Booth's visit has awakened great enthusiasm both at Norwich and Hastings.

Mr. Booth-Clibborn writes that at Lausanne a very good work is in progress, but at Basle much opposition has still to be endured.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Bolton, Mr. John Walkden, a valuable and faithful evangelist.—At Swansea, on 15th inst., Mr. William Davies, a devoted Christian worker.—At Wimbledon, Mr. John Crouch, a helper of many good works.—At Colchester, in his eightieth year, Mr. S. Brock.—At Tunbridge, Rev. T. Rowe, aged eighty-eight, for many years pastor at Tonbridge.—At Cefn, Miss E. A. Rees, aged twenty-eight, loved by many for her work's sake.—At Newtownards, Ireland, Mrs. Brandon, while conducting a special mission in the town.—At Wimborne, Mr. George Ward, a valued Sunday-school superintendent.—At Woodhouse, Sheffield, Rev. S. Merrill, aged eighty-six, a devoted pastor.—At Stanningley, Mr. E. Keighley, an earnest Christian.—At Bradfield, Mr. W. Bell, for forty-five years a faithful preacher of the Gospel.—At Hull, Rev. P. Milson, who entered the Methodist ministry in 1850, and only retired lately.—At Kingswood, Rev. A. Stephenson, aged thirty-one, an active young minister.—At Norwich, Alderman Daws, an active servant of Christ.—At Headingley, Leeds, aged fifty-seven, Mr. James Marshall, a loving helper of the Church.—At Clifton, on 22nd inst., Prebendary J. G. Jerrard Davis, for many years a devoted and faithful Evangelical clergyman.—At Faversham, Rev. W. N. Griffin, vicar of Ospringe since 1848.

Huntly, South Devon.

At the season of the year when so many are leaving for the Riviera, or seeking health in the drier air of the Alpine heights, some of our readers may be glad to be reminded of the health resorts of Devon. One such is to be found at Huntly, in the village of Bishop's Teignton, near Teignmouth, a spot well-known to many a tired Christian worker. Neither artist nor poet could fully depict the wonderful beauty of some recent November days in the west. But there are aspects of Christian life in Huntly, which have a greater interest. It has become the centre of an evangelising movement, which is gradually transforming the village. Its Band of Hope and kindred agencies, number now quite a large body, and some of those who labour in the cause have been themselves redeemed from evil ways. There is nothing forced, but a bright cheerful influence radiates forth, which is itself like a healing gospel. If only such a light could be kindled in other villages which we know, how much easier would be the solution of the social question. X.

The Zulu Christian Choir.

Some few months ago fifteen Zulus were induced by three gentlemen to come to England with the object of raising money by singing for the benefit of a Zulu institution. Mr. Msane, one of the leading Zulus, was wise enough to insert a clause in the agreement to the effect that "they should not be required to do anything contrary to their Christian faith." Soon after reaching London they were required to appear at the Aquarium, and other distinctly worldly places of amusement, at which they demurred; and eventually five of them, including Mr. Msane and his wife, and her sister, left the party, and since then have been helping Gospel meetings in London. They sing and speak English most distinctly, and have voices wonderful in compass, and excellent in tone and quality.

They have been singing at Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, in the East-end, and at the Metropolitan Music-hall, in the West-end, with great acceptance. Mr. Msane is a schoolmaster and a local preacher; both he and his wife have taken part in our meetings, and on Monday last they were introduced to the friends at 186, Aldersgate-street, where they charmed them by their sweet chorus singing.

I shall be glad to put fellow-workers into communication with them, and feel sure they will greatly help the Lord's work wherever they may be invited. On Sunday next, Dec. 4, they are again with us at the Metropolitan Music Hall at 3 and 6.30.

They are capable of singing really high-class sacred music.

Hyde Park Hall, London, W. Chas. Cook.

DONATIONS
RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1892.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

Appeals.

GRANDPONT SCHOOL, OXFORD.—Canon Christopher's appeal on another page for aid on behalf of this valuable work will, we feel sure, awaken sympathy and call forth aid.

Mr. G. FULLER, superintendent of the Children's Friend Mission, Brunswick Hall, Brunswick-road, Poplar, E., asks for help in giving free meals to the poor. Left-off clothing and coal tickets would also be welcome.

Mr. N. M. NICHOLSON, schoolmaster, Graver, Lochs, Lewis, N.B., sends an appeal for books of all kinds for a lending library, which it is desired to form for the 2000 crofters, cottars, and fishermen in that remote part of the island of Lewis.

A "JUMBLE SALE" will be held on Dec. 8 and 9, at the Welcome Mission Hall, Westfields, Barnes, Surrey. The sale will be in aid of the above hall, situated in a very poor part, and greatly needing help. Anything in the form of old clothes and articles of all sorts will be accepted. Please send before Dec. 6, to Miss Wilkinson, the Welcome Mission Hall, Railway-street, Westfields, Barnes.

INDUSTRIAL HOME FOR BOYS, 119, COPENHAGEN-STREET, LONDON, N.—Owing to the unfavourable state of the weather the bazaar in aid of this institution at the Vestry Hall, Hampstead, did not realise as much as was hoped. Miss Mann, 130, Haverstock-hill, N.W., will be glad to send to any friends willing to help in the good work of "saving the boys," assorted parcels of the value of 10s. and upwards.

BEN JONSON-ROAD MISSION.—Mr. Taylor asks funds and supplies for our relief work. We have already a large number of unemployed, many homes are destitute, and the poor children are hungry and starving. We must open our soup kitchen and begin our winter arrangements for relief. One poor woman, living in the worst part, has lately been confined, and appealed to us for assistance. I found that she had not decent covering, the bed-cover having been pawned for bread. Clothing was sent. Address, Ben Jonson-road Mission, Stepney, E.

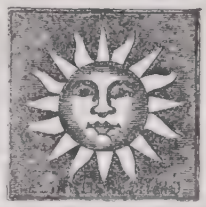
INDIA.—Earnest appeals have been received from Miss Stephenson at Gujrat and Miss Plumb, Sialkot, missionaries, of the Church of Scotland, for funds to purchase tents for itinerating work in their respective districts. It has been found that this is a most needful and, at the same time, encouraging part of mission work, and that in the small outlying native villages (which can often only be reached in this way) many hungering souls are found who have long been desiring the good news, but have had none to tell them. The cost of each of these tents will be, with suitable furniture, about £10. Both these missionaries also appeal for gifts of Scriptures in native languages, which are largely sought for both by native Christians and the heathen. Contributions will be gratefully acknowledged by the Secretary, Fellow Workers' Union, 49, Moray-place, Edinburgh.

REQUEST FOR PRAYER.—For meetings for men only being conducted in the Wesleyan Chapel, Green-street, Sittingbourne, by Mr. Charles Holmes.—For blessing upon a three weeks' mission at Bury St. Edmunds.—For special services in Linlithgow.—For a special mission beginning on Sunday at Crossley Hall, Openshaw, Manchester.

MRS. BAEYERTZ concluded her mission at Dr. Barnardo's Edinburgh Castle on Monday last. Many have borne personal testimony to blessing recived during the mission. Mrs. Baeyertz will begin a campaign at the Clapham Y.M.C.A. on Dec. 8. Mr. W. R. Laue will be the preacher at the Castle during December.

GRANDPONT SCHOOL,
OXFORD.

I VERY GREATLY NEED HELP to BUILD the above SCHOOL, for which Brasenose College has freely granted me a site. The BISHOP OF LIVERPOOL, without being asked, has kindly sent me Five Pounds; will not others interested in Oxford follow Bishop Ryle's considerate example?



All Cheques and Postal Orders should be carefully crossed "Messrs. Parsons & Co., Old Bank, Oxford, for Grandpont School Fund."

Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen.

This Society has ministered for 11 years to 20,000 Smacksmen in the North Sea and other waters. It has Eleven fine Medical Mission Smacks cruising with the fishing fleets.
During the past summer a Hospital vessel has been dispatched to carry on Medical Mission Work amongst the 25,000 Fishermen and their families who annually migrate from Newfoundland to the barren coasts of Labrador.
The burden of the work financially is very heavy. Funds are most urgently needed to carry it on.

"The Children's Bread."

Dear Friends and Fellow-Workers,

Will you help the cause of Christ's Little Ones by sharing to some extent in my well-nigh crushing burdens?

Nearly 5,000 Orphan and Waif Children to-day in the Homes under my care look to me for food and maintenance. These figures are easily written, but hardly any one outside can realise their weighty import.

Through God's goodness and His people's gifts, all the wants of my children have been hitherto supplied; but now the funds at my disposal are quite exhausted, and I am sorely in need of immediate help.

Meanwhile, my doors still stand open to all the world. Every week from 40 to 60 destitute little strangers take their places among my rescued sons and daughters, and the growing volume of their needs can only be met by a corresponding enlargement of sympathy and self-sacrifice on the part of the Lord's servants.

I am now compelled afresh to lay these heavy burdens at the feet of our Master, Christ, and of His servants everywhere; and though my children's necessities are pressingly urgent, I cannot doubt but that the response to their cry through me will be alike prompt and generous.

Our winter's work is growingly imperious in its demands. I cannot, I dare not, close my doors to the timorous knock of a single destitute child; and even beyond the call of the children there arises a wider plaint from thousands of East-End dwellings where the hearth is fireless and the cupboard is bare. Devoted Christian ladies living in our Deaconess House and labouring among the poorest will gladly carry your gifts of love to those whose lives are so cheerless and so wretched.

Who amidst the fogs of Winter will send through me the sunshine of Christian beneficence into the hearts and lives of homeless Little Children and of the thousands beyond these who are needy and suffering?

Who will respond quickly? £30 will give 1,000 of my children food for a single day, or £150 will do the same for all my family; while £3 will spread the table three times for 100 of my Little Waifs. Any gift, however small, will be gratefully acknowledged by our Treasurer, Mr. William Fowler, or by the undersigned.

Ever your faithful fellow-worker in Christ's service
among His Little Ones,

THOS. J. BARNARDO.

FIELD-LANE REFUGES.—On Friday afternoon the Duchess of Teck opened a jubilee wing in connection with the Boys' Industrial School, Hillfield-road, West Hampstead. Lord Aberdeen presided. Mr. Peregrine Platt, the secretary, stated that the new extension had not been undertaken without long and anxious consideration. The total cost of the new wing was £1,800, £1,300 of which had already been raised, including £800 from the London School Board. The president having handed Her Royal Highness the silver key whereby to open the new wing, and which it was hoped she would keep as a souvenir of the occasion, the youngest boy in the school presented Her Royal Highness with a basket of flowers.

WORKING MEN'S MISSION,

Collingwood Street, New Cut; 4, York Street, Walworth and Decima Street (late Edward Street), Bermondsey.

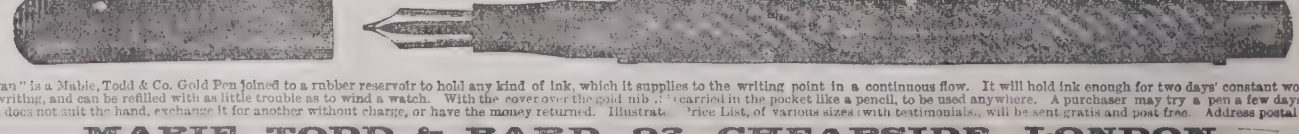
A DARK OUTLOOK.

The Outlook for the coming Winter is very dark and gloomy, we shall have to face Poverty and Destitution in its most ghastly aspects. To prevent the poor from sinking into utter hopelessness and despair, we Appeal to the Readers of The Christian for Help.

"Can you help me Mr. Young?"

We have sorrowfully answered "No, we cannot, our funds being quite exhausted."

£250 URGENTLY NEEDED.



Donations may be sent to T. and J. Young, 1B, Vowler-street, Deacon-street, Walworth-road; to our Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or to the Office of The Christian.

GOLD PENS: MABIE, TODD & BARD'S

Manufacture, are 14 carat tempered gold, very handsome, and positively unaffected by any kind of ink. They are pointed with selected polished iridium. The "Encyclo. Brit." says: "Iridium is a nearly white metal of high specific gravity, it is almost indestructible, a beautifully polished surface can be obtained upon it." They will not penetrate the paper. Writer's cramp is unknown among users of Gold Pens. One will outwear 90 gross of steel pens. A choice is offered from 250 various shapes and points. They are a perfect revelation to those who have never used Gold Pens.

Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes has used one of Mabie, Todd & Co.'s Gold Pens since 1857, and is using the same one (his "old friend") to-day; it cost him only 9s. 6d., it would have cost him, in money alone, over £10 to have done the same work with steel pens.

"SWAN" FOUNTAIN PEN, 10/6, Broad, Medium, or Fine Point. Unrivalled and Incomparable

The "Swan" is a Mabie, Todd & Co. Gold Pen joined to a rubber reservoir to hold any kind of ink, which it supplies to the writing point in a continuous flow. It will hold ink enough for two days' constant work, or a week of ordinary writing, and can be refilled with as little trouble as to wind a watch. With the cover over the gold nib it is carried in the pocket like a pencil, to be used anywhere. A purchaser may try a pen a few days, and, if the writing point does not suit the hand, exchange it for another without charge, or have the money returned. Illustrated Price List, of various sizes (with testimonials), will be sent gratis and post free. Address postal card to GENERAL MISSION WORK. WORK AMONG CHILDREN. PRISONERS' MISSION AND HOME. BOYS' HOMES AND PREVENTIVE WORK. WOMEN'S HOMES AND RESCUE WORK.

The Superintendent is much grieved to say that owing to the great scarcity of donations, the above many-sided work is sorely hampered.

Funds are urgently needed to meet the outlay at the present time.

Who will help us?

Contributions will be most gratefully acknowledged if sent to the Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or to the Superintendent, Mr. WILLIAM WHEATLEY, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C.

The Annual Report is now ready, and will be forwarded free upon application to the Superintendent.

LONDON LOCK HOSPITAL AND ASYLUM,
HARROW ROAD, W.

Patron—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
President—H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE, K.G.

The Governors earnestly APPEAL to the public for HELP at the present time, that the blessings conferred on hundreds of Poor, Friendless, Repentant Women may uninterruptedly be continued. The Institution has neither investments nor endowments, but NEEDS SIX THOUSAND POUNDS to free it of debt. Inspection of both Hospital and Asylum is invited. The public benefit arising from the works of the Institution is immense. Communications should be addressed to the Secretary, Lock Hospital, Harrow-road, W.

KINNAIRD, Chairman. GEORGE GILBERT, Secretary.

AFFLICTIVE SCENES.

Acute suffering is just now being silently borne by large numbers of deserving poor under the notice of the North-East London Gospel Mission. Sick mothers and children with fireless grates endure direst privations, and others are parting with their already scant furniture and clothing for food. The Factory Girls' and other branches are in full activity. Contributions would be most gratefully received, and may be sent to Mrs. F. A. BEVAN, 59, Lance's Gate, South Kensington, S.W., or to the Rector, Mr. WM. CHORLEY, 6, Clephane-road, Canonbury, N. Parcels should be sent to Canonbury.

SPECIAL OFFER FOR MISSIONARIES FOR 1893.

Have you a friend a Missionary? If so, encourage him in his work by sending him monthly a copy of "The Review of the Churches."

On receipt of address, accompanied by P.O.O. for 5s., we will send post free one copy to any part of the world for five months.

I have no doubt this lady will answer any private enquiry from any patient personally interested.

BRONCHITIS AND ASTHMA.—CASE AT SWINDON.

Mr. THOMAS FORTUNE came to consult me Nov. 19th of last year. He was then living at Swindon.

Asthma was a family complaint. He had taken cold three years ago, and had suffered from attacks of bronchitis, and from asthma since, which appeared to gain ground, and had become confirmed. The cough and spitting were at times very bad, and the breathing distressing. For three months he persevered, and writing me two months since, he says:—"I am quite well—not like the same man. I shall be delighted to recommend to everyone what has been such a blessing to me. I have removed from Swindon to 29, Wear-street, Bath-bridge, Bristol.—Yours gratefully, THOMAS FORTUNE."

NEW AND ORIGINAL LIFE OF MR. SPURGEON

The Prince of Preachers:

A SKETCH, A PORTRAITURE, AND A TRIBUTE.

By Rev. JAMES DOUGLAS, M.A.

WITH LIFE-LIKE PORTRAIT.

The Rev. THOMAS SPURGEON says of this Book:—

"I have been happily conscious that the book is not a mere narration of oft-told facts (with some fiction) and worn-out anecdotes. The 'Sketch' is good; the 'Portraiture' is better; the 'Tribute' is best of all. Right glad am I that Mr. Douglas has succeeded so eminently in his difficult but congenial task."

SOME OF THE LATEST PRESS NOTICES.

"Mr. Douglas has a very intelligent grasp of his subject, and handles it in a most appreciative manner."—Irish Baptist Magazine.

"Young preachers and teachers should read and ponder well these pages. . . . We have great pleasure in commending this good and useful book by Mr. Douglas."—The Methodist S.S. Record.

"The best book about Mr. Spurgeon that has yet appeared. . . . Without any breach of confidence Mr. Douglas has supplied some new material, and what was familiar he has set forth in a way that ensures confidence and brings real profit to the reader.—Divine Life.

FIVE BIOGRAPHICAL WORKS BY REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

Enclosed in an Oak Case. Price Complete, 12s. 6d. Nett (NOT CARRIAGE FREE).

CONTENTS:—

ABRAHAM; or, The Obedience of Faith.
ISRAEL: A Prince with God.
JOSEPH: Beloved—Hated—Exalted.
MOSES: The Servant of God.
ELIJAH: And the Secret of his Power.

REVIEW:—

"The studies in the lives and times of Biblical characters which the Rev. F. B. MEYER has from time to time issued during the last few years have been marked by great care in preparation, and a suggestiveness that has made them very acceptable to preachers and teachers."

—The Quiver.

Each Volume contains Nine Original Engravings, and is neatly bound in Cloth Boards with Gilt Lettering.

 Any Volume of this Biographical Series may be had separately, in Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.; Cloth Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

OTHER WORKS BY REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

EXPOSITORY SERIES.

The Life and Light of Men. Expositions of John I.—XII. 5th Thousand. Cloth, 2s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

A Review from The Presbyterian, August 26th, 1892:—

"These 'Expositions' are not critical; they are practical. They do not deal with the 'text,' nor with 'readings,' nor with any of the difficult theological problems of the Fourth Gospel; but they are evidently designed to be suggestive, to be helpful, to ordinary everyday readers of the New Testament, and it is certain that in many instances this end will be attained."

After a candid critical survey of the whole volume, the reviewer sums up: "But while we have said all this, we are free to confess that on the whole we like the book. A good healthful spirit pervades its entire teaching; and there is such a manifest sympathy with the life, and work, and words of Jesus that we cannot but heartily wish it success."

Tried by Fire. Expositions of the First Epistle of Peter. 10th Thousand. Cloth, 2s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

A Review from The British Weekly:—

"The popularity of Mr. Meyer's Expositions is a good sign of the times. This, on the First Epistle of Peter, is one of the best, and is full of tender Christian wisdom. There are many unobtrusive signs of thought and culture throughout; but the chief charm of the book is its earnest simplicity."

DEVOTIONAL SERIES.

The Shepherd Psalm. Meditations on the 23rd Psalm. 30th Thousand. Cloth, 1s. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

A Review from The Irish Congregational Magazine:—

"We have never read anything so charming on the twenty-third Psalm as this volume from the pen of Mr. Meyer. The devout reader will find it one of the most comforting, cheering, and inspiring books he can read."

Christian Living. Practical Counsels concerning the Christian Life. 27th Thousand. Cloth, 1s. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

A Review from Footsteps of Truth:—

"A choice book of nine chapters, into which is condensed a mass of helpful instructions and wise practical counsel on various topics relating to the Christian life."

The Present Tenses of the Blessed LIFE. 28th Thousand. Cloth, 1s. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

A Review from The Record:—

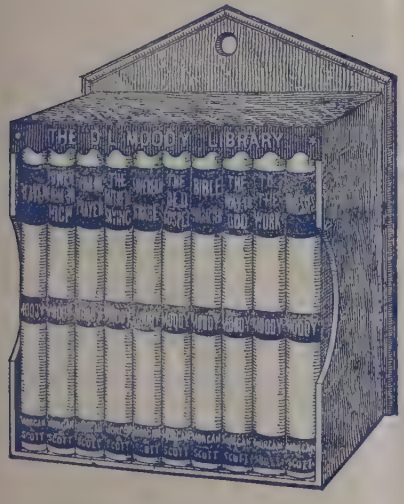
"An excellent little book, full of practical Christianity; a pocket companion which will be valued by those whose dearest aim it is to walk daily more closely with God."

The Future Tenses of the Blessed LIFE. Uniform with the Devotional Series. Cloth boards, 1s.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

Extract from Preface:—

"If by the constitution of our minds we must anticipate the future then let us believe that it is radiant with His presence, filling each moment to its outermost rim. No day, whatever it takes, can deprive us of Him. Each day will utter to the next some speech of His love. All the days linked together and entwined with His present grace will make a golden chain of holy and blessed living."



The Psalms. Notes and Readings. Pocket Edition. 8th Thousand. Cloth, 1s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s.

This volume is also published in demy 8vo size, as one of "THE CHRISTIAN BIBLE READINGS" Series of Expositions. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt, 2s. 6d.

A Review from The Cambridgeshire Congregational Magazine:—

"A pocket commentary on the entire book of Hebrew song. The treatment of each Psalm is brief, plain, and well planned. The divisions are usefully suggestive for public addresses, and the fillings in are the pith and marrow of Gospel truth. For private devotional use also it is a little treasure."

LONDON: MORGAN AND SCOTT, 12, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, E.C., and may be ordered of any Bookseller.

REVIEW:—

"These are popular works by our great Evangelist, and they deserve a large sale. There can be no need for us to commend the living, blazing speech of our brother Moody. Who can equal him in natural simplicity, all aglow with holy passion?"—REV. C. H. SPURGEON, in "THE SWORD AND TROWEL."

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

Close of Another Year.

AN ANXIOUS TIME.

To the Readers of "The Christian,"

The year 1892 appears to have flitted exceedingly swiftly, but so it is, and the period with its issues are now almost altogether in review.

From our records it appears that 898 YOUNG WOMEN AND GIRLS have sought shelter at the well-known 200, Euston Road. Of these 368 were PREVENTIVE CASES—mostly girls in their teens. 398 were RESCUE CASES; 54 MATERNITY CASES, and some of these of a most painful character. 78 were PRISON and POLICE-COURT CASES. (Happily now mercy is often blended with the exercise of justice.) 130 YOUNG SERVANTS have availed themselves of the new SERVANTS' HOME. 615 poor outcasts have sought and found shelter at the OPEN-ALL-NIGHT REFUGE. So far as possible the permanent welfare of all these has been carefully sought, and above all things their spiritual and eternal interests.

The reader of these lines will not be surprised when informed that the Collection made at the commencement of this year has been MORE THAN EXHAUSTED; but so it is, and in no single instance has the condition of the exchequer influenced against the rendering of prompt help.

Now, if ONE THOUSAND READERS of "The Christian" will send promptly, as may be convenient, I believe that 1892 will close as all former years have, and that our note will be "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow."

Donations may be sent, as heretofore, to Messrs. Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C., or

Yours faithfully,

EDWARD W. THOMAS, Secretary.

"Anna Shipton occupies a niche all her own; for, while all her chapters could be described as sermons, they are unique sermons—after the order of those of Frances Ridley Havergal. The volumes embraced in the 'Library' are simple, cultured, persuasive. They are gems: and no single reading can reveal their many and varied excellences. No more helpful present could be made to a young lady, a Sunday-school teacher, or a Sunday-school library."—Oldham Chronicle.

10,000 RUGS GIVEN AWAY

This Phenomenal Offer is made to the Readers of this Journal only.

On receipt of this advertisement, accompanied by Postal Order for 6s. or 74 stamps, we will forward DIRECT FROM OUR LOOMS to your address, one of our genuine Seamless Woven Reversible Carpets, suitable for Drawing-room, Dining-room, Bedroom, &c., handsomely bordered and woven in 30 different patterns and art colourings to suit all requirements, and LARGE ENOUGH TO COVER ANY ORDINARY-SIZED ROOM. These Carpets are manufactured from a material equal in wear to wool, and are undoubtedly the cheapest in the world.

With every Carpet we shall absolutely give away a very handsome Rug to match, or we will send 2 Carpets and 2 Rugs for 10/6. Money willingly returned if not satisfied.

The Queen says: "Decidedly stouter and handsomer than any of the kind, the price being the astounding part of the matter." Schoolmistress: "For style, durability and cheapness, they cannot be beaten." Penny Illustrated Paper: "Manufactured in every variety of colour, and is one of the most surprising bargains I have seen." Church Bells: "Truly wonderful value." Sala's Journal: "Unequalled for cheapness combined with durability and prettiness."

Thousands of Testimonials similar to the following, and Repeat Orders, have been received from our customers:—

166, Crown Street, Aberdeen.

"Gentlemen,—The two Carpets and Rugs to match you sent us two years ago have given every satisfaction, and are still in use.—Yours faithfully, "ALEX. MALCOLM."

This offer is made to the readers of this paper only, and may not be repeated. All orders despatched same day as received. Cheques and Postal Orders to be crossed "Union Bank," and made payable to J. HARGREAVES, Secretary. [Estd. 1872.] ADDRESS—

Elohim and Jehovah;

OR, THE EMPLOYMENT OF THE DIVINE NAMES FROM GENESIS I. TO EXODUS VI.

By Rev J. M. Denniston, M.A.

"A very interesting and able little book."—English Churchman.

"Our author has made us all his debtors by his unpretentious but precious production."—Word and Work.

"A carefully-written pamphlet, intended to prove that the use of these two names of God is to be explained, not by the assumption of diversity of authorship, but by the desire of the one writer to call attention to the different phases of the Divine activity."—Sunday School Chronicle.

"This pamphlet is not large; it consists of some fifty-six pages, but it is worth its weight in gold. The object of the pamphlet is to follow out certain cardinal views of the names Elohim and Jehovah, as they are given in the Book of Genesis and the first six chapters of Exodus. The author, who is an accomplished Hebrew scholar, has done his work well."—Irish Congregational Magazine.

Writing with reference to the recent suggestion that Parliament should be petitioned to prohibit the transmission of betting intelligence by telegraph, and so to strike a fatal blow at this gigantic evil, an esteemed correspondent suggests that petitions for signature should be supplied to places of worship, Christian Associations, and also shops and warehouses in our large towns.

It is a great comfort to the travelling public to know that there are among the railway men of the United Kingdom no fewer than 14,700 teetotallers, of whom 4750 are employed on the Midland Railway. All these belong to the United Kingdom Temperance Alliance, an institution that certainly deserves general support. Curiously enough, the temptation to drink comes very frequently from the travellers themselves, who, with mistaken kindness, place it before the men, thus rendering them liable to dismissal, as well as tending to endanger the lives of those under their charge as well as their own.

Some few weeks ago the Earl of Meath wrote a letter to The Times entitled "Opportunities for Millionaires," in which he proposed five schemes for the purchase of open spaces in the Metropolis. No response has yet been made. The amounts required ranged between £15,000 and £40,000. Lord Meath now suggests five smaller schemes, each within £1000. They would be a great boon to the industrious classes who make the wealth of the country. But this does not seem to be a generous age, and some liberal givers who have passed away have not found like-minded successors. Christians of means need to learn the open-handed neighbourliness of the poor, who share their loaf with their poorer neighbour.

It is gratifying to record that, despite the hardness of the times, and the large increase in the numbers of the unemployed, there continues to be a steady falling off in the number of committals to gaol, the figures for the past year, recently issued, showing a decrease of nearly 7000 as compared with those of 1880. Many causes have of course contributed to this pleasing result; but a large share of the credit must be given to our Prison-gate missions and kindred societies.

We commented some time ago upon the practice followed by the Recorder of Liverpool in dealing leniently with certain classes of criminals, a course which had subjected him to very severe strictures. It is gratifying to find that this tempering of justice with mercy has not had the result which its opponents anticipated, that of causing an increase in the amount of crime, but has brought about a decided improvement in the borough in regard to crime. Charging the grand jury a few days ago, the Recorder claimed for his practice that it had greatly reduced the number of offences, and that it had saved "in the aggregate 2500 years of imprisonment," a very gratifying fact when it is remembered what the criminal costs to the State while he is in gaol, and in how few cases long periods of imprisonment have a reformatory influence. Mr. Hopwood, Q.C., on the same occasion, described penal servitude as being "ingeniously cruel and inhuman."

It is a somewhat significant fact that in the second week of November, the returns for which have just been issued, there were no fewer than 94,224 paupers in the Metropolis alone, a number nearly 4000 in excess of that in the same period of 1891. The prospect for the winter certainly seems to be darkening, and it is to be hoped that our charitable societies will be specially assisted by the benevolent, in the exceptionally severe strain to which, doubtless, they each and all will be subjected.

A South-coast local paper contains a list of Protestant contributors to a Roman Catholic Church at Hythe. Recognising, among others, the name of a gentleman well known to us, we wrote to him an inquiry regarding the matter. From a long letter, forming an exhaustive denial, we need only give the following extracts:—

> I am more than a little surprised to find my name as a subscriber to the Catholic Church at Hythe. I have never given, nor have I ever promised, nor should I ever, as long as I have the same feeling towards Catholicism as I have to-day, give it any support whatever. I fully expect that many of the others, whom I know to be good Christian men, have been tricked in the same way.

The decision of the judges in the South Meath election petition, unseating the "Nationalist" member because of the pastoral of the Roman Catholic bishop, has dealt a heavy blow at priestly tyranny in Ireland. Evidences are not wanting that the people are beginning to throw off the yoke which has for so long been hung around their necks by the priests. During the past summer open-air meetings have been held in and around Dublin to an extent not attempted previously, and, with hardly a single exception, all have been attended by quiet and orderly crowds. There are many signs that point to a fast approaching day of complete religious liberty in the distressful sister country. Now is the great opportunity for those who can carry to the people the message of a free Gospel, so long withheld from them.

The condition of Dublin with regard to the drink traffic is attracting the attention of her citizens, who are not to be classed amongst the enthusiastic total abstainers. Professor W. F. Barrett describes the official statistics of the arrests for drunkenness in Ireland as revealing a state of things that is "absolutely appalling." In Dublin, there were 15,530 arrests for drunkenness last year, one-third of those arrested being women. A writer in The Temperance Record takes such a gloomy view of public opinion on the drink question in that city, that we cannot but think that it is overdrawn:—

> The churches are silent about it; the evangelical associations give all temperance efforts the cold shoulder; the Young Men's Christian Association has a brewer on its executive committee. The newspapers of Dublin fight everything but drink, gambling, immorality, theatre-going, and horse-racing.

We have rejoiced in the good work done by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, and congratulate Mr. Waugh on the successful autumnal meeting which took place last month. We cannot, however, endorse the following note which appears in The Child's Guardian for December:—

> Everybody will agree with Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, the great missioner of the Wesleyans, when he said: I should like to take the opportunity presented by his appearance (the Archbishop of Westminster) for the first time on a common platform, of expressing the prayerful hope of those of us who have lived long in London that he may worthily fill that great place in the service of God and of humanity which was occupied by his illustrious and saintly predecessor, Cardinal Manning.

If, as is said in a previous note, "the society rejoices in its non-sectarian and citizen character," we do not see the consistency of emphasising the denominational position of the representative in England of the most sectarian and intolerant sect in Christendom.

The grammatical question regarding Heb. iv. 3 has led to further correspondence, which we regard as too purely technical in character to be of general interest. Mr. Noel admits a present rendering, but maintains that the character of the entire Epistle demands a future interpretation, as with many such forms—e.g., "the night cometh," "the days are coming," etc. Mr. Douglas would not exclude the future meaning, but holds that through the faith which grasps the Divine promise there is a present enjoyment and possession of that rest which is the subject matter of the promise. And is it not so with all the things which are promised by the covenant-keeping God? By the vision of faith men greet them from afar, and in present experience anticipate their blessedness and glory.

We scarcely think the question, "What is the Rest?" needs much discussion. Like every other spiritual blessing, the rest which Jesus gives to the weary and heavy-laden, the rest which we find when we take his yoke upon us, the rest which remaineth for the people of God, is present and everlasting. Begun in time on earth, it is consummated through eternity in heaven. Inasmuch as the rest consists in believing (Heb. iv. 3), in not hardening our hearts (iii. 7, iv. 7), in resting from our own works (iv. 10), it must begin in the present. We, like the Hebrews, are tempted to fall away, and are exhorted to fear lest any one of us should seem to come short of the promised rest. But this seeming to come short must refer to this life. It would be an inadequate term to apply to the loss of heaven.

The argument is that we must diligently endeavour to enter into that rest, that this must be the business of our lives, because the Word of God discerns the thoughts and intents of the heart, and all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of Him with whom we have to do. The mixed or defective motive of our best actions is exposed, so that we cannot rest in any of our own works. Then we are almost tempted to give up our confession. But we are exhorted and encouraged not to do so, because we have a great High Priest, Jesus the Son of God, by whom atonement has been made for our sin and sinfulness; who sympathises with our infirmities; who makes intercession for us; and who is able to save us to the uttermost if we come unto God by Him. Thus we have a present rest in Him, the fruition of which is the everlasting rest of heaven.

The reunion question is still to the front. While some are discussing the form which the future Reunion Church shall take, others are asking whether such a Church is at all possible. One writer in a contemporary recently declared against the possibility of reunion even of the Free Churches, on the ground that the points of difference which now divide Nonconformity are "full of significance and weighty with importance." His letter contains the following statement:—

A denomination has no meaning to me, unless it exists to protest against some error, and to emphasise some particular truth or truths. That particular truth is its life, the only apology it has for its being, and unless that truth shall hold the same prominence in the Reunion Church, then, with the extinction of the denomination, the truth for which it existed would be put out.

We doubt whether it would be possible to prove that every denomination had such good reason for its continued existence as this writer supposes. What particular truth does any one of the different sections of Methodism exist to emphasise which is not equally important to the rest? There are Wesleyan, Primitive, New Connexion, and Free Church Methodists. Would the union of these four mean the loss of any important truth? And if the remaining Free Churches were included, would it not be difficult to show what truth, "full of significance and weighty with importance," would be sacrificed?

The statement was no doubt true as to the commencement of our various denominations. Some truth or truths were being overlooked, and it was necessary and right that those to whom such truths were dear should bear witness to them in the most effective manner possible. But it is doubtful whether any one of those distinctive truths is not now recognized by all evangelical Churches; and if "one particular truth is the life" of a denomination, then when the need for giving emphasis to that truth ceases to exist, has not the justification for the separate existence of the denomination ceased to exist also?

The barrier to any manifest union lies chiefly in the fact, that great vested interests have been created in connection with every section of the Church. Trust deeds are so framed as to make our places of worship the exclusive property of one particular denomination. So far as the members of our evangelical Churches are concerned, we are persuaded that to thousands of them an evangelical and evangelistic ministry is of far greater importance than the question as to what denomination owns the property. They pass from one Free Church to another, without feeling that any important truth has been ignored.

We have received a number of letters in reference to our recent notes on "Nurses and Nursing." Our correspondents cordially agree with us in condemning the ritualistic tone and tendency of many of the nursing institutions, of the influences brought to bear on nurses in hospitals, also in deploring the scanty remuneration given in many cases to the nurses whose earnings contribute so largely to the support of these institutions.

One lady, writing from the West-end, recalls her experiences with nurses, who have been all that could be desired, save that they could not administer "the true heart-comfort that a Christ-loving woman could give." As to the Christian Home so much desiderated, we have the following:—

Permit me to say how very grateful many nurses are for your notice of their work and wants. I may say that an association such as you suggest is in course of formation, and it is hoped that a Christian home for trained nurses will soon be opened on lines such as you describe. It is not thought that subscriptions will be needed, but the advice and influence of any wishing to help would be much valued. Communications may be addressed to Sister Constance, 2, Albert-villas, Baddow-road, Chelmsford, Essex.

With reference to the spiritual character of the institutions, a gentleman writes calling attention to the Nursing Sisters' Institution, 41, Devonshire-square, E., founded by Elizabeth Fry, thoroughly Evangelical and undenominational, and paying its nurses £1 1s. per week for non-infectious and £1 5s. for infectious cases, a rate of pay which the writer thinks,

Seems to work advantageously as regards the character of the nurses. Their pay is too small to benefit those who are only seeking a living out of it, so we find that those who come to us have taken to it from love to the work and from love to God too.

We certainly know well and value highly such Evangelical institutions as Dr. Laseron's, but our notes had, as readers would perceive, reference rather to the general and more public institutions.

As to the matter of payment, the Nursing Record for November 3 and 17 contains a correspondence between nurses belonging to Guy's Hospital Nursing Institution and the Treasurer of Guy's. One nurse who had been paid for eight years an average of £27 10s., while earning for the institute £77 10s., asked respectfully that nurses after four years' service should receive £40. Her request was bluntly refused consideration. The Treasurer writes on the point:—

In regard to wages, if the nurses attached to the institution are dissatisfied with their present and prospective positions, this is, as you say, 'a free country,' and they are, of course, at liberty to leave in accordance with the terms on which they undertook their work.

In connection with this correspondence, our contemporary refers to the Nursing Co-operation, which allows nurses their own earnings, less a commission of 7½ per cent. to cover office expenses.

Many serious consequences follow in the wake of endeavours to use natural means for spiritual ends. The programme of a bazaar held this week in aid of the building fund of All Saints' Church, Penarth, includes a smoking concert and a public dance! A correspondent (Mr. R. S. Boyer), writing to a local paper, has manfully protested, pointing out that these and other arrangements supply all the elements from which a scandalous affair might develop; but he has protested in vain. He tersely said:—

The rector on Sunday morning told us that Advent is the season in which we should make preparation for death, and I think it will be interesting if he will explain how smoking and drinking all one night, and dancing and refreshing all the next night, are to be regarded as helps in that direction.

The explanation is not far to seek. Worldly "Christians" are using worldly means; and the outcome of their exertions must be worldly. Not by the help of the unregenerate in heart and mind, will the kingdom of God be established in Wales, or anywhere else; and it were a mockery to invoke the Divine blessing upon enterprises so obviously unspiritual as those against which earnest Penarth Christians have rightly expressed indignation.

In some American towns Seventh Day Adventism is so dominant that the Sabbath is hardly observed at all, either in letter or in spirit; for those who observe the Saturday work on Sunday, and thus labour becomes an everyday matter. We regret to hear that advocates of the Saturday rest have been unsettling some good people at Bath, by maintaining that, as the Old Testament Sabbath law has not been repealed, the seventh day of the week must still be observed, and not the first, as has been the practice of the Christian Church since Apostolic days. Strange that some who glory in the Gospel of the grace of God should hanker after the old legalism, and refuse to see the Lord's Day obligation and privilege because there has been no expressly verbal revision of the Fourth Commandment.

Not by the keeping of the Sabbath can a man commend himself to God. True, it was for the well-being of man as man that the day was set apart; but only such as are reconciled to God can enter into the true enjoyment of the day, with its anticipation of the eternal rest. Such, it need hardly be said, glory in the Greater than Moses, even in the Lord of the Sabbath, who burst the bars of death on the first day of the week, and on that day, after his resurrection, manifested Himself and his grace and power as on no other day, to his worshipping disciples.

Those who observe the Lord's Day aright find it a real Sabbath, just as of old the pious in Israel enjoyed the Sabbath as the Lord's Day (Isaiah lviii. 13). The change of day, which is simply relative, was, it is readily admitted, not announced by a formal edict, but none the less was it enacted by the great Event which it commemorates, and which alone can account for the change. In the light of these and many other facts, believers do not ask for a "Thou shalt keep the first day of the week," but, in an adoring spirit, following those who followed Christ, they implicitly observe the day, and experimentally find that it yields them the Sabbath refreshment which their souls require.

The East-end Outlook.

A winter which promises to be a time of ery unusual distress has just come upon us. 'he outlook in the East-end is far from ncouraging. The miserable sight of crowds f men at the Dock gates and little coteries of ne unemployed at the street corners, is more epressing than can be imagined.

Besides the pressure of ordinary work, and ne increased burden which the cold and overty of the winter are sure to bring, nearly ll of us who are working as heads of missions n this vast East-end are cramped and hamered as perhaps never before by an unusual ack of funds. The temptation to lose heart s sometimes very great, and our prayer for ustained faith never ceases.

As I hear the clamorous cries for help, and ealise our utter inability to answer them ffectually, I have been thinking: Suppose fter all, just for one brief twelve months, we East-end workers gave up and took the rest hich many of us so sorely need, not only hose whose names appear as leading the van f philanthropic effort, but also the rank and le, who give strength and energy and all hat makes life beautiful, to help up their rothers and sisters in their sorrow and isery. Suppose Dr. Barnardo closed fast his hutters and sent back his 5000 little waifs o the streets, or, perhaps, worse still, to heir "friends." Suppose the venerable eorge Holland retired on his well-earned aurels, and our beloved Annie Macpherson in er weariness rested from her labours instead f pioneering another large family to Canada. uppose all the devoted clergymen and inisters called in their splendid bands of rained workers and betook themselves only o preaching on Sunday. Suppose the magisrates had no "Bridge of Hope" to which to efer our poor girls, and Suicide Bridge again ecame the only resource to them in their espair. Suppose Peter Thompson left the ockers to themselves, to work out the solution of their difficulties, and their wives and hildren to starve without kindly help and ords of sympathy. Suppose the ladies of he M.A.B.Y.S. were tempted to consider the orkhouse girls educated enough to take care f themselves; and the Charity Organisation isitors took to making less painful calls, hile Mr. Charrington let his glorious Gospel all only as a place of entertainment; and the elf-sacrificing army of the City missionaries ere given charge of districts in country vilages. Suppose all the thousand-and-one gencies for good stopped simultaneously, ecause the strain is so great. What would ecome of East London?

We can scarcely tell, perhaps the desolaion can be better imagined than described. ut of one thing I feel sure. At the end of welve months the verdict would be unanimous, ven from those who now only patronise us, or erhaps even mildly scoff at our enthusiasm —we should be pronounced to have been the est possible police-force for these teeming masses."

Among the well-to-do classes it would be ecided that after all it would have been really cheaper" to have investigated some f our appeals; and if indeed before that time revolution, similar to that which took place n France just a hundred years ago, had not ccurred, the West-end would at least have een obliged to acknowledge that the strikes f recent times were child's play compared o what they had found could be demanded y hungry men; and the resources of the atepayer would have been tried to an extent hich to-day seems impossible to realise.

When we returned to our work, I know that our heartiest welcome would come from the policemen; and the stipendiary magistrates would be the first to give us the support of their authority; our evidence would no longer be pooh-poohed in courts of justice, and the veracity of our witnesses almost impugned as simply the expression of the biassed opinion of harmless enthusiasts; and I venture to believe that even our legislators would listen with obsequious attention to anything we might have to say on the drink question. I am taking the very lowest ground.

But we live under a high and holy necessity, and we cannot strike work. We will never desert our posts as long as life and strength and sanity last—we will minister to those whom Christ has left us in his stead. The workers may fail and be discouraged, but God's work will never fall to the ground.

Some few (a very few, in proportion to their numbers), of the stewards of God's wealth, and a far larger number of those who possess only their two mites, are giving most nobly and generously into the Treasury of the Lord. But at times the thought comes—for how much loss of strength and life of God's labourers will they be responsible, who sit at home—it may not be, by any means, living wholly selfish lives, but who neglect to consider that every good gift—talents and money—is given to some more than others, only that they may take the place of the elder brethren, and see that none in their Father's family are perishing for lack of thought.

My fellow East-end workers—we who love our Lord, and gladly give our life for his little ones—can we not find some common ground upon which we can stand in one unbroken phalanx? Can we not with one heart and one voice oppose by every means within our reach this terrible drink traffic, which not only makes work for us to do, but when, after years of patient labour, the desire of our heart seems near its accomplishment, the temptation to drink—this national curse of to-day—stands at every street corner, and undoes that which has cost us our life-blood? As units we can do little, but "union is strength." I believe we have yet to learn our power.

Let us go forward this winter, even amid so much to discourage us. "The joy of the Lord shall be"—yes, it is—"our strength."

Mr. Charles Inglis at Thornbury.

The Christians here have been greatly encouraged by the united mission conducted by Mr. C. Inglis. The eagerness of the people to hear the "old, old story" has been so great that the Baptist and Congregational Churches and the public hall have been filled with overflowing congregations.

The after meetings have been seasons of wonderful power and blessing, and workers have had their hearts filled with joy, as they have had the privilege of leading many to trust Christ.

The afternoon Bible talks have been greatly owned, and have proved to be a time of deep spiritual profit to many Christian workers in the town and neighbourhood. C.

WINCHESTER.—We have just had a mission in the churches in this city. Rev. A. B. Sole, rector of St. Thomas's Church, had a procession through the streets one evening headed by a large cross, and they were carrying lamps and chanting the Litany. I fear that this will soon be followed by the R.C.'s carrying "the Host" through the streets. The missioner at his church said "he hoped that before he comes there again they will have established the confessional there regularly every Thursday." Truly, Rome is gaining rapid strides in our dear old England! Alas! that it should be so!—Communicated.

AMONG THE POOR OF BOW.

"Something Done" is the title of the annual report of Blackthorn-street Gospel Mission, Bow Common, E. The record shows an amount of work done which cannot fail to influence for good the poor and suffering amongst whom it is carried on.

A missionary and two Bible-women are constantly visiting from room to room, seeking out and relieving the sick and destitute poor, and carrying the Word of Life into the sad homes of the people. Mothers' and men's meetings, young people's societies, industrial exhibitions, temperance and provident work, Gospel services, and other similar efforts have been sustained, and many souls have been gathered in.

The "Workmen's Home," which is largely used night after night by the working men of the neighbourhood, provides a powerful antidote to the public-house, and has been used of God to the conversion of not a few of the men, many others having been induced to sign the pledge.

A prominent feature of the mission is its care for the children, of whom there are nearly 700 in the Sunday School, and a large attendance at the children's service on Sunday evenings. The drift children's weekly meetings have been most encouraging, the poorest children of the streets being thus brought under regular Christian instruction.

Cases of poverty are cited which show a condition of terrible destitution amongst the poor that can only be met by efforts such as those described in the report.

We quote one passage from the report, under the heading "Central Hope," to show that the lines on which the work is carried on are not merely philanthropic but Christian. "Sin-cursed, oppressed, drink-trodden, debased, our only hope for East London is the application of the power of the Redeeming Blood, by the regenerating Spirit to the individual conscience, the bringing home to the heart and mind of the sinner the Gospel of the Divine Pity and Compassion for his acceptance and salvation, here and now. This is our hope for the people, and this alone; and here also we find both inspiration and reward for the work itself. Ready to do anything to help the people, we have planted once for all the Banner of the Cross in the midst of the abounding misery and squalor which prevail on every hand, and by it we stand, 'determined not to know anything among men save Jesus Christ and Him crucified.'"

The balance on the General Mission and Relief Fund at the close of the year was only 10s. 8½d. which, we trust, may be largely increased, so that, most necessary work shall not languish for lack of means. The pastor's address is Rev. T. J. Hazzard, 27, Cottage-grove, Bow, E.

MISSING THE MARK.

Does it not ever seem that as we get nearer Christ holiness appears farther off? And this for a two-fold reason: first, because the intenser light reveals much that we knew not before. Sin is not judged according to our consciousness of its workings, but by God's; not by our shallow experience of daily shortcoming, but by God's estimate as He looks on our defiled, corrupt nature. Sin is missing the mark: coming short of the glory as it outshines in Christ.

Again, as in fellowship with God we learn something of that wondrous sight before which prophet and apostle alike fell at his feet as dead, should not the sense of what holiness really is lay us in the dust before Him? If we could confer about God's Holy One, looking out on the broad expanse of his holiness and his glory, would it not profit us rather than going after holiness itself? Should we not grow, according to the irreversible spiritual law of 2 Cor. iii. 18, without measuring it?

LEEDS RAILWAY MEN.—The Letter and Packet Mission, started about eight years ago by the late Mrs. Cambie, has for its aim the spiritual welfare of the 4000 railway men in Leeds and its neighbourhood. The means used, and very richly owned and blessed of God, are monthly packets of Gospel papers and occasional letters, sent to the men in their homes. Any friends who will seek to point these men to the Lamb of God will be heartily welcomed if they will kindly apply to the hon. sec., Miss Ballard, Walton-on-Thames, Surrey.

"Hold the Pattern."

2 Tim. i. 13, R.V.

The article in our last, "Who are the Laity?" left some things unsaid which need to be remembered.

Clerical assumption is not confined to those who are usually denominated "the clergy." It is quite possible for clergymen to be very free from ecclesiastical and clerical assumption, and it is equally possible for those who are not known as such to lord it over God's heritage, while stoutly inveighing against clerical ascendancy. Flagrant instances of this sometimes occur in very small communities, which claim to be fundamentally opposed to it.

In the recently-published "Recollections of George Butler, by Josephine E. Butler"—one of the bravest women of the century, and one of the most cruelly persecuted for righteousness' sake—we find some instructive and inspiring paragraphs which may be appropriately quoted here. They are from one of Canon Butler's earlier letters:

If I should ever take orders I don't mean to be a mere parson, for if I were like some of them I know I should cease to be a man. I shall never wear straight waistcoats, long coats, and stiff collars! I think all dressing up and official manner are affectation, while great strictness in outward observances interferes with the devotion of the heart, and though it may indicate a pious spirit, and therefore deserves our respect, it shows, as I think, a misconception of the relation in which we stand to God, and of the duties we owe to man. It seems to me, after all, that being a good clergyman is much the same thing as being a good man.

We know many other clergymen who would be one with Canon Butler in the true conception, that the man is greater than his office; that "the laity" includes "the clergy"; that God's people—his laos—are his clēros, his inheritance—by virtue of the blood by which He redeemed them. Those whom the Son of his love loved and washed from their sins in his own blood, He might well make kings and priests unto his God and Father. "He who spared not his own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?"—even the covenant of an everlasting priesthood.

Although there is no precedent in God's pattern of his Church for such a division as clergy and laity, in which the first party claims and the second party concedes God's right to his own inheritance; yet there is in God's pattern, the body, ample scope for variety and degree of qualification. The gifts which the ascended Christ gave to men include apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers, workers of miracles, discerners of spirits, speakers with tongues, interpreters of tongues, gifts of healing, helps, governments. Here are the plenteous endowments of the Church which is his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all, and in all these worketh the one and the self-same Spirit, dividing to each one severally as He will.

The purpose for which these gifts are given is the perfecting of the saints, unto the work of ministering, unto the building up of the body of Christ; till we all attain unto the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a full-grown man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of the Christ (Eph. iv. 11, 13, R.V.). The express object of the gifts which the risen Jesus received for men, was to perfect every member of the body unto the work of ministering. Every member of the body is designed to fulfil its proper function, and the whole body must suffer if the smallest member fail of its Divine purpose.

But the members have transferred their privilege and their responsibility of ministering to an order of men called "the clergy" or "the ministry," who are expected to fulfil every function of the body, as though the manifold and diverse gifts of God had all been concentrated in them, thus imposing upon them a yoke which neither they nor their fathers have been able to bear, while the other members have become, for the most part, inactive and useless.

It is, indeed, according to God's pattern that they who preach the Gospel—whose lives are devoted to the Gospel—should live of the Gospel; and that they who minister spiritual things to others, should receive their carnal things; that those thus spiritually fed should minister generously to the necessities of their spiritual teachers; that some should rule and others should obey. But the exercise of evangelistic, or pastoral, or teaching, or governing gift, fails of its purpose, if it do not lead those ministered unto, themselves to minister to the building up of the body of Christ in love.

Although Moses made all things according to the pattern shown him in the Mount, Israel rejected the pattern, and worshipped the Baals, the Asherahs, and the Ashtoreths, in the high places of Canaanitish paganism, instead of worshipping God in the one place which He had chosen to set his name there. And although the Spirit of the Lord at times moved Barak and Gideon, Ehud and Shamgar, Samson and Jephthah, to deliver Israel, yet neither under their judges nor their kings could God outpour his Spirit without measure, so long as they set up their posts by his posts, and their thresholds by his thresholds, for a wall between Him and them.

Jesus came, and died, and rose, and ascended, and the infant Church, gathered with one accord in one place, glorified by their expectant faith the Christ whom the Father had glorified in Heaven. The day of Pentecost was fully come, seven Sabbaths were complete from the waving of the Sheaf of First-fruits—type of Christ the First-fruits of them that slept. In sevenfold fulness of faith-rest, unitedly concentrated on their risen Lord, the infant Church waited for the promise of the Father. Then, on the first day of the new week, the Spirit was given without measure; because the priestly prayer was answered, "That they all may be one, as Thou, Father, art in Me and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me"; and Judaism cried, "Ye have filled Jerusalem with your doctrine," and Heathenism replied, "The men that have turned the world upside down have come hither also."

But Ananias and Sapphira and the Grecian widows in Jerusalem grieved the Spirit; and those at Corinth who desired to magnify their favourite teachers made divisions, "for there must needs be sects among you, that those that are approved among you may be made manifest." From that day to this God's pattern has been violated, and Judaising teachings and Pagan superstitions have been mingled with the good Word of God. Therefore, while there have been revivals from time to time, as of old under the judges and the good kings of Judah, they have not been permanent, nor could they be, because the outcome of every great revival has been some new sect, instead of a return to God's perfect pattern, that of a body growing up in all things into Him, who is the Head, even Christ, from whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love.

The prophecy of the last high priest of dying Judaism, that Jesus should die for the nation, and not for the nation only, but that also He should gather together in one the children of God that are scattered abroad has a deep significance in these last times. For Ezekiel's vision is beginning to be fulfilled. The dry bones of God's twelve tribes are hearing the word of the Lord: "Behold, I will cause breath to enter into you, and ye shall live." And if in the scattered nation there is a noise and behold a shaking, and the bones come together, bone to his bone, shall not the other and larger result of Jesus' death be brought to pass, "that He should gather together in one the children of God that are scattered abroad"?

In the nature of things, the disintegrated members of an organised body can only be reunited according to the original pattern. Physiologists understand this so well that when they find a bone of an extinct animal they can make out a plan of the entire structure, with its habits and the climate for which it was fitted. In Ezekiel's vision of the approaching revival of the Scattered Nation "bone came to his bone"; or, as the LXX. has it, "the bones approached each one to his joint." Only thus can the Great Revival, the Great Reunion of the Church take place: Christ the Head, and every member ministering in its appointed function to the building up of the body of the Christ.

In reference to this, another quotation from "George Butler" may be given:—

You have heard me speak of objections that I feel to certain portions of our Church Service. If these weighed very strongly with me they would drive me out of the Church altogether; but when I look around, where do I see any body of Christians any system on earth, by whomsoever instituted, which is exempt from flaws, the patient endurance of which is a part of the discipline assigned to good men here below. I am sure Mary, who sat at the feet of Jesus, would have been puzzled by the reading over to her of the Athanasian Creed, and the injunction to accept it all on the peril of the loss of her soul: but she understood what Jesus meant when He said, "One thing is needful," and her knowledge of Him was enough to enable her to choose the better part.

We think the Apostle would have said with regard to Church relationships, "Let every one abide in the calling wherein he is called, so long as he can therein abide with God."

In no captious spirit have this and the previous articles, "Measure the Pattern," and "Who are the Laity?" been written, but in full accord with the article embodying "Mr. Moody's Parting Words." For assuredly union is possible only as the Spirit is the agent of it, and the Spirit can only act on the lines of God's immutable and perfect pattern.

What, then, can be done by us to promote union? We can measure and hold the pattern, and cry to God, "Wilt Thou not revive us again, that Thy people may rejoice in Thee?" And He will work, and who shall hinder? "Is anything too hard for the Lord," our covenant-keeping God?

LADY RADSTOCK.—During the last fortnight Lady Radstock has seemed more than once to be near the time of departure, yet on Monday she was a shade stronger. Often suffering and intensely weak, but latterly more free from suffering. Lord Radstock writes:—"The loving fellowship of so many of his dear children has been most precious, for we feel it is the love of the Head manifested by the members."

THREE SUCCESSIVE DAYS.—Joshua v. 10.

ɴ one of his sonnets, Matthew Arnold tells of an ɾview he had on a day of fierce August sunshine, Ɔethnal Green, with a preacher whom he knew, who looked ill and overworked. In answer to enquiry as to how he fared, Bravely!" said he; "for I of late have been ɔh cheered with thoughts of Christ, the Living ɯd." He is not the only human soul, who, above ebb and flow of London storm and tumult, has up a mark of everlasting light to cheer, and to t its course through the night. For holy souls e ever loved to meditate upon that wonderful er which they possess, of absorbing into themes the very nature of Him, who though he were Everlasting Son of the Father, became man, the forces of Deity might through Him pass out hose who love Him.

here is a great difference between the strength ɔh may be supplied from without, and that which similated within. To illustrate the first. We tread Cathedral close and examine the mighty buttresses steady the ancient walls. What though the ɪ embowed roof presses on them with all its ght to make them bulge, they may not stir an from the perpendicular, so long as those masses ɔone, built up without, forbid. To illustrate the nd. We must visit the forest glade, where giant withstand the blasts of centuries, because they e incorporated into their hearts the properties of h and air, becoming robust, and sturdy, and m-defying.

here are many ways in which the holy soul ves strength from without. It is buttressed by ɔnstrances and appeals, by providences and proɔs, by the fear of causing grief, and by the ɔement of passionate devotion. But if these all they would be insufficient. We need to be ngthened from within, to have within ourselves strong Son of God; to know that the Mightiest ithin us, and working through us, so that we, as He, can do all things.

ɪ this old record we may discover without effort Living Bread under three aspects, the Passover; ɔorn of the land; the manna. Each of these umed one of three successive days.

ʜᴇ Passover (v. 10).—The Passover itself could r be repeated; once for all it lay back in the ɪry of Israel, as a fundamental fact. Only once Angel, bent on slaying the firstborn; only once slain lamb and sprinkled blood; only once the lus in the grey dawn of history. But the feast ıe Passover, held in commemoration of that t, was destined to perpetual repetition until it ld give place to a yet more significant symbol, h, in turn, is to fade into the marriage supper, ıe love of betrothal fades into that of marriage, moonlight into dawn.
